THE Film DAILY

A BIG PICTURE LOADED WITH SUSPENSE, ACTION AND EMOTION, WITH CAGNEY AT HIS BEST, WILL CLICK AT ANY BOX OFFICE.

Every once in a while a picture comes along that just grips and holds you; "Ceiling Zero" does that. It is one of those big pictures that lingers with you, one that you make it a point to see. When good pictures are considered, this one deserves plenty of consideration. From the motion picture palaces down to the shooting galleries it's box-office. Loaded with suspense, intense drama, sentiment, comedy, and a story that really carries a punch, it can't miss. Even though Cagney plays one of the wise guy types, his role is toned down to a more regular state. Instead there is a more serious feeling, and instead of the appeal being limited to the action houses and dates, this one can play anywhere. "Ceiling Zero" reminds one of some of the big war pictures except that the foe is weather obstacles. Cagney and O'Brien play the leading roles with a sincerity that makes for reality. Stuart Erwin carries most of the comedy. Frank Wead wrote the stage success of the same title and he also did the screenplay. The picture speaks for his work. Howard Hawks deserves the highest of praise for producing and directing a piece of work that grips one as this picture does.

ATKINSON AND WATTS or WHO CARES?

THE curse of writing is the rewrite. Writers more than another working class are engaged in that production method which Mark Twain attributed to the South Sea Islanders, "who make their living by taking in each other's washing." And among writers the most profoundly addicted to rewriting are the editorial writers.

This editorial is a rewrite of a rewrite, each done with the customary variations.

It started with Mr. G. A. Atkinson, facile, able editor of "The Era" of London, an amusement industry publication, with remarks set down about "Mutiny on the Bounty," and secondly taken up by Mr. Richard Watts, the able taker-up of the New York Herald Tribune, at great length. Mr. Watts, to make his taking-up justify his two columns, observed: " 'The Era,' I can assure you, is not in the jingo tradition of Horatio Bottomley or an English William Randolph Hearst. But you should hear it talk about us'."

So far we can agree. Neither "The Era" nor Mr. Atkinson is to be ticketed with either Mr. Bottomley or Mr. Hearst. It would probably be a shade more accurate to say that the outlook of the "The Era" and its Mr. Atkinson is about as unprejudiced, just for instance, as that of the publishing enterprise conducted by Mr. Ogden Reid, president, and Helen Rogers Reid, vice-president, a concern known as New York Tribune, Inc. All in all, while Mr. Watts was going into the matter he might have said who controls "The Era" and why, or even how, so that the whole matter might have been more lucid, even if less exciting.

That brings us gradually to what it is all about.

We gather from Mr. Watts that he has found that Mr. Atkinson thinks Hollywood production has been pretty presumptuous and fresh and none too honest in intent in dealing with material involving English history. Mr. Watts says, in part:

"Permit me to quote Mr. Atkinson's publication on 'Mutiny on the Bounty.' After hinting that even 'The Barretts of Wimpole Street,' which was written by an Englishman but was made into a film by Hollywood, was an unfair assault on the sanctity of the Victorian family, 'The Era' proceeds: 'We must confess that we view with dismay this growing practice of picking on unsavory episodes or aspects of British history or of British families and advertising them to the world on a colossal scale. Doubtless the film will be amended for release in this country, in view of the complaint about screen sadism; but it is unfortunate, in our opinion, that the Bounty scandal should have been revived at a time when the British Navy and its prestige are so much in the public eye. . . . ' "

Mr. Watts sets up an ingenious and intricate defense to the effect that it is unsporting of the British not to see that Hollywood aimed well in its "historic charity" by clearing the British Navy of complicity in the cruelty of Captain Bligh.

It would mayhap have been a shade more germane to have pointed out that when Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, or Mr. Irving Thalberg, two years or such a matter ago, set out to make this picture, the British Navy and the British Foreign Office and the British Admiralty did not know that they were going to send the home fleet into the Mediterranean to get the pants scared off the admirals by Mussolini. Hollywood is not to be required to keep two years ahead of Geneva.

However, that is mere editorial folderol. Mr. Atkinson may be exercised, or his principals may want him to be exercised, but Britain as Britain does not have as low a boiling point as some of the folks in Wardour street and thereabouts.

The issues represented in all this persiflage of discussion do not represent traditions or concerns relating to Yorktown, Versailles, Geneva, or any such points in history. They pertain most exactly to issues in the merchandising of motion pictures, as motion pictures—and the lion is being dragged in by the tail.

The political implications of "Mutiny on the Bounty" are about as serious as would be a British version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." If Mr. Atkinson admitted that, and Mr. Watts agreed —this time might have been spent on the amusement business.

TITAN MEMORIES

RARE delight will be afforded many an observer of the motion picture scene at the announcement last Friday by Mr. David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, that a study of the capital structure of the concern is to be made by Mr. Joseph P. Kennedy, former chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The special competency of Mr. Kennedy for just such a study is readily to be recognized, and one may fancy that he will be having a glorious adventure on the inside of one of the most iridescent spheres of the bubble blowing era of "before '29."

But the chuckle at the moment comes from recalling how little appetite the same Mr. Sarnoff had for the notions, plans and designs of the same Mr. Kennedy about the autumn of 1928, with particular respect to the structure and contemplated operations of R.C.A. Photophone. RCA was not listening to motion picture ideas in those days. It was telling the world, getting "titanic."

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Warner Round

Warner Brothers' venture into the business of licensing performing rights to its music brought a speedy response when by Tuesday 143 independent and network stations had accepted a revised contract. Thus Warner sets up its own agency, independently of ASCAP.

The same stations have received offers from ASCAP to extend present contractural terms for five years, continuing the arrangement which expired December 31.

Exhibitors will be assessed a music tax by Warner, at least for the time being, and the Exhibitors' Emergency Committee in New York, apprehensive about a dual tax, is preparing a protest.

The situation promises to make the new year a lively one in the motion picture, radio and music industries. There were many developments in the week; all are chronicled in the story starting on page 27.

Cheerio

Forty-two of the top notch leaders in motion pictures, in their customary year-end observations of potential industry progress, are of an almost unanimous opinion that the business will build considerably upon the gains made in 1935, and that the public is ready to accept as definite motion picture entertainment the higher type of product that has been forthcoming in the past year from Hollywood.

Further use of color is expected in 1936, and many hope for a curtailment of double featuring and chance games as regular theatre policies. The opinions of these 42 leaders as to what lies ahead for the industry in the new year are expressed on page 40.

Allied Problems

Allied State's annual convention will be held in Washington on February 4th and 5th in conjunction with the meeting of eastern directors on February 3rd at Baltimore and the Allied "product committee" at Washington on February 6th. It is probable that the Washington sessions will be held at the Carlton Hotel.

Abram F. Myers, chairman, from headquarters at Washington, notified state affiliates Tuesday that it is necessary that each affiliated association notify his office in advance of the meeting of the person specifically designated to represent and vote for such affiliate.

"By February 4th," observed Mr. Myers, "Congress will have been in session one month, its committee will have been organized, and a report can be made on the status and prospects of the Pettengill-Neely Bill and the Duffy copyright bill. It is probable," Mr. Myers believes, "that both will be ripe for some intensive work by the boys from home. It is hoped—and urged—that each member association send, in addition to its duly authorized director, a small delegation of men who will (1) lend their advice and counsel to the end that the board of directors may be fully and properly advised and will (2) visit their congressmen and senators in the interest of Allied's legislation program."

"There is considerable agitation in exhibitor circles," reported Mr. Myers, "against the prevailing practice among distributors of selling more pictures than they intend to make, allocating all pictures delivered to the higher classifications, and thus increasing the average price per picture far above what the exhibitor thought he was going to pay. This is," in Mr. Myers' opinion, "a species of dishonesty which would not be tolerated in any other country and would be properly stamped out if the motion picture industry had the proper leadership. Mr. Hays should be the first to condemn this common form of cheating and demand that, for the honor of the industry, it be stopped," he said.

Film Victory

Motion pictures and theatres in Atlanta are the only subjects to escape a ban effected by all of that city's newspapers against further publication of pictures and "free" publicity, and affecting virtually all other forms of entertainment and merchandise. The exclusion was a signal victory for the film. See page 16.

Payroll Tax Rules

Of considerable interest to every theatre, distributor and producer employer of eight persons or more are the regulations, announced this week by the United States Government, covering the tax on payrolls that is provided by the new Social Security Act for unemployment compensation and for pensions.

The taxation program, effective this week, will cost American employers, including those in the motion picture business, hundreds of millions of dollars. See page 52.

Stock Gains

Motion picture stocks gained $162,862,375 in value in 1935, increasing from a combined valuation of $402,973,125 to $565,835,500.

Film issues during the year were among the best performers on the New York Stock Exchange, leading all other industrial groups on many occasions. Increases ranged up to the 48½ point increase made by Keith-Albee-Orpheum preferred. The stock performances of film shares in 1935, compared with the previous four years, are reported on page 17.

Subsidy—Again

Federal subsidization of the theatre is seen by Hallie Flanagan, national director of the WPA theatre project, and others as an outgrowth of the present ambitious program which makes the United States Government a producer with a $7,000,000 bankroll.

She also hints that a motion picture production project may be undertaken in Hollywood as part of the federal theatre plans. A motion picture division for 129 CCC camps in New York state is already under way.

With nearly 6,000 professional theatre workers announced as on the payroll, the project in New York is now scheduled to start February 1, with the remainder of the country watching the metropolis for guidance. Many developments in the WPA theatre program are recounted in the story starting on page 35.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Fighting 'Doubles'

With the announced objective of "fighting it out on that line if it takes all winter," and the rest of the new year as well, the Motion Picture Council for Brooklyn, N. Y., has launched a determined campaign against double features.

The initial move was to question all members of the Council as to their own reaction, and to urge them to make known their sentiment through conferences with local managers and through the news columns, letter boxes and editorial pages of the newspapers. Already generous publicity is being given to the move, reports The Motion Picture and the Family, publication of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

The definite points upon which the Council is basing its appeal that the double feature be abolished are:

1. That the program is too long.
2. That short subjects often have to be omitted.
3. That as bills are at present arranged it is almost impossible to arrive in the theatre at the beginning of a picture.
4. That an inferior picture is often booked with a good one, or sometimes two inferior pictures together.

Critics' Choice

"The Informer," RKO Radio film, was voted the best picture of 1935 by the newly organized group known as The New York Film Critics.

The balloting, held at the home of Regina crewe, critic of the New York American, Monday night, resulted also in these first annual awards:

Best male performance—Charles Laughton in "Mutiny on the Bounty" (MGM) and "Ruggles of Red Gap" (Paramount).

Best feminine performance—Greta Garbo in "Anna Karenina" (MGM).

Best direction—John Ford, with "The Informer".

The critics gave "The Informer" first film honors by a unanimous vote on the first ballot. In the case of the best feminine performance, Katharine Hepburn received a minority vote for her performance in "Alice Adams" (RKO Radio). Alfred Hitchcock's direction of "The Thirty-Nine Steps" and "The Man Who Knew Too Much" (both GB) received minority recognition.

"The Informer" will receive a gold medal, and it has not been decided whether to award it to the company or the producer. The other first winners will be presented scrolls.

At the request of the publishing house of Covici-Friede, the critics recommended for publication in book form "The Scoundrel" as the most readable script. This is an original screen story by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur, who also produced the film for Paramount.

Time and place of the formal presentations, if any, are to be determined.

The critics voting were: Regina Crewe, American; Bland Johaneson, Mirror; Kate Cameron, News; Richard Watts Jr., Herald-Tribune; Leo Mishkin, Morning Telegraph; André Sennwald, Times; Thornton Delehanty, Post; Rose Pelswick, Journal; William Boehnel, World-Telegram; Martin Dickstein, Brooklyn Eagle; Seymour Roman, Brooklyn Times-Union.

The Sun was not represented, its critic, Eileen Creelman, having resigned last week. Noel Busch, of Time magazine, while a member of the group, did not join in the canvass.

Television Test

Radio Corporation of America "will bring television out of the laboratory next year for the first comprehensive, experimental field test in America," David Sarnoff, president, announced Saturday in a year-end statement.

"We are planning ahead," said Mr. Sarnoff, "bearing the expense of the test of our laboratory achievements under actual field conditions, so that when television is finally introduced on a commercial basis, the public shall not be disappointed."

Partner Stays

Paramount will not exercise the buy-back privilege of the Hoblitzelle Interstate circuit operating agreement which expired this week, it was said authoritatively at Paramount Monday. Failure to exercise the buy back provision automatically continues Karl Hoblitzelle as a full operating partner of the southwest circuit of approximately 80 houses.

The buy back provision was incorporated in many of the partnership agreements made by the Paramount trustees with circuit operators during 1934. It provided that at certain times and under certain conditions Paramount would be permitted to purchase from the operating partners the stock interest held by them in the circuits in which they were placed in charge. Thus far none of the buy back privileges has been exercised. The Hoblitzelle circuit was one of the largest and most important of the Paramount theatre subsidiaries to have the buy back provision included in the operating agreement.

Kennedy and RCA

Joseph P. Kennedy this week was retained by the Radio Corporation of America to study the financial structure with a view to arriving at a plan of recapitalization.

At the same time Merlin Hall Aylesworth resigned as president of RCA's National Broadcasting Company to devote more time to his duties as board chairman of RKO Pictures. He was succeeded by Lenox Riley Lohr, Chicago World's Fair manager.

The significance of these moves in the RCA system and a report on the corporation's financial aspects are discussed on page 31.

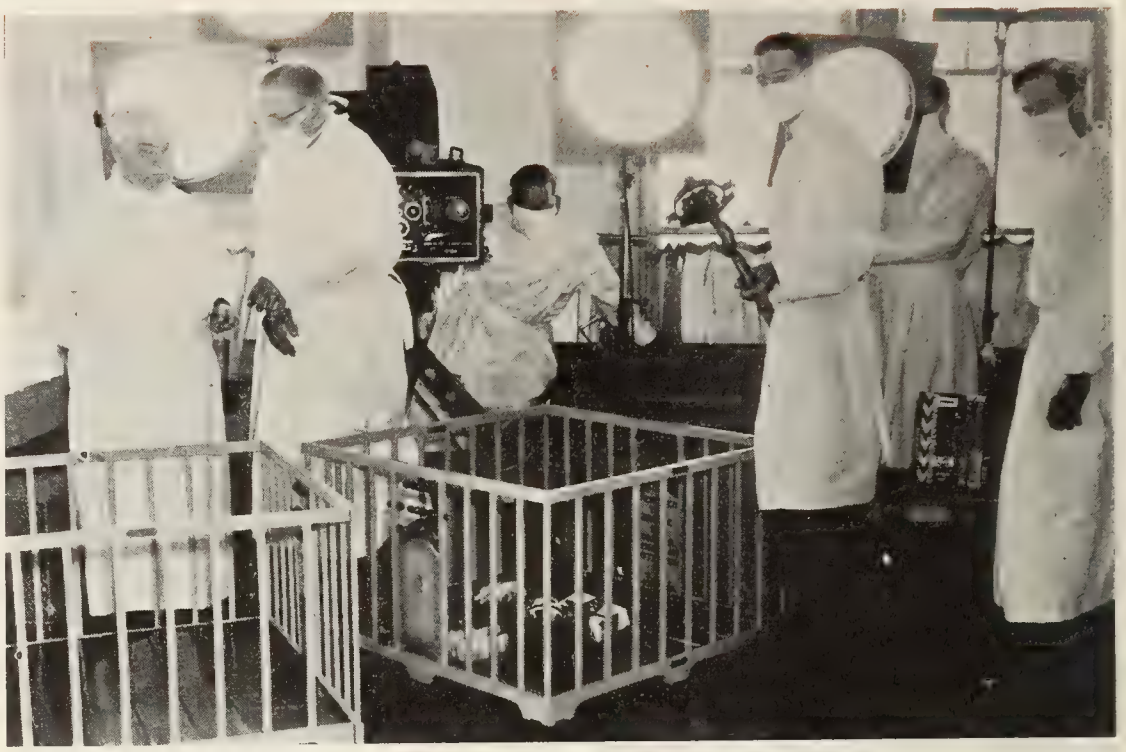
Use Spanish

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER
Barcelona Correspondent

Artistas Asociados, (United Artists), newest of the Spanish branch entities of American producing companies, is developing widespread exploitation operations throughout the Peninsula for its latest dubbed releases, "The Dark Angel" and "Barbary Coast", both Sam Goldwyn pictures. Both will be January releases.

At the local Spanish studios of Trilla y La Riva, in the Montjuich Exposition Grounds, "Noche Nupcial" ('Wedding Night') is being dubbed with actors of the Spanish stage substituting for the dialogue allotted in the original Spanish version to Gary Cooper and Anna Sten.

Roberto Trillo, managing director of Radio Films, S. A. E., was honored at a testimonial banquet in the picturesque Taberna Vasca in Barcelona on the occasion of the first anniversary of the formation and establishment of that branch unit for Spain of the parent American Radio Films organization. There were no formal addresses, but Antonio Blanco, sales manager, in a brief speech paid tribute to the popular Mexican executive and proposed the toast.



Two Units

Despite merger moves among the independent exhibitors of the Philadelphia territory which were climaxed recently with the first meeting and election of officers of the newly formed Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, South Jersey and Delaware, two exhibitor bodies will continue. Lewen Pizor, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners unit, said definitely that his group would stay in existence regardless of the new group.

INTO PRODUCTION. With sets occupying almost three-fourths of the seven acres of studio space on the lot, Universal has started shooting "Show Boat." Irene Dunne stands at the rail listening while Paul Robeson, noted Negro bass, sings "Ol' Man River," one of the highlights of the production, which previously has been made on both stage and screen.

HOW IT'S DONE. H. G. Wells, British author, now visiting Hollywood, on the set where Paramount just finished shooting "Give Us This Night." With him are Gladys Swarthout, starred with Jan Kiepura, and Alexander Hall, the director.

ROMANCE. Marlene Dietrich's latest completed vehicle, "Desire," has Gary Cooper playing opposite the romantic star. Frank Borzage directed the production of Paramount. Miss Dietrich and Cooper played together in "Morocco" in 1930.

RENEWING ACQUAINTANCE. Sam E. Morris, Warner vice-president, is said to have been partly responsible for the screen test given Errol Flynn (left) in London, which brought him the title role in the new "Captain Blood." (Cosmo-Sileo photo)

KILTS AND COMEDY. Robert Donat plays two roles, one of them a phantom, in Alexander Korda's "The Ghost Goes West," London Film production which United Artists is distributing in America. Here he is with Jean Parker. The production has its premiere at the Rivoli in New York January 8th. A "Showman's Review" from London appears elsewhere in this issue.

CELEBRATING IN SPAIN. Film executives met at a gala dinner and dance of the American Club of Barcelona in the sala de fiestas of the Hotel Ritz. The Mayflower motif was carried out in the decorations, tables being designated by Colonies.

WESTERN. Jim Thorpe, Indian athlete, and Monte Blue as a cavalry officer on location for Warner's "Treachery Rides the Range." Thorpe has doffed his redskin wig.

JOINS "HOBOES." Mayor J. C. Quin (left) of San Antonio is presented with a membership in the Hoboes of America, International Itinerant Workers Union, by Eph Charninsky, manager of the Palace theatre, playing GB's "Mister Hobo."

REMINISCENT of "The Singing Fool" is this shot of Al Jolson and Sybil Jason who appear in "The Singing Kid" for Warner. Sybil has just had her seventh birthday.

HOLLYWOOD REACHING FOR ACTUAL CONTROL OF FILM BUSINESS

by TERRY RAMSAYE
in Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD believes that it is boss. Also it has and is making evidences to support the contention.

Hollywood sees an international era of development and is making its own international arrangements, contact, deals.

International in the picture business today means substantially between the United States and the British Empire. The rest of the world is by-product territory.

Hollywood therefore thinks more of London than New York.

Hollywood today tends to consider New York as the counting house from which checks for production are forwarded, and where some of the details of selling are handled—not as well as Hollywood thinks they should be.

It is the old, somewhat personalized, conflict between production and distribution, with production increasingly aware of its basic importance and powers.

IT'S INDIVIDUAL PRODUCTION NOW

The industry began with production dominant and with distribution its inefficient, unorganized servant. Discipline came to the industry with the Patents Company and the efficiencies of its General Film Company, distribution arm. Distribution had its great day, with distribution chieftains from Jeremiah J. Kennedy to Adolph Zukor the masters of the industry. Hollywood was just the factory community. New York was boss.

Since the day that sound came to bring Babel confusion to the art the motion picture business has become more and more a concern of the individual production, each picture a business and an enterprise in itself, thus minimizing, canceling out the program-flow idea which suited and fitted so well into sales routines.

Steadily since the rise of sound there has been a relative enhancement of the status of Hollywood executive figures. More and more the routine concerns of New York executives have been taking them back and forth across the continent, and more and more often the Hollywood personages journey back and forth to New York on executive errands, banker conferences, direct financing deals. Chicago and Kansas City airports and railway stations have become platforms of announcement from journeying executives.

DYNASTIES RULING ASSERTIVE HOLLYWOOD

And this assertive Hollywood is ruled by dynasties, variously federated, variously engaged in internal rivalries, but in the main united against "the otherwhere," including New York.

In the days when Distribution was supreme the greatest concentration of authority and power was in Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation and in the office and personage of Adolph Zukor, in New York.

Today with Production assuming ascendancy, that concentration of power and authority is a fourth dimensional spot in space suspended somewhere between the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio and the 20th Century-Fox lot, with lateral bearing and spheres of influence extending toward or from United Artists. It is a curved, Einsteinian sort of space and the political mathematics of the time do not permit the placing of a pencil on the precise spot, but it is in Hollywood.

Meanwhile, and incidentally, it is of interest to observe that just as once upon a time William Fox operated a movie kingdom of his own, in the days when Winfield Sheehan was his field marshal, an independent kingdom indeed, so today does the Warner establishment, almost equally sharply self-contained, pursue an individual course and policy, exerting the while its own influences, as a factor ever to be considered on the big chess board.

THE PERSONALITIES IN SEAT OF POWER

Surrounding that hypothetically located but none the less real center of authority in Production's new position of authority, at the angles of the unresolved polygon of power are several personalities, who hold somewhere between them the equivalent of the Zukor seat of the pre-sound era. They are, first, Louis B. Mayer of M-G-M, and right immediately thereafter, and today not so much after, is Joseph M. Schenck, just rocketed into a foremost position by the spectacular stroke of the 20th Century-Fox deal, with his spectacularly presented production chief Darryl Zanuck supplementing the ornamental aspects of the Chase National Bank. Meanwhile M-G-M's production leader continues to be Irving Thalberg, who is known by his works on and for the screen, but who the while is most considerably aware of the political and financial aspects of the industry. He is currently reported to be the largest single stockholder in the M-G-M picture making concern. Another most pictorially minded young man of collateral significance in the scene is David Selznick, who, not entirely pleased it would appear with the role of being Mr. Mayer's son-in-law-on-the-lot, is making "Little Lord Fauntleroy" for United Artists release, with his "David Copperfield" and now "A Tale of Two Cities" contributing vastly to his fame and build-up, with able M-G-M exploitation behind them, and continuing. Young Mr. Selznick's presence inside the United Artists tent may be considered evidence at least toward an assumption that that sector will stand up and be counted in any voting for the central dynastic plan of Hollywood control, national or international.

United Artists may not be so especially united all the while, but it consists of the still ambitious Miss Mary Pickford, the nonchalant, independent and world-minded Charles Chaplin, and the indefatigably able and alert Samuel Goldwyn, who will ever fight like the very devil for what he wants, but never lets the fighting get outside the reservation.

It may be observed that while United Artists lost, or shall we say was intrigued into dispensing with, the extremely effective Alexander Lichtman, he was not lost to or permitted to escape from the service of the dynastic polygon of power. Also the indications are that the scenario of his readjustment to the picture is still being written, with surprise sequences ahead.

Meanwhile the Chase National is not the only bank with concerns about the movies, even if it has had most of the publicity of late.

The course and plans of the Hollywood dynastic group, with respect to each other and as a unit with respect to the external world, are concerned not a little about what may eventuate in such quarters as Paramount and RKO—not so much about the state of affairs of the moment as for the impending tomorrow.

In Paramount the dauntless Adolph Zukor still obtains. Years of experience have taught that when he is quiet and meek is a very good time to be aware. And newly come to the Paramount picture is the cool, reserved John Otterson, said to be rather pleased with the publicity that he has not had, making him more than ever the complete enigma to Hollywood. Regardless of what the underlying facts are, or their avowals, Hollywood and its polygon of power internally admits concern about a name that implies the might, the policies, the special disciplines and methods of the Telephone Company, a system of administration marked by its glacial speed—and glacial irresistibility.

Then there is RKO and that Atlas-Odlum picture, not a very serious concern in the eyes of the Polygon with reference to immediate operations, but seen as a possible salient from which any number of sallies might be made, if, as and when, also and/or.

THE AGENTS' WAR NEVER FOUGHT

Just by way of a very minor index to the current play, it is to be observed that there is much dust in the air currently in Hollywood about a great war impending between the studios and the agents. That's an old war, never fought, and the while heavy restrictions controlling the activities of agents on the lot have been, for the moment anyway, put in effect at Paramount and RKO. But in contrast the same agents appear, at least appear, to have the run of the lot at M-G-M and 20th Century - Fox, and elsewhere over in the Polygon.

It all goes together like a jig-saw puzzle—eventually. There has been the while much talk, mostly eastern talk, of "a General Motors structure for the industry."

This seemed an appropriate matter to discuss with Joseph M. Schenck where he sits between telephones in the gardened executive office row of the 20th Century-Fox studios, where the Mexican doves coo in the palms of the Oriental oasis city that Winfield Sheehan built.

Hollywood . . . thinks more of London than of New York.

Since . . . sound, the motion picture business has become more and more a concern of individual production . . . cancelling out the program-flow which suited and fitted so well into sales routines.

And this assertive Hollywood is ruled by dynasties, variously federated, variously engaged in internal rivalries, but in the main united against "the otherwhere", including New York.

Several personalities . . . hold somewhere between them the equivalent of the Zukor seat of the presound era.

Also there is no reason to assume that all the moves on the big chess board have yet been made. The game never stops.

From TERRY RAMSAYE'S Article on Hollywood

The General Motors idea seemed to be not a little less than zero in Mr. Schenck's opinion. He says that the business is made of pictures and that pictures are made by the production boss, with well defined limits of how many.

"If you merge two big companies you do not get the sum total of their separate capacities," he observed. "If you put two big companies together you might get say six more pictures that count, not sixty.

IT'S ALL UP TO PRODUCTION CHIEF

"There is somthing about it that bankers and industrially minded people do not understand. It is not like putting together plants to make so many yards of carpet. It is all up to a production chief and what he can get out of a group of workers, who work for him. He has to be boss and he has to know all of the answers, all the time. They work for him and they do what he tells them—that's all.

"Volume calculations in merger plans will not work out.

"And the problems are all special to this business. It is a different business, because it is all made of people, and the way people act and think."

"For instance," Mr. Schenck interposed between telephone calls, "what would you think that an executive from the banking industrial field would do with a problem that is right here on my desk now? One of our important stars has a 'stand-in' that he's very fond of. This 'stand-in' gets fifty dollars a week for going on the set while they adjust the lights and focus the cameras. The star wants us to raise the 'stand-in' to $150 a week and give him a five-year contract for the same period as the star has. That runs into money for the term of the contract, also it involves a precedent. Now what do you suppose the answer would be for a good general industrial executive? In the first place he would probably be so organized that such a thing would never get to his desk—and if it did he'd call in the cause of the disturbance and say, 'You're nuts—get out of here.'

CAN'T BE ORGANIZED INTO LARGE UNITS

"That probably would be the answer in general industry. It isn't here—because, you see, there's all the background of the importance of the box office value of that star and his work, and work that he has to do in a satisfied state of mind, and for a long period to consider."

"So," observed Mr. Schenck, "I'll not tell them to get out—I'll make a deal—in behalf of the business and the product.

"But you can not organize into large units any business that has to operate like that."

This of course supports the theory of operations and the producer-stardom of Mr. Zanuck with which Mr. Schenck moved into the Chase-Fox picture.

Meanwhile there is no question about who is boss on the 20th Century-Fox lot.

Also there is no reason to assume that all of the moves on the big chess board have yet been made. The game never stops.

Up-stairs in executive row Michael Balcon, who means Ostrer and Gaumont-British, over from London, was busied with plans and casting for productions over there, a program that also has its impingements on the Polygon of Power in its international aspects.

SEEING AN INDIAN BEHIND EACH TREE

Dark, sharp, alert Mr. Balcon was happy at the moment with the thought that under the auspices of current trends in international relations there was prospect that substantial production of an international character would sweep away the makeshift "quota" pictures, which by reason of their origin in England brought down the level of British production in the eyes of the British public.

Flitting from tea-to-tea in Hollywood and taking notes the while was H. G. Wells, just a mere script writer for London's

MANY INTRICATE PLAYS FOR POWER

Alexander Korda, but doing on the whole rather well as an ambassador of the British influence, casual and impressive in his modesty. With all Hollywood much aware that he was present—the fluttering playfolks impressed, the bosses who can see an Indian behind every tree, speculating.

The plays for power, within and outside the Polygon, are many, continuous, intricate. Just for instance, you may remember not so very long ago there was some twittering in the press about Jim Farley, boxing commissioner, postmaster general and such, also connected with the national administration, it is said, being in line for a big job in the movies.

It seems that somewhere in the geometry of the situation there were those, or there was him, or which, who thought that it would be a considerable enhancement of power to acquire The Farley. Once upon a time Louis B. Mayer added considerably to his power and kudos by his friendship with Herbert Hoover and a certain degree of "in" with that slightly Republican administration. Hollywood and Hollywood's men are imitative, so the Farley idea seemed for the moment immense.

Just about that time, or a little after it, to be poisonously accurate, you will remember, Motion Picture Daily broke a highly exclusive story about a very new five-year contract of the organized motion picture industry with Will Hays.

That seems to have been that—although there were those in Hollywood who thought it was a good idea at the time.

Friendship with Mr. Farley does not appear, however, to have been exactly broken off, sharply. There are international affairs to be considered, with a border right south of Hollywood, and interesting affairs down there in the desert to be considered, to say nothing of the considerable array of Mexican politics that are played in the relative safety of the Los Angeles zone.

Meanwhile one must not forget, as Hollywood can not, that there is somewhere in the offing one Winfield Sheehan, the one time iron boss of the Fox lot, still poised somewhere over the scene. He is the sort who likes to be "head man," too. Someway Hollywood is aware that while Mr. Sheehan was honeymooning, but not mooning, in Europe there was no little promulgation, to bankers, the press and all and sundry, of the excellence of his unquestionable record as the producer of hit pictures. Somebody was busy telling the cockeyed world about Mr. Sheehan, and Hollywood thinks it was to some purpose.

For the moment Mr. Sheehan has been figured out of the Polygon—but that was never the sort of situation to deter the New York World's most famous police reporter.

Whatever may be the Sheehan program, it will be Hollywood.

It seems that the big game of the motion picture industry is to be played in the Rose Bowl.

Music Hall Deal By RKO and RCA

A two months' extension of the agreement under which Radio-Keith-Orpheum and Radio Corporation of America are given a participation in operating profits of the Music Hall theatre in New York was completed this week and was approved by Federal Judge William Bondy. The current agreement expires December 31 and the extension continues the arrangement to February 29.

Under the agreement, which originated on September 1, 1934, when Rockefeller Center and RCA took over the Music Hall lease from RKO and assumed the operating management, RKO and RCA jointly receive $500 per week from the initial operating profits of the Music Hall. An initial rent participation of $700,000 per year next is paid to Rockefeller Center, after which a second joint payment of $24,000 per year is made to RKO and RCA, which is applied to retirement of RCA's advances of working capital for the Music Hall made during 1933 while it was being operated by RKO. Thereafter, Rockefeller Center is entitled to an additional $100,000 as rent. If funds then remain over operating costs, a first $200,000 is divided on the basis of 60 per cent to Rockefeller Center and 40 per cent to RKO and RCA, and a second $200,000 would be divided 50 per cent to Rockefeller Center and 50 per cent to RKO and RCA.

RKO does not participate in the leasing or operating of the hall and thus has no obligation in the event of operating losses.

A separate agreement under which RKO Service Corp. performs certain management functions for the Music Hall for a weekly fee based upon a percentage of average gross receipts of the house also expires December 31. An extension of this agreement to August 31, 1936, rather than for a six months' period, is being proposed for court approval.

JUDGE SEES BOOKS AID CHILD'S FILM TASTES

The reading of good books affects the interests of children in the motion pictures they see, said Judge Jacob Panken in the Bronx, N. Y., children's court this week, in discussing the work of the court.

He explained that each child brought before him was questioned concerning his interests and then received several books on which to make a report. Among the books on the judge's list are "A Tale of Two Cities," "The Last Days of Pompeii" and "David Copperfield." Many of the children reading these books have expressed a desire to see the films based on them, he said.

Louis Sagal Dies; With Poli Circuit

Louis Sagal, 62, connected with the Poli interests for the last 35 years, and general manager of the Poli New England circuit, operated by Loew's, died at Branford, Conn., Monday, after a short siege of pneumonia. Mr. Sagal came to this country from Russia at the age of 17 and became associated with Sylvester Z. Poli, doing theatre program advertising. He later was Mr. Poli's right hand man.

Colvin Brown Returns

Colvin Brown, vice-president and general manager of Quigley Publications, returned to his desk Saturday after three weeks in Hollywood and Christmas with relatives in Chicago and Elgin, Ill.

Radio Technics Advance in Year

Technical progress in radio in the past year, as announced by O. B. Hanson, chief engineer of National Broadcasting Company, included, as revealed this week, the sending of an "invisible NBC control man" aloft with a stratosphere balloon, in the form of a device for automatic "gain control" while the balloonists chatted with officials on the ground 74,000 feet below.

Advancement also was recorded in the fields of directional broadcasting, improved ultra-short wave field equipment, new studio installations, reference recording, modernization of apparatus, studio lighting and experimental television.

A development for the new year is the decision of NBC to open a second coast-to-coast network to expand service to the Pacific Coast listeners. Five Coast stations in the network are KECA in Los Angeles, KGO in San Francisco, KEX at Portland, KJR in Seattle and KGA, Spokane. These and KFSD of San Diego are to be in the new NBC Pacific Blue Network headed by key station WJZ in New York.

First Lumiere Film Set For Anniversary

Leading features of a two days' exhibition in London at the Polytechnic on February 20, celebrating the 40th anniversary of the first public film showing by Louis Lumiere, will be a reproduction of the actual program presented by Mr. Loew on February 20, 1896, in the same building.

Mr. Lumiere himself will be present and it is expected all trade bodies will cooperate to honor him as a pioneer.

ONLY FILMS ESCAPE BAN ON FREE NEWS SPACE

Atlanta Newspapers Exempt Motion Pictures Alone from Order to Protect Reader Interest

Recognition of motion picture theatre news as valuable newspaper copy is reflected this week in action taken by the press of Atlanta, in which theatre publicity was practically the only material not placed on a newspaper ban shutting out all other forms of press copy in a "no free puff" agreement effected by all local papers.

Atlanta's Constitution, Journal and the Georgian American have tightened up otherwise on free notices and publicity pictures but have left the city's theatres singularly free from the prohibition. They will continue to receive space benefits that no longer will be given to fashion shows, cooking schools, garden schools, beauty specialists, stores, real estate, special promotions, luncheons, entertainment of prominent people, receptions, general merchandise, robots and trick automobiles, state fairs, carnivals, auto races, dance contests, used cars, travel, resort and the like.

In effect the agreement, which is being rigidly enforced, bans the use of portrait cuts, when an executive or a popular clerk accepts a post with another company, places a ban on any type of free notices from companies which in the editors' opinion have no definite news angle, prohibits the use of more than three inches of space for wrestling matches prior to the event, and sets other like restrictions.

But there has been no effort to proscribe use of even advance publicity for the theatres of Atlanta.

This is due partly to the fact that each paper plays to the theatregoing public with syndicated stories daily of the activities of the studios and the stars as real news for its readers. Each paper carries a special theatre section each Sunday filled not only with doings of the local theatres but also with syndicated film stories from New York and Hollywood. Another significant angle is the fact that each newspaper has a larger space rate for theatre advertising than for any other type of ads, in some instances almost 100 per cent higher, and the business offices frankly say that this special high rate is made in order that free notices may be used in the news columns.

More than 1,200 advertisers in the Constitution, Georgian-American and Journal have received copies of an agreement which notifies all accounts of a militant stand to end a practice which "threatens the future interest of the public in the news columns" and tends to "weaken the value of the advertising columns."

Under the agreement, signed by Herbert Porter, publisher of the Georgian-American, John A. Brice, general manager of the Journal and Clark Howell, Jr., general manager of the Constitution, all three newspapers have discontinued the use of publicity stories and photos.

Mr. Howell, in reply to an Editor and Publisher inquiry, said that the three newspapers have received literally hundreds of letters from advertisers and agencies applauding the action taken in Atlanta.

Coincident with the letter to advertisers, staff members of the three newspapers received mimeographed instructions outlining in detail just where the news line leaves off and the publicity line begins. An amazing guide, this instruction sheet definitely bans "Business Office Must" stories and bars virtually every type of publicity story common to papers in this country.

The letter-agreement reads, in part:

"Reader interest, and therefore reader confidence, is the backbone of advertising value. Voluntary expressions from our readers who are in no wise connected with our business or yours, convince us that the unwarranted amount of so-called publicity which our newspapers have been carrying is beginning to undermine this confidence.

"Therefore, in the best interests of you and ourselves, effective immediately, we have decided to discontinue publicity stories and pictures, except in those instances where the subject discussed is one of such public interest that it would be deserving of comment in our newspapers without regard to advertising.

"Atlanta merchants have too big an investment in the advertising columns of these three Atlanta newspapers to place the pulling power of those advertising columns in jeopardy. Therefore we ask your wholehearted cooperation in this step, which we know to be of benefit to the merchants and newspapers alike."

Equity Suspends Heller After Stormy Meeting

George Heller, a member of the council of Actors' Equity Association, was suspended for 10 weeks by action of the council this week.

The charges of "conduct unbecoming a councilor of the association" grew out of the stormy conclusion of an Equity membership meeting December 20 in New York. That meeting was called to discuss the organization's attitude toward the federal theatre project.

Pathe Film Net Profit In Seven Weeks $5,609

Pathe Film Corporation and subsidiaries in report for seven weeks ended October 4, 1935, shows net profit of $5,609 after depreciation, interest, federal income taxes, minority interest, etc., equivalent to 70 cents a share on 8,043 shares of $7 cumulative convertible preferred stock. No dividends were received from du Pont Film Manufacturing Corporation during the period covered by this statement.

James V. Bryson Dies in London

Injuries suffered in an accident on Christmas Day were fatal to James V. Bryson, former Universal executive, who died of a fractured skull Tuesday in University College Hospital, London. He was 52.

Mr. Bryson was dealing in European films and had attempted studio deals in England since his unsuccessful suit against Universal for alleged wrongful dismissal in 1933.

Joining Mr. Laemmle in Minneapolis many years ago, Mr. Bryson had an important part in developing Universal's distribution system in the United States. Some years ago he was transferred to London as managing director of Universal Pictures, Ltd.

Collection of Sales Tax Begun in New York Area

Beginning January 1, exhibitors in the New York distribution area are paying a two per cent sales tax to exchanges, which have been assessed the levy by the city on film rentals.

Exhibitors in New Jersey and upstate New York, as well as those in the city limits, have received notice that the tax would be added to their billing.

The exchanges say the action is being taken as a "protective" measure and the funds collected from exhibitors would be segregated and refunded in event the distributors won their fight to have the tax on film rentals declared illegal. Meanwhile, New Jersey exhibitors are protesting.

Universal Campaign In Laemmle Observance

The 30th anniversary of Carl Laemmle's entry in the motion picture industry will be observed during 1936 with several events. One is a campaign in which prizes will be awarded exhibitors and managers for the best campaigns of exploitation, advertising and publicity on any Universal picture exhibited between January 6 and April 4.

Prize winners will be announced May 1 on campaigns postmarked before midnight, April 10.

Judges are P. D. Cochrane, Universal; A-Mike Vogel, Motion Picture Herald; Epes Sargent, Variety; Chick Lewis, Showmen's Trade Review; Lou Guimond, Box Office.

John Nolan Joins Comerford Circuit

John Nolan, formerly in charge of general operations for Fox in Australia, has joined Comerford Theatres, Inc., with headquarters at Scranton, Pa., and will probably spend most of his time there. The arrangement is for three months.

"Sanders" Wins Award

"Sanders of the River," London film production, distributed by United Artists, has been awarded the annual medal of the Institute of Amateur Cinematography, London, for the most significant picture of the year.

FILM STOCKS $162,862,375 HIGHER IN MARKET VALUE THAN YEAR AGO

Appreciations Range Up to a 48½ Point Increase of Keith - Albee - Orpheum Preferred; New Following Seen

by THE ANALYST

The value of principal motion picture shares listed on the New York Stock Exchange crossed the half-billion-dollar mark in 1935 in another upswing that was eloquent of the industry's continued climb from depression levels.

Many issues touched the best prices since pre-crash days. A dozen representative stocks rose to $565,835,500 in value from $402,973,125 at the end of 1934, a net appreciation of $162,862,375.

Increased box office receipts and strengthening of company financial structures through reorganizations attracted a new following to motion picture securities

As a result, the motion picture group was well in the front of the general advance that marked all industrial stock classifications. At times film shares set the pace on the stock exchange.

Honors for the biggest point gain for the year went to the comparatively inactive Keith-Albee-Orpheum preferred, which shot ahead to a gain of almost 60 points at a high price of 90⅛. It finished at around 80.

The volatile Eastman Kodak rose from a low of 110½ in January to a high of 172¼ in November and closed above 155 for a gain of 43 points. Warners common was the most active film stock on the "Big Board" with a turnover of almost 2,500,000 shares. It rose above 10 from a low of 2¼ and finished near the high with a net gain of almost 5 points.

Eastman Kodak chalked up the largest increase in market valuation, rising from $281,250,000 at the end of 1934 to $388,750,000, a net gain of $107,500,000.

Film company bonds on the stock exchange rose sharply with their relative stocks, gains ranging to 36¾ points in Radio-Keith-Orpheum 6s, due 1941.

Motion picture stocks on the Curb Exchange rose some 3 to 7 points.

The appreciation gained in 1935 by the 12 representative film stocks on the New York Exchange was as follows:

'Artistic' Pictures Good Business, But Take Courage, Says Kahane

"Yes, the so-called 'artistic pictures' are 'good business'," B. B. Kahane, vice-president of RKO-Radio Pictures, was quoted in a recent issue of Commentator, house organ of the Small-Landau talent agency in Hollywood.

"Yes, they are good business—but not for the reason you'd think. Public taste has not improved. No, not a bit. Oh, I do think the films are attracting a few more of those people of cultivation, who used to feel superior to motion pictures. But they are not the great audience. And the great audience hasn't changed one iota. I may be wrong, but that's what I think.

"I go to successful pictures. They're well done; technically ship-shape or they wouldn't be successful. That fact is admitted. But what of the stories? I find myself listening to them, thinking every instant how silly they are, how just plain silly.

"And then I sit at my desk in a studio—and stories came in. Some of them are good stories. I like them. I, myself, would like to see them in a theatre. Yet, I know that it just isn't safe to produce all of those stories —simply because they're good, and because I like them. If I don't know it, I can always remind myself by going and seeing one of the silly ones that is good box office.

"And yet I still say that it is wise to produce a certain number each year of pctures that are adult—and that have a purely artistic appeal. Not that it doesn't take courage to do it. It does.

"It takes a special kind of courage. You have to go the whole way. If your artistic experiment dictates using a cast of no important names, you mustn't lose your nerve and throw in a star or two. If, on the other hand, you start out with a deluxe offering that demands an all-star cast, you must go the whole way with that, too. You cannot hope, by lavish production, and the piling on of non-essentials, to accomplish the artistic entity you want, if at the last minute, you lose your nerve, and fall back on 'stock-casting'.

"It gets down to the proposition of making a factory made product—or a custom made product. All pictures should be custom made. Prestige-pictures have to be," Mr. Kahane added.

Theatres to Consolidate $650,000 Operator Suit

Owners of eight film theatres in New York City seeking to consolidate their individual suits may withdraw actions aggregating $650,000 to draw up a joint contract, was the ruling given Tuesday by Judge Bernard L. Shientag in the New York supreme court.

The plaintiffs said they had inadvertently filed eight separate suits containing similar charges. The action were brought against Local 306, IATSE, and Joseph Basson, individually and as president of the union, charging the business of the theatres had been dragged by picketing and other activities of the union, in a fight against the Allied operators' group.

Application for an injunction by Allied Motion Picture Operators' Union to oust Local 306 operators from the Terminal and National Theatres of New York was denied this week by Judge Abel in the supreme court in Brooklyn. The court held that an agreement that had been consummated by the Independent Theatre Owners Association and the Allied Union for use of its operators was not binding.

Paramount Sues On Cartoon Reduction

Paramount and Exclusive Motion Picture Company last week filed suit in New York federal court against Benjamin Leder, doing business under the name of Leader Motion Picture Company, for alleged infringement of copyright. Phillips and Nizer are attorneys for Paramount in the matter.

In its complaint, the defendants claim that Exclusive Motion Picture Company has an exclusive contract with Paramount for reducing 35mm cartoons to 16mm, for which Leder has no agreement. It is stated, in substance, that Leader Motion Picture Company is infringing on Paramount's copyright by reducing the cartoons to 16mm without permission.

Sued in "Children's Hour" Ban

Mayor Frederick W. Mansfield of Boston and Herbert L. McNary, city censor, are defendants in suits launched in federal court for the barring of the play, "The Children's Hour." One suit, for $200,000, was launched by Children's Hour, Inc., and the other, for $50,000, by Herman Shumlin, producer. Samuel Goldwyn is to do a screen version of the play under the title "These Three!"

DON'T ENVY 20th CENTURY-FOX EXHIBITORS . . . BE ONE!

167 BROADCASTERS ACCEPT NEW WARNER MUSIC CONTRACT TERMS

Revised Rate for Larger Stations at Four Times Quarter-Hour Rate Charged Advertisers, Smaller Stations Half

Warner Brothers' entry into the music licensing field independently of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers was signalized by speedy response from the broadcasting field. Within 72 hours after a revised contract had been mailed to some 560 broadcasting stations, by Thursday afternoon 167 had accepted it and 70 others indicated acceptance if one or two details are changed.

Four hundred member stations of the National Association of Broadcasters had been advised of the changes in the original tentative agreement by James W. Baldwin, managing director of the broadcasters' organization, during his negotiations over the weekend with Herman Starr, Warner vice-president in charge of music business. Warner Brothers communicated its offer to these as well as to individual stations affiliated with the networks, while disdaining to deal with the networks themselves.

Quick action resulted after Warner receded from its original demand for 40 per cent of what is paid ASCAP in fees for sustaining programs, plus two per cent commission on collections from advertisers. The revised rate is a basic one for the larger stations of four times the quarter-hour rate charged advertisers, per station per month, while smaller stations pay half that amount. The larger stations constitute about 65 per cent of the total.

It was learned on Tuesday that Warner definitely is planning to levy a music tax on exhibitors, but with the thought that it will be a temporary matter, possibly for the first three months of this year. The company was represented as feeling that since theatre owners are paying ASCAP for the privilege of using its music, it would be unfair to Warner's music publishing subsidiaries, which are distinct from the parent film company, and to Warner's composers and authors not to place its performing rights on the same basis. There is, too, the matter of revenue.

Composers and Authors Insistent

However, it was said on good authority that a seat tax would not be contemplated as a permanent levy, but imposed for the time being until Warner's experiment with performing rights licensing has been crystallized. It was pointed out at the same time that the company failed to see why a music tax should not be levied on theatres. In New York music circles it was understood that the composers and authors affiliated with the Warner companies were bringing pressure to bear to this end.

The company does not plan to bring infringement action against exhibitors except where its music is reproduced without a license by means other than by film.

The Exhibitors' Emergency Committee meanwhile was preparing to protest strenuously any imposition of a tax by Warner, in addition to that already paid to ASCAP. Walter Vincent, committee chairman, said the committee was in readiness to meet whenever Warner officially announces its attitude toward the exhibitors.

FEDERAL INQUIRY ON ASCAP RATES SEEN

A Department of Justice investigation into the ASCAP rate structure loomed this week. Powell Crosley, radio manufacturer and radio station operator, announced he had telegraphed Attorney General Homer S. Cummings urging a "complete investigation" of "special arrangements, if any, between copyright holders, broadcasting networks and other types of broadcasters." "Diligence is required," he said, "in order that independent broadcasting stations shall not have exorbitant fees doubled upon them."

Mr. Crosley was referring to the various discounts given the network stations and preferential rates to some of the newspaper owned broadcasting stations. The Crosley company operates stations WLW and WSAI in Cincinnati.

After rejecting Warner's initial contract for performing rights licenses, as excessive in terms, the radio stations on Monday were offered a revised agreement, and it was described as generally acceptable. The large networks, however, decided against paying an additional tax under Warner's terms, and on Wednesday discontinued the use of the company's music.

At a meeting of broadcasters in Los Angeles Monday, the Warner contract was tentatively accepted by local stations. Jerry King, manager of KFWB and Warner representative, submitted the Warner terms and said that Warner had no intention of working a hardship on the smaller stations but they must pay the additional license fee.

The consensus in Los Angeles was that litigation affecting the entire broadcasting field would arise from Warner's striking out on its own. Nonsigners of the Warner contract aware of the penalties under the law refrained from using Warner music after Tuesday midnight.

ASCAP, also on Monday, offered more than 400 stations whose licenses were expiring December 31 and which had not renewed, a new agreement on prevailing terms for five years, with the promise to protect them against litigation which is expected to arise over the conflict surrounding the control of copyrights.

ASCAP's offer of last week to negotiate five-year contracts with exhibitors on present rates evoked no response among theatre circuits or independents, even though E. C. Mills, ASCAP's general manager, proposed the long term as "guarantee against an increase in rates."

As the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System ruled Warner music off their stations, Columbia disclosed there would be a court fight to determine the control of performing rights in the Warner catalog comprising some 36,000 compositions.

Warner insisted its 11 music companies could license performances, while ASCAP challenged the claim, saying it had sole right by virtue of its agreements with Warner composers and authors.

Company Definitely Plans to Levy Music Tax on Exhibitors, but Temporarily, Possibly First Three Months of Year

The terms under which Warner is licensing radio stations are for a three-month period, at the end of which a per piece system of charging will be put into effect, it is planned. This system has been favored by the broadcasters for three years, but without results from ASCAP.

Warner exchanges in the distribution territories are being given the added duties of music checkers in order to determine copyright infringements in unlicensed performances of Warner music. The personnel of Warner music departments in key cities where such staffs have not been abandoned due to retrenchment will concentrate on "spotting" programs.

As in the case with the five-year extension agreements offered exhibitors last week, ASCAP makes no concessions to the broadcasters for the loss of Warner music. New contracts have been submitted on existing terms of five per cent commission on commercial revenue from advertisers, plus a sustaining fee, which varies.

A statement by Warner outlines the negotiations between representatives of the Music Publishers Holding Corporation, the Warner music division, and James W. Baldwin, managing director of the National Association of Broadcasters. Conferences also were held with a committee representing independent stations.

Contract Revised

"Last week a tentative proposed contract, under which broadcasters would be authorized for three months to broadcast copyright music controlled by the publishing houses owned by Warner Bros., was mailed to broadcasters throughout the country," said Warner.

"The Music Publishers Holding Corporation is pleased to announce that, as a result of . . . discussions, it is enabled to offer a revised contract which, while not obviating all the objections raised by the broadcasters, is conceded by them to be much more satisfactory to all broadcasting interests than the contract first offered and to go a long way toward meeting these objections. All parties recognized that, in view of the limited time available, many important problems must be reserved for future discussion.

"The revised contract covers a period of three months beginning January 1. It is our understanding that Mr. Baldwin, without recommendation one way or the other, has submitted the principal features of this revised contract to the broadcasters all over the country. We have already received word that a number of broadcasting stations in various parts of the country have signified their willingness to accept.

"Naturally, the printing and forwarding of the revised contract will require a day or two and perhaps more, and it will take a few days for stations to examine the contract and, after executing it, to return it to us. We have no disposition to take any technical advantage over any station which takes a reasonable time to examine, execute and return the contract. Consequently, any station east of Chicago which, by January 5, has signed and mailed this contract to us, and any station west of Chicago which has done so by January 10, will be considered as being licensed retroactively as of Jan. 1, 1936.

"The principal features of the revised contract now offered by us are as follows:

"1. The basis of payment for the use of our music will be a flat fee based on four times the quarter hour rate (card rate) of each station per month. (That is, if a station's card rate is, say $100 per quarter hour, the fee will be $400 per month). Thus each station, by its card rate, regulates the payment it is to make for music rights. There will be no extra charge, for the right to record and broadcast by electrical transcription.

"2. Small stations—approximately 35 per cent of all the stations in the country—will pay a half rate (50 per cent of the established rate).

"3. For the first time radio stations will be furnished with a complete catalogue of the compositions of which we warrant ourselves to be the owners.

"4. The revised contract applies only to individual stations. No provision is made for the large networks, which have shown no tendency to negotiate with us, and therefore this music will not be available for their use. It is a fact unknown to the public that heretofore, under the ASCAP contract, networks as networks have paid nothing for the use of music. The payments received by ASCAP have been based on a percentage of what each station received for its time. Of the amounts received from sponsors the network allowed individual stations only approximately 20 per cent of the sums received by the network and the fee to the ASCAP was five per cent of that proportion. Thus nothing whatever was paid on the 80 per cent retained by the network. (For example, assuming that a certain radio hour paid $15,000 for its time, the individual stations received only approximately $3,000, and the ASCAP was paid five per cent of the $3,000, while the network's share, $12,000, paid nothing.)

No Favored Rates

"5. One of the most important clauses in the revised contract is what may be described as a 'most favored nation clause,' under which no station will be allowed a more favorable rate than any other station of similar classification.

"The entire object of our resignation from ASCAP and our decision to conduct our music publishing activities on an independent basis is to secure reasonable and equitable returns for the use of the music which is the life-blood of commercial radio.

"Arrangements for the use of our music by theatres, hotels, etc., are now being negotiated, and full details will be made public within the next few days.

"We are acting in the interests of the composer, the lyric-writer, and the publisher, whose returns have been so drastically affected by developments of the past few years in the use of music on the air. We have no doubt that we shall succeed in obtaining the fair arrangements which are all we desire, and that the public will not be deprived of hearing on radio programs the works of Gershwin, Kern, Romberg, Friml, Victor Herbert, Noel Coward, Cole Porter, Schwartz, Vincent Youmans, Rogers and Hart, Dubin and Warren, and the many other composers represented on our list. The music from about 80 per cent of the successful musical shows of the past 20 years is published by our companies."

Society Challenges Claims

Gene Buck, president of ASCAP, on Monday sent the following telegram to approximately 400 unlicensed stations, who had to renew agreements by January 1 in order to continue broadcasting Warner Music:

"This is to notify you that the Society is prepared to extend your present license agreement with it upon the same terms and conditions for five additional years from January 1, 1936, except that the rights granted by the Society shall be limited to the compositions of the membership as constituted on January 1, 1936.

"The Society challenges the claims made by others to ownership in the small performing rights of various compositions published by them but written and composed by members of the Society.

"The Society controlls the performing rights of many of such compositions and within a very short time will publish a list thereof.

"As our examinations of individual contracts (with authors and composers) progresses, we are confident that our repertoire will be increased in respect of many compositions, the performing rights of which are exclusively claimed by others. To illustrate, published reports that the Society can no longer license small performing rights in the works of George M. Cohan, Victor Herbert and some others are absolutely without foundation.

"The Society has the right to grant licenses in respect of these works and will protect all its licensees broadcasting the same.

Fee Not Reduced

"While we, of course, have no objection to your taking any other license which you desire to take, we feel it only fair to tell you that your fee to the Society will not be reduced and the formula will not be altered, except that the license will be limited to works in the Society's repertoire as of January 1, 1936, and, furthermore, to advise that with respect to any composition the licensing rights of which are exclusively vested in us, we will not recognize any license which you may obtain from others."

The nub of Warner's argument with the networks is in the matter of billing, the company objecting to the method NBC and CBS practice with ASCAP, as indicated in Warner's statement. In event the chains do negotiate with Warner, the demand will be for a rate based on the gross received from the advertiser, without any deductions other than the advertising agency discount of 15 per cent and the bulk discount. Warner also has made it understood that no independent station will be permitted to supply the chains with its music.

In a letter to the advertising and program agencies using the Blue and Red networks, NBC called attention to certain "facts that have forced" the decision to delete the Warner catalogue.

Summarized, they are: That on June 4, 1935, in the presence of a Warner representative, an NBC contract had been effected with ASCAP to use all catalogued music until December 31, 1940, including, of course, the Warner music; that since the signing of that contract Warner has advised it would not permit use of its music without "an additional license from them," beginning January 1.

The same statements apply to the Columbia system, and were made in a similar letter sent out by the Columbia office. This letter also said that efforts had been made to persuade the Warner group to cooperate in determining the issues with ASCAP so that the music might be used pending the decision on a test case in the courts. These requests, the letter said, were refused.

Plan Legal Action

"At the same time we are glad to advise you that certain legal action which we and others propose to bring should result in a prompt determination of the legal rights in dispute or some other satisfactory termination of the controversy," the Columbia letter continued.

It further asserted that Warner had denied access to various contracts between members of the Warner group and the composers, and expressed the belief that examination of such contracts "will result in a speedy determination that the works of some of the more important composers may safely be performed even while such legal actions are pending."

Widespread interest in the situation is reflected in newspaper comment. The Kansas City Star seemed particularly disturbed, probably with reason, because it owns and operates WDAF, an affiliate of NBC.

"Radio will enter the new year in the United States with a problem that threatens to penalize the public, as well as seriously to disturb the organization of the industry," editorialized the Star. . . . "This is a question of internal organization upon which there is no need to pass judgment. But as in all such cases, the public has a direct interest. A disorganization of the system under which popular music is broadcast in this country, of course, would not be national calamity, but it would be a real inconvenience to the many persons who have grown accustomed to rely upon the radio for entertainment."

MYERS THREATENS 'FIGHT TO FINISH'

There will be a "fight to a finish" if Warner makes any definite moves to impose an additional seat tax on exhibitors, warned Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, from Washington headquarters this week.

"If Warner Brothers are merely making a play to chisel more revenue out of ASCAP, it is all right with us, provided there is no added burden on the exhibitors," Mr. Myers added.

He observed that, as a central licensing agency, "ASCAP served the purpose admirably in every respect but one—it was too grasping," and that "from where we sit the real menace now appears to be Warner Brothers."

A fair solution, believed Mr. Myers, would be for the producers to bargain for the performing rights together with the recording rights, and the exhibitor tax would then be included in the film rentals. He indicated Allied will attempt to have the Duffy copyright bill amended in Congress to achieve this end.

A Message to Garcia

(20th Century - Fox)

Action Drama

Based on an actual American historical incident immortalized by Elbert Hubbard's famous essay, this production is a thrilling adventure action drama, embellished by romantic love interest and comedy. It is being produced on a lavish scale, a procedure which the producers believe will be highly influential in convincing audiences of the picture's entertainment value and showmen of its commercial worth.

Adapted from the book, "How I Carried The Message to Garcia," by Lieutenant Arthur Rowan, the hero of the incident, the screen play is by W. P. Lipscomb and Gene Fowler, whose capabilities in handling virile, red blooded entertainment are amply evidenced by their previous accomplishments. Direction is by George Marshall, maker of many Fox pictures, particularly two Will Rogers features, "Life Begins at 40" and "In Old Kentucky."

While many of the cast, playing Spanish and Cuban parts, are only slightly known to theatre goers, name value of the principal artists ranks high. The cast is headed by Wallace Beery, last in "China Seas" and "Ah Wilderness," playing the part of Dory, a renegade marine sergeant. John Boles, currently in "The Little Colonel," is Lieut. Rowan, and Barbara Stanwyck, now in "Annie Oakley," will be seen as a Cuban senorita, sharing the romantic love interest with Boles. The role of the Spanish spy is assumed by Mona Barrie, presently in "King of Burlesque." Allan Hale is Dr. Krug, and the picture's comedy contrast is entrusted to Herbert Mundin as an itinerant tin peddler.

Among the production's features that should readily lend themselves to interest creating showmanship are the sequences showing President McKinley's decision to establish contact with Cuba's General Garcia on the outbreak of the Spanish American War following destruction of the battleship Maine. Garcia's Army in battle and other sequences reflecting the Cuban struggle for freedom; the trek of Beery, Boles and Miss Stanwyck through Cuban swamps and jungles; capture of the blockhouse, death sentence of Boles and Beery; the battle for life in the prison dungeon; the torture of Beery, Boles and Stanwyck, and the final delivery of the famous message.

Three Live Ghosts

(MGM)

In the opinion of the producers in connection with this production, entertainment that was once grand comedy will continue to be grand comedy. As a stage show, later as a silent picture, "Three Live Ghosts" rated that classification. It is the expectancy that now, benefited by fine production in talking form, it still will be pleasing comedy.

Though the title definitely suggests so, this is not a ghost story in fact. Similarly, though it deals with soldiers, it is not a war story. Actually it is the tale of three soldiers, held prisoners in a German concentration camp and assumed to be dead legally and officially. The yarn deals with their comedy escapades while confined, and later the experiences they undergo while hibernating in England. While there are occasional bits of drama, dabs of romance, seriousness is to be played down and concentration placed upon stimulating comedy reactions.

While Richard Arlen is given top billing, it is probably interesting from a showmanship point of view to note that three of the players presented in important roles also were featured in the silent production. They are Claude Allister, Beryl Mercer and Charles McNaughton. Miss Mercer and McNaughton also appeared in the stage version. Arlen's recent role in "Let 'Em Have It" embellishes this, as does the appearance of Cecelia Parker, about whom the story's romance revolves, in "Ah Wilderness." While the aforementioned group carries the brunt of the story action, supporting players to be seen include Nydia Westman, Dudley Digges, Jonathan Hale and Lillian Kemble Cooper.

The producers, in suggesting how exhibitors may handle the picture's presentation, call attention to the fact that it has nothing to do with spiritualism or kindred subjects and that it is by no stretch of imagination a war story as that term is commonly accepted. They point that comedy, light drama and romance are the elements that can be most effectively utilized in stimulating patron interest.

The Indestructible Mrs. Talbot

(Radio)

For entertainment purposes this production will offer a story of tangled love affairs. Naturally dramatic, but at the same time not lacking in comedy contrast, it's a story of a great love and admiration that was able to stand the shock of divorce and precipitate another divorce in order that real love should triumph in the end. For exploitation purposes it affords the worth of this character story which experience has taught is of unusual interest to women, plus the value of established screen names.

Based on a story by P. J. Wolfson, recently credited with "Reckless," the screen play is by Anthony Veiller, who numbers among his recent features "Jalna," "Break of Hearts," "College Scandal" and "Star of Midnight." Direction is by Stephen Roberts.

In the leading roles as the wife and husband whose romance was blasted only to be born again, Ann Harding, currently in "Peter Ibbetson," and Herbert Marshall last in "Dark Angel," are featured. The role of the girl who comes between them is assumed by Margaret Lindsay, who has been in many Warner pictures. Also in the cast is Walter Abel, remembered for "Three Musketeers" and currently in "Two O'Clock Courage," who will be seen as a young man infatuated with Miss Harding before and after her divorce. Ilka Chase, making her return to the screen, appears as a scandal mongering gossip. Edward Ellis, outstanding in "Chatterbox," appears as Marshall's father and the agent through whom the separated wife and husband are reunited after Miss Lindsay has stripped Marshall of practically all his wordly possessions.

As is usual in pictures providing small casts, each member is important. The various roles having been assigned with a view to the player's adaptability to the part, the producing company feeling is enthusiastic that the story is of the type that will show Miss Harding to best advantage. Hoping for another "Holiday," substantiating production atmosphere being similar, opinion is that the woman appeal of the feature will be strong enough to arouse general audience attention.

It Had to Happen

Romantic Character Drama

This feature seems to have the ingredients in story content, prestige of personalities, production values, sources of quick natural human interest as well as writer and director credits, in addition to gripping semi-topical entertainment that should inspire alert and aggressive showmanship.

The title, one that should intrigue patron and exhibitor attention, really tells the story. Humorous, dramatic and romantic, it is that of an Italian who comes to America and rises from the obscurity of crowded tenements to a position of power and wealth in New York's political, financial and social life. Motivation for it all is the lead's admiration of and later love for an aristocratic woman, to whom he has to prove he is a better man than her husband before she'll divorce him to marry him. The locales run from the slums to Park Avenue with a side trip to the Saratoga races, life in all quarters being humanly reflected. It moves in an atmosphere of undercover politics, Wall Street financial chicanery, and into a potentially suspense packed grand jury investigation.

The production is based on a story, "Canavan," by Rupert Hughes whose screen yarns of American life are familiar. The screen play is by Howard Ellis Smith and Kathryn Scolla. Direction is by the maker of "Broadway Melody of 1935" and "Thanks a Million," Roy Del Ruth.

Though George Raft, last in "Every Night at Eight," and Rosalind Russell, seen recently in "China Seas" and "Rendezvous," are starred, there is also much exploitation value to the other featured cast members. In particular this is to be found in the teaming of Raft and Leo Carrillo, whom the producers are boosting for elevation to a high place among the screen couples. Others who will be seen in prominent roles are Arline Judge, now in "King of Burlesque," Alan Dinehart, Astrid Allwyn, Andrew Tombes and Arthur Hohl. Lesser players include Paul Stanton, Stanley Fields, George Irving, Nina Campana, Thomas Jackson and Clay Clement.

Warner To Build Six Washington Theatres

Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers Pictures, announced this week that Warner Brothers will build six new theatres in Washington at a cost of $4,000,000. Construction will begin in about six weeks. This will make a total of 20 theatres in the Washington area to be operated by the company.

KENNEDY TO STUDY RCA STRUCTURE; LOHR SUCCEEDS AYLESWORTH IN NBC

Kennedy, Until Recently SEC Chairman, Went from Banking into FBO; Was Pathe President, KAO Chairman

Three important changes were made this week with unusual suddenness in the complicated personnel structure of the Radio Corporation's communications and entertainment systems.

1. Joseph P. Kennedy, former SEC head and motion picture executive, was retained to study the troublesome problems of RCA's capital structure.

2. Merlin Hall Aylesworth, RCA's board chairman at RKO, resigned as president of RCA's National Broadcasting Company to devote more time to RKO.

3. RCA named Lenox Riley Lohr, Chicago World's Fair manager, to succeed Mr. Aylesworth at NBC.

Mr. Kennedy, a White House guest within a few hours after the announcement of his new RCA engagement, thereby returns to amusements after a career in finance, politics and until recently as head of President Roosevelt's Securities Exchange Commission. His last participation in motion pictures was as president of Pathe, retiring when he sold that corporation's assets to RCA for amalgamation with FBO in the formation of RKO.

Retention of Mr. Kennedy was announced by David Sarnoff, following a meeting last Friday of RCA's board of directors. Mr. Sarnoff said that Mr. Kennedy will undertake the capital structure study immediately. Mr. Kennedy explained that he will make no permanent affiliation with RCA and plans to return to his private affairs. After a short vacation at his home in Florida, he returns to New York next week to establish headquarters in the RCA Building at Rockefeller Center. There was no available estimation of the length of time required to complete the assignment.

RCA's directors have been working on several plans to clear up back dividends on the preferred stock and reduce the number of common shares outstanding. Class B preferred stock arrearages now amount to $21.25 a share.

Hard Task, Say Financial Editors

Mr. Kennedy's appointment was described by the financial press as "a surprise" to his former colleagues in Washington and Wall Street. He is facing a hard task and a long one, observed financial editors.

Maintenance of dividends at the rates provided by the existing stock issues would require $1,735,000 annually on the Class A preferred shares and $3,836,375 on the Class B preferred. Net income for nine months this year available for such dividends was $2,801,123. The fourth quarter normally is far better in financial results than the others. Thus the ability to maintain dividends is another element to be weighed in formulating any plan, according to Wall Street opinion.

More than 40 plans of recapitalization of Radio Corporation have been submitted to directors for consideration and all have been rejected. Most of the plans called for the retirement of the issued 495,597 shares of seven per cent cumulative $50 par preferred A stock, payment of the accrued dividends on the issued 767,275 shares of $5 no-par preferred B shares, which have a redemption value of $100 a share, and the issuance of one new share of common stock for each two shares of present common stock. There are now 13,130,690 shares of common stock outstanding.

It also has been contemplated, they said, that if the preferred A shares are redeemed a new issue of 6 per cent non-cumulative preferred stock be issued for the present cumulative preferred B stock. It is the intention of Radio to recapitalize its corporate structure in some fashion so that dividends can be declared on the common stock.

Early in January all arrears on the preferred A stock were paid and the stock was put on a regular dividend basis. Plans were said to have been under consideration at that time to clear up the arrears on the preferred B stock.

As one step in simplification of its business, Radio sold, a few weeks ago, to the Lehman Brothers-Atlas Corporation interests one-half of its holdings in RKO and gave an option for the remaining half. It is understood that Radio will receive between $10,000,000 and $11,000,000 for its holdings when the option is taken up. It is also understood that the option is to be taken up in the near future.

Radio's holdings in RKO consisted of 1,259-463½ shares of common stock, 48.86 per cent of the total, and $9,786,655 of ten-year debentures, which was 84 per cent of the total outstanding.

In November, Radio completed a deal with British interests for the sale of its holdings of 1,700,000 shares, 29.2 per cent. in Electrical and Musical Industries, Ltd., for $10,220,000, payable in cash. Radio also received $400,000 in dividends.

Cite Large Cash on Hand

At the end of 1934, Radio reported cash of $15,073,921 which, together with the $10,000,000 or $11,000,000 it will ultimately receive for the RKO holdings and the $10,620,000 for the Electrical and Musical Industries stock, will total approximately $36,000,000. Part of its cash has been used so far this year to retire an issue of $4,000,000 of debentures.

With such a large amount of cash on hand, financial editors see Radio striving to work out some plan of recapitalization so that part of it can be used. This may be used for retiring the preferred B shares, which are carried at $24,779,870, or be employed to pay part of the about $20-a-share accruals on the preferred B stock.

The RCA management and some important security holders, it was said, would like to see the fixed provision of the preferred dividend removed, pointing out that it has not been earned with the exception of 1935 in several years, replacing the stock with an issue which would pay a liberal dividend if earned. Any such action should improve materially the position of the common stockholders, according to Wall Street opinion.

The special study of the recapitalization of Radio Corporation is the first major job Mr. Kennedy has undertaken since he resigned as chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Following his resignation from the S. E. C. early last September, he made an extensive tour of Europe on a special mission for President Roosevelt as an economic investigator. He made stops in England, Italy, Switzerland, France and Holland, all members of the European gold bloc.

It was conceded in many quarters that Mr. Kennedy's visit abroad was to adjust the many difficulties surrounding the registration with the S. E. C. of foreign issues listed on stock exchanges.

Mentioned for Cabinet

A great deal of speculation has surrounded the movements of Mr. Kennedy since his resignation from the S. E. C. He often was spoken of as a possible member of President Roosevelt's Cabinet. Mr. Kennedy long has been a close personal friend of Mr. Roosevelt and, in addition to working actively in his behalf during Mr. Roosevelt's Presidential campaign, accompanied him on many of his speaking tours.

Mr. Kennedy's knowledge of the amusement industry, his wide experience in the investment banking field and with the Securities and Exchange Commission are taken by financial editors as an indication that a major step forward has been taken by Radio to reach some agreement in its present situation. Mr. Kennedy has been credited with making the securities laws work and he exercised a major influence in bringing about harmony between the Administration and the financial institutions.

When the public utility bill was up for discussion, Mr. Kennedy called attention to the fact that the bill did not define clearly how the S. E. C. was to interpret "public interest." He also indicated that to administer the utility act would be an added burden to the S. E. C. His resignation as chairman of the S. E. C. was taken in many quarters to mean that he did not wish to have any part in administering the utility act.

Mr. Kennedy was the first chairman of the S. E. C. His appointment was announced by President Roosevelt on June 30, 1934. When he resigned he was said by the President to be "still a part of the administration."

First in FBO in 1926

Although Mr. Kennedy has been in and out of public life at various times, his connection with the amusement industry gave him a close knowledge of Radio Corporation affairs. After serving as president of the Columbia Trust Company in Boston, he purchased FBO Pictures in February, 1926, and was president of that company when a large interest in it was sold to Radio Corporation and affiliates in January, 1928, in connection with the initiation of sound.

He became affiliated with the Keith-Albee-Orpheum circuit in May, 1928, and was chairman of the company when it was acquired by the newly formed Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation in October, 1928, RKO also acquiring FBO Productions, Inc., and RCA patent rights connected with talking films. He severed his remaining connections with the amusement industry early in 1931.

board of directors of National Broadcasting Company, announced Mr. Aylesworth's resignation and Mr. Lohr's succession in the following statement:

"The National Broadcasting Company, at its regular meeting of directors, accepted with regret the resignation tendered by Merlin H. Aylesworth, as president of NBC. He asked to be relieved from the responsibilities of this office because of the increased duties he has assumed as chairman of the board of directors of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, to which office he was elected last month. Mr. Aylesworth remains as a member of the board of directors of NBC, and in order that the company may continue to have the benefit of his long experience and advice in the field of broadcasting, he has been elected to the newly created office of vice-chairman of the NBC board.

"To fill the vacancy created by Mr. Aylesworth's resignation, Mr. Lenox R. Lohr has been elected president of NBC and will assume his new duties on January 1, 1936.

"The National Broadcasting Company is fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Lohr for full management responsibilities. Mr. Lohr not only has had a successful career as engineer, soldier, instructor, author and editor, but has also demonstrated unusual qualities as an executive and business man by his strikingly successful management of the Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago. Mr. Lohr brings to his new duties a thorough training and experience in varied fields and a wide knowledge of our country."

Mr. Aylesworth held the top position at NBC since its inception in 1926. He was frequently regarded as the father of chain broadcasting. Mr. Sarnoff appointed him to the dual position of president of RKO, which post he relinquished a few weeks ago when the new Floyd Odlum-Lehman interests in the corporation elected Leo Spitz to the presidency in their behalf.

Born at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on July 19, 1886, Mr. Aylesworth won the degree of bachelor of literature at the University of Denver and also attended Colorado Agricultural College, University of Colorado, University of Wisconsin and Columbia University. He practiced law in Fort Collins, Col. In 1914 he became chairman of the Colorado Public Utilities Commission, which position he held until 1918. At that time became head of the Utah Power and Light Company, in Salt Lake City. In 1919 he went to New York with N. E. L. A. to reorganize that organization.

Lohr an Engineer

Lenox Riley Lohr has had an interesting and distinguished career in engineering, military and journalistic fields. He was born in Washington, D. C., Aug. 15, 1891, son of Gustavus Peter Lohr and Margaret Bean Lohr. He is forty-four years old. In 1924, he married Florence Josephine Wimsatt (M.A., M.D.) of Washington, D. C. They have three daughters and two sons.

Mr. Lohr was graduated in 1916 from Cornell University with a degree in mechanical and electrical engineering and later attended Claire College at Cambridge University, England.

During the World War, Mr. Lohr served in the American Army in France and attained the rank of major. He was awarded a citation for meritorious service in action.

For seven years he was a member of the board of directors, executive secretary and editor of the journal of the Society of American Military Engineers. He was also a member of the advisory council of the Federal Board of Surveys and Maps.

In 1929 Mr. Lohr was selected as the general manager of the "Century of Progress" in Chicago and was in direct charge of the exposition throughout its continuance.

Mr. Lohr is a life member of the National Highway Association, a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, the Washington Academy of Science, Sigma Phi Sigma, Scabbard and Blade, National Press Club and Cherry Circle Duck Club. He is an author of many technical papers, and is also a vice-president and member of the board of directors of the Museum of Science and Industry in Chicago.

Saving in Premiums On Insurance Seen In St. Louis Field

Motion picture building owners in Missouri who buy their fire and windstorm insurance protection from stock fire insurance companies will save several thousands of dollars in premiums during 1036 because of a new schedule of rates and reclassification of coverage recently put into effect by the companies with the approval of State Superintendent of Insurance R. Emmet O'Malley.

While it is not yet possible to determine what will be the exact saving in insurance premiums to be experienced by each individual theatre in the state, this depending very largely on the particular type of construction, outside exposure, and so on, it is definite that approximately 10 per cent of the $68,000 in insurance premiums paid annually will be saved.

The Reductions

Generally speaking, the reductions in rates for buildings of fire proof construction will range from 5 to 40 per cent; on ordinary brick construction from 5 to 15 per cent and on frame buildings from 5 to 10 per cent. However this does not tell the entire story because for instance the credits for co-insurance have been substantially improved, the savings on such policies ranging up to 50 per cent.

A very important concession to the insurance buyers of the state under the new stock insurance rates is the special supplemental contract that is being attached to the fire policies to include not only windstorm, cyclone and tornado coverage, but also hail, explosion, riot and civil commotion, aircraft, damage from self-propelled vehicles and smoke damage. The additional premium for these extra coverage is comparatively slight, depending of course on the type of construction. The premium saving, when the new protection that is afforded is taken into consideration, is very substantial. The premium is only a few cents per $100 above the old charges for windstorm alone.

Paul W. Terry, manager of the Missouri Inspection Bureau, Pierce Building, St. Louis, which is the fire insurance rating bureau for Missouri, said that in the next several years there will be a complete reclassification of each individual theatre in the state. However, for the time being this work of reclassification will be confined to fireproof structures.

In the year 1934 the insurance companies operating in Missouri reported premiums collected on theatre buildings in the state totaled $67,415 while the loss ratio was 46.52 per cent. In addition to the losses paid the companies had to take care of commissions to agents and brokers, office and other administrative expenses. For the three year period 1932-1933-1934 total premiums collected in the state were $225,654 and losses paid amounted to $215,279. The heavy losses in this period were due to some large individual fires in Kansas City and St. Joseph.

Theatre men and their employes who purchase fire and windstorm insurance on their homes and other residential property can also take advantage of the substantial saving in premiums and the extra coverage now available under the new rate schedules of the some 210 stock fire insurance companies operating in St. Louis. The readjustment of rates not only applies to the buildings but also to furniture, etc.

A typical example of what can be accomplished in the way of economy and extra protection under the new rates and classification is shown by the following actual case taken from the files of a leading insurance agency in St. Louis. The dwelling affected is of brick with slate roof and a 3-car garage of similar construction in the rear of the lot:

The insurance protection now carried and premiums charged for 3-year period:

$11,000 fire on dwelling and $1000 on garage	$53.04
$8,000 tornado on dwelling and $1500 on garage	39.90
$3000 fire on furniture	18.90
$4000 tornado on furniture	16.80
Total	$128.64

The following protection can now be purchased:

$11,000 fire on dwelling and $1000 on garage	44.50
$11,000 tornado on dwelling and $1000 on garage	54.00
$3000 fire on furniture	15.00
$3000 tornado on furniture	13.50
Total	$127.00

It will be noted that while there are reductions in the tornado coverage on the garage and furniture of $1,500 that type of protection on the dwelling is raised $3,000. And in addition the extra protection of hail, aircraft, explosion, riot, smoke and self-propelled vehicle damage is given under the new policies while under the old arrangements such protection would have cost some $60 or so addition. With the growing use of airplanes, automobiles and oil burning furnaces these new coverages are important.

A number of theatre men throughout the state have already consulted their insurance agents and brokers to ascertain just how the new rates will apply to their theatres, homes and other buildings, and some have taken steps to rearrange their insurance protection so as to take full advantage of the new rates and coverage. The rates were officially put into effect on November 11, and will apply to policies written after that date.

Picquet Sets Meet Date

Charles W. Picquet, president of the Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, Inc., has set back his annual convention to January 26-27. Mr. Picquet figured the original date of January 12 conflicted with the dinner dance planned by the Variety Club of Philadelphia.

$7,000,000 U.S. MOTION PICTURE AND STAGE PROJECT THROUGH WPA

Leaders of Federal Movement See Possible Beginnings of Subsidized Theatre in Current Program for Relief

A federally subsidized theatre, actively and financially supported by the United States Government, is seen by officials of the Works Progress Administration theatre project and leaders in the legitimate theatre field as an outgrowth of the present extensive program to rehabilitate the thousands of actors and other stage workers on relief.

Hallie Flanagan, national director of the federal theatre project, is on record that the leaders of the project are devoting their time to the cause because they discern in the present program "the possible beginnings of a subsidized theatre in America." Similar fond hopes have been expressed in other quarters.

Film Producing Considered

At the same time, Miss Flanagan has dropped a hint, possibly for the consumption of the screen actors on the West Coast, that a motion picture producing project may be launched in Hollywood as part of the federal program. Queried in Washington, Miss Flanagan disclosed that a production plan of some kind is under consideration, but referred all questions to Gilmore Brown, regional director of the California theatre project, or Howard Miller, assistant regional director.

Among other important developments were:

The New York project, originally scheduled to start January 1, is now set to get underway February 1. Other sections are looking to New York for guidance.

A motion picture division has been perfected to supply film entertainment to 129 CCC camps in the New York area.

Theatre managers are at odds with the actors over the use of a house in the Manhattan theatre district, and labor unions have joined the controversy.

The projects are still hog-tied by red tape in many sectors, but efforts are being made to cut through the restrictions, following widespread protest.

The WPA reports that nearly 6,000 professional theatre workers are already on the Government payroll.

The regional directors are devoting their time to the project in the hope that the Government will continue its support on a subsidized basis, said Miss Flanagan. And Elmer Rice, playwright and regional director for New York, while declaring that the federal project was not designed to found a national theatre or to subsidize theatres and producers, at the same time made it clear that he favored a subsidized theatre, as in Europe.

Harry L. Hopkins, WPA administrator, has seen no reason why the project should not eventually mean such a subsidy, said Mr. Rice.

"I have been predicting for 20 years that the commercial theatre would come to a finish. I believe that my prediction has actually come true, though I don't believe it will die immediately. There are many fine producers, fine actors, fine playwrights, but they are working under an archaic system."

Mr. Rice felt that one ailment that is killing the legitimate stage is high admission prices.

Frank Gillmore, president of Actors Equity Association, still hoped that the bill introduced by Representative William I. Sirovich in the last Congressional session to establish a national theatre would bring results.

"This includes, among other things, a Secretary of Fine Arts with a seat in the cabinet and a subsidy from the national Government for the theatre," explained Mr. Gillmore the other day. "Surely this is an exciting thought. The United States Government itself is definitely obligated to support the theatre out of federal funds and to take an attitude toward it such as is already taken in France, Germany, Austria, Scandinavia, Russia and other countries."

With the federal theatre project delayed generally by bureaucratic regulations and with condemnation rising on all sides, a motion picture division has been announced as part of the theatre project to sponsor film shows in the 129 Civilian Conservation Corps Camps in the New York district. This project was inaugurated last week with the presentation of Universal's "Diamond Jim" in five camps.

The film division is rounding out a plan by which a number of selected programs including a feature, short subject and animated cartoon will be shown in 40 camps in the next few weeks, with others to be added.

The unit is under the supervision of Mrs. Marion Beaufait, formerly executive chairman of the International New Educational Film Association. Her assistants are Walter Hall, exploitation director; James McGowen, Watson Livermore and N. J. Snyderman.

"The service our organization offers creates an absolutely new field of revenue for producers," Mrs. Beaufait explained. "Actually, we are bringing new theatres into existence, theatres which offer new outlets and which have new audiences."

Primarily concerned with the showing of entertaining films, the committee also will arrange programs of educational value, it was announced.

Visual Instructors

An important part of the motion picture program is the stationing of a visual instructor in each camp to see that preliminary information is given through lectures and other coordinating activities.

Following a month's tour of inspection, Miss Flanagan reported that 5,644 professional theatre workers were on the Government payroll on December 18th. Several thousand more are eligible and, she hoped, will be on the payroll by January 30th.

Granting that the projects in the field were easily set up because they are smaller and the bulk of unemployment is less than in New York, Miss Flanagan cited the successful working out of plans in Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Dallas.

The theatre project's share of the $27,000,000 allotment for the WPA arts program was $6,784,036, of which $3,000,000 is for New York, Miss Flanagan said. Mr. Rice has requested an additional $1,000,000 to continue the program in his district through June 30. The project now is scheduled to end April 30th. About 3,500 persons are on the New York project's payroll, and requisition has been made for 2,000 more. The full quota allowed for New York is 6,200.

There is very little chance, said Miss Flanagan, that WPA officials will alter the ruling that all except 10 per cent of workers on the theatre project must have been on relief before November 1st. The allocated funds will be practically exhausted before that percentage of exemptions can be raised, she indicated.

Typical of the feeling of theatre owners in the matter was the statement by the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana that "exhibitor opinion throughout the country is very apprehensive concerning the effect of this governmental competition with the motion picture theatres."

The association said, however: "We may be wrong about this, but it is our guess at this time that these shows will be inferior and they will not do any particular harm to the theatres. "This view coincided with that of

NO FAN DANCERS ON WPA SHOWS

Harry L. Hopkins' Works Progress Administration wants all taxpayers to get this straight—none of their hard-earned $4,000,000,000 work-relief money is going to aid needy fan dancers.

The case in question popped up in Minneapolis in the person of Ruby Baie, a smooth little brunette, who had been supplying the "hot cha" for a night club floor show there. The police ruined it all with a raid.

Out of a job, Miss Baie got on the federal theatre project payroll, as a member of a vaudeville troupe touring the CCC camps in Minnesota. Her picture got on the front page of a Minneapolis newspaper, with the billing, "Federal Fan Dancer No. 1."

WPA in Washington denied the story, but at CCC headquarters it was said that while the entertainment for the camps is mostly plays from Shakespeare, "the boys would welcome a fan dancer for a change."

representative industry opinion in New York, where circuit heads and others were deferring an expression on the possible competition of WPA shows until they actually get underway.

Competitive Phase Studied

The Indiana exhibitor organization was launching a survey of the competitive angle, and asked members to keep its office informed as to the facts about any of these shows, "how good they were, whether they attracted patronage, and whether they hurt your business."

"This is a ticklish problem," said the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, "and it will have to be handled very carefully to keep the exhibitors from appearing in a very selfish light—that we are always spoiling everything that interferes in the least with our business. No one thinks anything of this when a merchant or business man opposes efforts to upset his business by unfair competition or otherwise, but in the amusement field all of this is different. Please help us work out a proper policy relative to this matter by sending us complete and accurate information about these shows when, as and if they come to your town."

League and Unions Protest

The League of New York Theatres, organization of commercial producers and managers, and the union crafts objected to the use of theatres on Broadway by the WPA. The League demanded that the Equity Council ban all WPA units on Broadway, since it already has prohibited any of the project's "tryout theatres" from operating in Manhattan. The Equity Council meanwhile has taken no action, but Mr. Gillmore thought there might be some distinction between a theatre supervised by commercial producers and that supervised by the Government for relief purposes.

The Manhattan theatre, Broadway and Fifty-third street, has been leased for the project known as the "Popular Price Theatre," under the supervision of Edward Goodman. It is expected to open by February 1.

Mr. Rice said he also had arranged to lease the Biltmore Theatre and Daly's 63d Street. He added that the League had withdrawn its objections and he had agreed to lease no theatres between 40th and 53d streets other than the Biltmore and Manhattan.

The unions have formed a united front to attempt to break down the stagnation of the entire program through governmental red tape. The united front has been officially organized as the Affiliated A. F. L. Theatrical Unions Council for Federal Theatre Projects. James J. Brennan, president of Theatrical Protective Union, Local No. 1, has been elected chairman. Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary of the American Federation of Actors, is executive secretary of the new group.

Every union having workers in the legitimate theatrical field is included, among them the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees. The unions also envisioned a threat to the prevailing wage if relief projects are permitted to encroach in commercial areas in competition with established theatres.

Funds for the support of this group have been raised by the drastic taxation of working members. Stagehands on the road are assessed their pay for one show, $6,25 each week, while men in New York lose two shows out of an eight-show week, or one-fourth of their earning capacity, through the union relief tax. This applies to stage productions.

The organization last weekend appealed to Administrator Hopkins to issue a special ruling making all persons on the relief rolls of New York unions eligible for work in the WPA project regardless of their home relief status.

The IATSE is investigating the project's activities in connection with training boys in the CCC camps to become projectionists. While it was announced the training courses would be confined to supplying operators for the camps, the union fears the effect on the acute unemployment situation in the New York area, where many card members are unable to find work.

The first unit to get underway in New York, said Mr. Rice, will be the Negro theatre in Harlem, opening probably between January 15 and February 1st. This group will play at the Lafayette theatre, Harlem, which has been leased outright. Other houses for which arrangements virtually have been completed, according to Mr. Rice, are the Willis in the Bronx and the Shubert-Teller in Brooklyn. Both will be used for tryouts of potentially commercial plays submitted by Broadway managers acting through the League of New York Theatres.

Equity Appeals to Roosevelt

Actors' Equity has appealed to President Roosevelt to take a hand in speeding the project so that it will be of some value to the professional theatre before the end of the season. A vote at a general membership meeting of the actors on whether the prevailing wage should be demanded resulted in a tie, and the organization's Council may take some action on the matter. It was contended that if admissions are charged, the actors' $40 weekly minimum should apply, instead of the WPA's $103.40 monthly.

A classification board is being set up in New York to weed out amateurs, non-professionals and others who have mispresented their experience and qualifications in attempt to get on the payroll.

Miss Flanagan reported that the San Francisco program, headed by Blanche Bates, includes 175 persons and will provide a civic center offering plays, vaudeville shows and concerts. The Los Angeles project calls for 1,500 theatre workers who will be divided into several resident companies and three vaudeville units. There are now more than 600 persons on the payroll, many of them unemployed motion picture actors and technicians. One of the companies is now offering professional productions of the classics before college and secondary school audiences. It is planned to charge admissions ranging from 10 to 25 cents in Los Angeles.

20,000 UNEMPLOYED MUSICIANS IN U. S.

The plight of the musician due to the depression and the elimination of orchestras and organs from motion picture theatres was described this week in figures released by the American Federation of Musicians.

There are 20,000 musicians unemployed in the United States, representing one-sixth of the Federation's membership. Ten thousand of these are employed in the WPA federal music projects, while 5,000 more are in reduced circumstances but unable to enroll in the WPA because they accept casual employment.

Chicago has several vaudeville units, and soon is to have two legitimate companies, one to offer reivvals of famous American dramas, probably in a neighborhood theatre now dark. It is also proposed to reopen a theatre in the "loop" theatrical section, and legitimate managers are protesting.

The dramatic unit in Boston will open with Maxwell Anderson's "Valley Forge." A vaudeville project of 20 units, among them a large circus of 70 persons, will play Boston and neighboring towns. Woburn, Mass., also is seeking a drama unit and a music unit of its own. Theatre project performances in Massachusetts are attended by 50,000 a week.

In Dallas, 276 qualified theatre workers will deal chiefly in material concerning the Southwest.

Smaller units will be established in Philadelphia, where $25,000 will be spent for a six-month program, and in Buffalo, Kansas City, Cleveland, St. Louis, Omaha and Minneapolis.

"Laboratory Theatre"

The sum of $20,000 has been allocated to Newport, R. I., for the establishment of an experimental "laboratory theatre." The WPA's Hartford Civic Repertory has taken possession of Parson's theatre, owned by the Shubert interests, and the first play will be presented January 15 to 18. Managers of film houses in Hartford are not protesting, because a civic theatre project has been underway for the last six months without hurting business.

Theatre interests in New Haven, Conn., are critical of the local project, which is centered in the Theatre of Eleven at the Lincoln theatre. The group is headquarters for state activity, which has $86,000 at its disposal. The chief objections are that the actors were not taken from local relief rolls but were imported from New York and elsewhere, and that if the productions prove meritorius they will offer competition to established theatrical enterprise.

Hunt Quota of Actors

In a number of cities there are not enough theatre workers on relief to justify the organization of WPA units. These towns will be served by traveling companies. The Detroit project is having difficulty finding its quota of 25 actors who qualify, and plans therefore are being held in abeyance, it is reported. It is planned, however, to organize several companies for the state outside the motor city.

Dr. Nicolai Sokoloff, director of the WPA music project, this week predicted that the need for such projects among unemployed musicians would end by next June. He said the undertakings on which 11,800 unemployed musicians were at work were increasing a demand for music instruction and for the services of musicians, which in time would absorb most of those out of work.

More than 8,000 musicians who were on relief have received jobs in the WPA projects, it was announced officially. There are 162 music projects in operation in 19 states, and the program eventually is planned to employ 16,000 to 17,000 musicians.

HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Newsreel Technique Is Being Applied to Historical Films Showing Characters as Human Beings; Only Three Productions Started in Week, While Five Are Completed

Debunking

Exploration of production trends cannot help but reveal that "debunked" historical films, as they apply to personal biographies and incidents, are to be heavily concentrated upon in the new year.

For several years, historicals, both actual and imaginative, have enjoyed wide popularity. Producers were not unaware that many of these films had lots of "bugs" in them. In several instances, whether dealing with personalities or incidents, unauthentic flaws were permitted to appear in the finished feature. In future films of historical nature, the possibility of such lapses will be eliminated or at least reduced to a minimum. Today the major and independent companies in Hollywood have corps of historians, research experts, technical specialists and "Boner specialists" busily delving into the pasts of famous personalities and into actual historical, political, social and financial incidents that precipitated world moving events.

The historicals are going to adapt the newsreel technique. Instead of having their heroes and heroines glorified by subtle press agentry and handed to audiences without much regard to authenticity, the pictures will make their characters human beings as they were.

Recently the public has seen many pictures in which careful attention was paid to authenticity of personality and background. Among those given intensive pre-production study were "Captain Blood," "Mutiny on the Bounty," "The Crusades," "So Red the Rose," "The Little Colonel," "Farmer Takes a Wife" and "Diamond Jim." In one that has been previewed but will not be released until February 29th, "The Story of Louis Pasteur," the "debunking" process was carried out to an amazing extent. No attempt being made to glorify the hero, the production technique was aimed solely at permitting the camera to replace the authentic printed word and let the power of story impress the audience. Contemplating production of "Good Earth," a corps of research specialists spent months in delving into encyclopedias, hundreds of other books and sending technical expeditions to China before ever the final script was written.

Another production currently in work, "The Country Doctor," the story of the Dionne quintuplets, is highly illustrative of the drive producers are making for authenticity in every detail. Others given the same treatment are "Anthony Adverse," "Robin Hood of Eldorado," "A Message to Garcia," "Prisoner of Shark Island," dealing with the experiences of Dr. Mudd, the physician who ministered to Lincoln's assassin, Booth. So too with "Mother Lode," and probably none has been the object of more intensive research than "Little Lord Fauntleroy." Before ever a scene was shot on "Sutter's Gold," every detail was studied.

Though comparatively little has been said about it, such features as "Angel of Mercy," the story of Florence Nightingale, and "Napoleon" are being given intensive study. The same is true of "Marie Antoinette," "Forty Days of Musa Dagh," and "Mary of Scotland."

New Productions

As is customary during Christmas week, Hollywood's new production schedules shrank to almost invisible proportions. Only three productions started and five were finished.

Among the new productions, however, one upon which enough work has already been done to establish it among the most widely publicized features of all time, is "The Country Doctor," Twentieth Century-Fox. Preliminary atmosphere shots were made in the Canadian homestead of the Dionne quintuplets. Among the Hollywood personages to be seen are Jean Hersholt, Dorothy Peterson, June Lang, Michael Whalen, Slim Summerville, and John Qualen. Henry King is directing.

Another widely heralded feature got underway, at Paramount. A few weeks ago the eastern bound expedition of the technical crew for "13 Hours by Air," centered attention of the reading public with a situation that precipitated a temporary labor strike. Personalities who will appear include Fred MacMurray, Joan Bennett, Zasu Pitts, Adrianne Martin, Dean Jagger, Bennie Bartlett, Alan Baxter, Ruth Donnelly and Fred Keating. Mitchell Leisen is directing.

Radio put "Thoroughbreds All" into work. Topical in that it is a race horse picture, featured players currently listed are Louise Latimer, Moroni Olsen and John Arledge. Glynn Tryon is directing.

Of the five completed pictures, Warner alone accounted for two. The cast for the first, "The Walking Dead," directed by Michael Curtiz, includes Boris Karloff, Marguerite Churchill, Warren Hull, Ricardo Cortez, Barton MacLane, Henry O'Neill, Joseph King, Paul Harvey, Robert Strange, Joseph Sawyer, Eddie Acuff, Edmund Gwenn, Ruth Robinson, Addison Richards, Kenneth Harlan, Miki Morita and Adrian Rosely.

The second feature, "Apple Sauce," directed by William McGann, will present Ross Alexander, Anita Louise, Kathleen Lockhart, Richard Purcell, Joseph Cawthorne, Alma Lloyd, Mary Treen and Craig Reynolds.

Paramount completed "Woman Trap," in which will be seen Gertrude Michael, Akim Tamiroff, Samuel Hinds, Dean Jagger, George Murphy, Roscoe Karns, Russell Hicks, David Haines, Julian Rivero, Sidney Blackmer, Edward Brophy, Bradley Page, Arthur Aylesworth and Henrietta Burnside. Harold Young directed.

At Radio "The Indestructible Mrs. Talbot" was completed. Ann Harding and Herbert Marshall are featured, supported by Margaret Lindsay, Walter Abel, Ilka Chase, Hobart Cavanaugh and Edward Ellis. Stephen Roberts directed.

"It Had To Happen," finished by Twentieth Century-Fox, has George Raft, Rosalind Russell, Leo Carrillo, Arline Judge, Alan Dinehart, Astrid Allwyn, Andrew Tombes, Arthur Hohl, Paul Stanton, Stanley Fields, George Irving, Nina Campana, John Sheehan, Thomas Jackson and Clay Clement. Roy Del Ruth directed.

Off to the Races

"If we hold up in the stretch . . . (I mean the last week) . . . we should romp in breezily . . . (I mean without trying) . . . four lengths ahead . . . (I mean four days under schedule). . . ."

That's how thoughts of the ponies at Santa Anita are mixed with film production during these days in Hollywood. The whole town is off to the races.

Bing Crosby, Leon Gordon, Dave Gould, Robert Riskin, Clark Gable, William LeBaron, Louis Lighton, Joe E. Brown, David Butler and John Meehan are only a few of the studio folk who are owners of horses.

It is too soon to estimate what the lure of the pari-mutuels will do to local theatre grosses.

Eastbound

Trains and planes continue to carry Hollywoodites to New York. Recent departures were B. P. Schulberg, Edward Halperin and Jack Fier. . . . Twentieth Century-Fox will release "The Country Doctor," starring the Dionne Quintuplets, to 300 theatres on March 20, which will set a new record for prints. . . . Russell Birdwell is the new publicity director for Selznick International Productions succeeding Joseph Shea, who resigned. Mr. Birdwell is a former Los Angeles newspaper man and film director. . . . Joseph M. Schenck has confirmed reports that he is, negotiating for the purchase of the remaining 58 per cent in National Theatres, which is owned by Chase National Bank. . . . The American Society of Cinematographers met in two sections, first cameramen in one group and seconds and still men in the other, for the purpose of hearing formal announcement of the voiding of ASC's five year contract with the studios. The organization has agreed to pay current quarterly dues out of its treasury which members owe to I. A. T. S. E. ASC will also pay initiation fees of members not formerly connected with IATSE.

THE KEYSTONE 20th CENTURY FOX OF YOUR FUTURE

INDUSTRY LOOKING TO CONTINUANCE OF GAIN IN EARNINGS IN NEW YEAR

Business Leaders Cite Trend Toward More "Big" Pictures and Increased Employment as Good Cheer for Exchequers

Some 42 of the industry's topnotch leaders in production, distribution and exhibition voiced to Motion Picture Daily an almost unanimous opinion of optimism for the film business in 1936, predicated principally on Hollywood's promise to supply product of the high type that has made its appearance in recent months.

Engaging at the turn of a new calendar in their reflections of the passing year as it affected motion picture progress, and in predictions of what they personally believe lies ahead for the industry in the new year, leaders in the business are generally of the opinion that the appreciable gains made during 1935 presage a new high for films in 1936, from the standpoints of earnings and quality.

The opinion of optimism appears to prevail everywhere in industry executive ranks, based on the expectations of more "bigger" pictures and increased employment generally, making for increased public purchasing power.

A greater opportunity is seen for show business by Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing Corporation.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars will be unloosed for new theatre construction and for the reopening and rehabilitation of existing structures, according to John Balaban, pioneer midwest circuit operator.

The united effort of all producers toward better product, says Gradwell Sears, western and southern Warner Brothers sales manager, obligates all distributors to see that pictures reach the public ably sold.

Reporting that theatre attendance records repeatedly were broken in 1935 by improved production, Felix F. Feist, general sales manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, sees no recession in the next 12 months.

Historical Trend, Says Laemmle

The trend is seen by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures, as growing toward biographical and historical films, with virtually all companies participating. On the other hand, Mr. Laemmle sees the music cycle on the wane.

David Loew, vice-president of Hal Roach Studios, warns leaders to avoid their errors of the past year.

The agitation created by the churches and women's clubs which resulted in improved product is something which W. S. Butterfield, pioneer Michigan circuit operator, is thankful for.

Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, recognizing that the various companies now are on a sounder financial basis, sees a good year ahead for all corporations.

Music will help in 1936 to make the screen the great foreign ambassador once more, in the opinion of Mary Pickford, president of United Artists and this because music is generally understood.

Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers Pictures, holds that the entire industry benefited by the larger interest and respect won for films by the production in 1935 of such pictures as Shakespearean classics.

An upset of the dualling practice is looked for by Samuel Goldwyn, producer.

Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board of Paramount Pictures, believes that the unusually large number of box-office pictures for release in the new year will give added vigor and strength to the film industry in general.

Equally vigorous in his predictions of healthy returns is Winfield Sheehan.

M. A. Lightman, president of Malco Theatres, circuit in Tennessee, feels that the industry will plod along through 1936 pretty much as in the past. However, he believes that the producers now realize the necessity for good pictures.

Independents' Status

The independents are seen in an enviable position by Harry H. Thomas, president of First Division, who credits their progress to the tendency of the large companies to turn their attention more toward Class B films.

Hollywood will contribute largely to increasing profits, Sam Katz, Metro producer, promises.

Andrew W. Smith, Jr., eastern and Canadian sales manager for Warner Brothers, hopes that a firmer control of the industry by and within itself will be effected, and that arrangements will be made among the different studios that will place in a particular story the star best qualified to play in it. He hopes, too, for a cutting down of double bills and their eventual elimination.

The new year looks more promising to John D. Clark, general sales manager of Twentieth Century-Fox, than the past four years. Theatre business has shown a special improvement, he adds.

Hal Roach, producer for MGM, points to the lack of pessimistic expressions by exchange men and exhibitors as a sign of the times.

Up to Hollywood

Benjamin B. Kahane, president of RKO Studios, says that the future is up to Hollywood.

The independents finally are reaching their own place in the industry, according to W. Ray Johnston, president of Republic Pictures, who points to their creation of abundant production talent as presaging further progress in 1936 by the independents.

Good pictures, "clean" pictures will continue to benefit from the new audience which, it was proved in 1935, exists for them, comments Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the MPPDA. He hopes that the trade may be impressed during 1936 with the fact that it is in the business of making, selling and exhibiting motion pictures and not dealing with chinaware, baby carriages and lucky chances.

The present recovery has, in the opinion of Abram Myers, chairman of Allied States, the aspects of high living costs, high operating costs, and the temptation to expand not wisely, but too well.

The rebirth among independents also is hailed by Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president of United Artists. He looks to further internationalization of motion pictures.

Accelerated Pace of Theatre Construction Looked For; Settlement of Trade Practices Within Industry Urged

Major Albert Warner, vice-president of Warner Brothers, sees a continuance of the improvements made in standards of writing, acting, direction and production.

There will be no diminshing of box-office returns in 1936, predicts James R. Grainger, general sales manager of Universal Pictures.

One of the big tasks ahead is the acquiring and developing of new screen personalities, according to Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board of Twentieth Century-Fox.

Color also is seen by Ernst Lubitsch, managing director of Paramount production.

The motion picture is fully entitled to reap the rewards of the progress it made during the depression, in the opinion of Al Lichtman, who sees "smooth sailing ahead."

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film, predicts a revival of real showmanship in merchandising and the elimination of bargain sales and novelty "comeons."

The public is showing a greater willingness to support a higher level of entertainment, says Joseph Bernhard, president of Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporaiton.

Some of the biggest profits in box office history are seen ahead by George Weeks, general sales manager of GB Pictures.

Artistry in Product

The most welcome satisfaction to J. Robert Rubin, vice president of Loew's, Inc. and of MGM, is the strongly furnished evidence that pictures of striking artistic merit are commanding more and more responsive audiences.

Herbert J. Yates, president of Consolidated Film Industries, is as optimistic as most other leaders, predicting substantial progress.

The new year will find as an established fact the public's order for a change in production, according to Irving Thalberg, executive producer of MGM.

Jesse L. Lasky, president of Pickford-Lasky Productions, says that the need for a fresh crop of personalities for the screen should be stressed.

Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA, notes the technical, artistic and social gain of films in 1935 and predicts a continuance of this progress.

Edward A. Golden, general sales manager of Chesterfield Pictures, urges the industry to stay out of the courts, to treat disputes within the industry.

The producers will come into a new prominence in 1936, predicts Edward Small, vice-president of Reliance Pictures, because of new and more daring experiments.

Because audiences are becoming more critical, producers will aim even higher in 1936, promises Pandro Berman, associate producer of Radio Pictures, with story and acting quality stressed.

The general business upturn is seen by Jules Levy, vice-president of RKO Radio Distributing, as aiding the industry in producing better films, due to their increased earning capacity.

Arthur A. Lee, vice-president and general manager of GB Pictures, forecasts a "boom" year for theatres.

FIVE OUT OF SEVEN BRITISH THEATRES SEAT 1,000 OR LESS; 20 CENTS AVERAGE

Best British Films, Worst Foreign Shown by English Companies; Best Foreign, Worst British by Outside Companies

The most complete summary of the British film industry so far accomplished is to the credit of Simon Rowson, M.Sc., in a paper read to the Royal Statistical Society in London entitled "A Statistical Survey of the Cinema Industry in Great Britain in 1934."

Assembling all possible official returns and supplementing them from figures specially collected in trade quarters, Mr. Rowson, who is chairman and joint managing director of Producers Distributing Co. (U. K.) Ltd., and a former director of Gaumont-British, has provided a picture of the industry in all its branches which provides importers with a working estimate of the second largest film market in the world.

Several unexpected facts are revealed by the paper.

Seventy per cent of British theatres are of less than 1,000 seating capacity and that such houses provide more than half the total seating capacity of the country.

That 27.92 of all cinema admissions were to seats priced 6d. and 7d. (12 and 14 cents) and that 80 per cent of patrons pay 1/- (25 cents) or less are other facts revealed.

The "average" British admission is shown to be 10.3d (approximately 20 cents).

Exhibitors have shown more British films than is compulsory under the Cinematograph Films Act—26.4 per cent, against a statutory 15 per cent in the year ended September 30, 1934.

"The best British films and worst foreign films have been distributed by British companies; the best foreign films and worst British films by foreign companies," says Mr. Rowson.

Only one importer has handled more British films than the law demands; the excess of British films over statutory minima is due to native enterprise, figures show.

The main conclusions to be deduced from Mr. Rowson's exhaustive consideration of the data, which in its entirely runs to more than 20,000 words, are to be found in the following extracts from his paper:

" . . . Total admissions in 1934 were about 957 millions, or at the rate of 18,300,000 per week; the total gross box-office receipts were about £40,950,000; and the average price paid per seat was 10·3*d*. . . . For persons aged 15 and upwards, the average works out to nearly 30 visits every year.

" . . . 42 per cent of the entire cinema admissions are in respect of seats for which the charge last year did not exceed 7*d*., inclusive of Entertainment Duty, and this year did not exceed 6*d*.; and that another 36½ per cent. paid not more than 1*s*. Nearly four out of every five persons visiting the cinemas pay not more than 1*s*. (including duty) for admission."

"The best months are very clearly evident. January comes first, followed by October, April and September. A marked depression was observable in March (which in 1934 included Good Friday), probably accounted for to a marked degree by the influence of Lent. In the months of June and July the weekly attendances dropped to from 13 to 13½ millions a week, which is only 72 per cent. of the annual weekly average and only 61 per cent. of the January average.

"There were, at the end of 1934, about 4,305 cinemas in Great Britain containing 3,872,000 seats, or an average of 900 seats each. Adopting an estimated total population of 45½ millions in 1934 there was a cinema for every 10,600 persons (men, women and children) and one cinema seat to every 12 persons. If children of less than 15 years are excluded, these figures become 7,940 and 9 respectively."

Estimated Average Weekly Cinema Attendances During Each Month of 1934

	Percentage of Receipts from Entertainment Duty*	Average Weekly Attendances (Millions)
January	9.3	21.6
February	8.0	18.7
March	9.2	17.8
April	8.9	20.8
May	7.8	18.3

September	8.6	20.8
October	9.2	21.4
November	9.5	17.8
December	7.6	18.5
	100.0	18.3

The figures in this column are for months ending on the last Friday. Where there are five Fridays, therefore, the months consist of 35 days; in the remaining cases the months are of 28 days. Sundays, Good Friday and Christmas Day are deducted to give the final number of weekdays.*

"More than one-half the seating accommodation in the cinemas throughout the country will be found in houses containing less than 1,000 seats, and the number of these houses is more than 70 per cent of the total.

Five-Sevenths 2,000 Seats or Under

"Five out of every seven cinemas provide not more than 1,000 seats each and the remaining two-sevenths provide the balance of nearly one-half of the total seating in the country.

"The proportion of small houses varies from 31 per cent in the London area to over 70 per cent in Wales (North and South), closely followed by the West of England with 66 per cent. After London, the largest proportion of seats in houses with more than 1,500 seats each, is to be found in the Home Counties, Scotland and Lancashire. The medium size of house is found in greatest abundance in the counties between the Trent and the Tweed."

Gaumont-British theatres totaled 331 in 1935, those of Associated British Picture Corporation (formerly British International) 225 houses, the report said.

"The cinema demands of the population in the London and adjacent areas are apparently satisfied by the erection and maintenance of one cinema for each 12,000-15,000 of the population. In the Midlands the figure falls to 10,800, in the Lancashire area to 8,800 and in South Wales to 8,000.

Rowson Finds Annual Admissions Total 957 Millions, Paying $204,750,000; 4,305 Theatres Have 3,872,000 Seats

302 New Theatres

"Since Jan. 1, 1932, the new cinemas built have numbered 302. Of these, 87 are to be found in the London Postal area and the Home Counties, 39 in the West of England, 37 are in the Midlands and 39 in Scotland. Out of the 288 new cinemas whose seating capacity is known, no fewer than 88 or more than 31 per cent of the total have more than 1,500 seats each, and 86 have not more than 800 seats each.

"The total number of new seats is 351,500 and represents 9 per cent of the total now existing in Great Britain, and of this total nearly 50 per cent are to be found in houses of more than 1,500 seats. The London and Home Counties have contributed most to this result, the figures being 75,800 out of the total of 175,500, or 43 per cent of this total. Scotland also is a comparatively large contributor."

"The number of 'feature' films (i.e. in both cases meaning dramas and comedies more than 3,000 ft. long) was 667 registered and 690 passed by the censors, in the year ended March 31, 1935. This is a close enough agreement having regard to the difference in the year-ending. The registrations indicate that the 667 feature subjects consisted of 190 'British' and 477 'foreign.' It should be remembered that the term 'British' as applied to registrations has a meaning sharply defined by the Act. It may include films satisfying certain statutory conditions made in any part of the British Empire. It may also exclude certain films made in Great Britain which do not satisfy those conditions. Despite these restrictions it is nevertheless true that, with very few exceptions, all the 'British' films were made in Great Britain and all the films made in Great Britain were 'British.' It follows, therefore, that 28.5 per cent. of the number of feature subjects and more than 27.5 per cent. of the length, were British. The mistake must not be made of assuming that these figures will also represent the proportions of films shown to the public. This would be true only if the frequency of exhibition of films in each of these categories was the same in both cases.

"Approximately 1,000 miles of negative are required each year, divided between 'shorts' and 'longs' in the approximate proportion of 2:9. This proportion is now appreciably less than in the years 1928-9 to 1930-1, when the proportion was as high as 2:7."

The deficiency shown in this case was met by a special and permitted arrangement made with Associated British Film Distributors, Ltd.*

"The very striking fact disclosed by this table is the closeness with which all the foreign companies (with one exception) succeeded in registering exactly the quantity of British film which accorded with their quota liability. On the other hand, nearly every British company produced its British films in quantity far in excess of their statutory liability, and probably entirely without any regard to that liability. The British firms were, in fact, concerned with the development of the new home industry."

Annual Percentages of British to Total Film Shown by Exhibitors During the Past Three Years, And Comparison with Statutory Quota

Year ending Sept. 30	Exhibitors' Statutory Quota	Actual Quota of Films Screened
		All Films	Long Films	Short Films
1932	10	21.60	24.27	5.13
1933	12½	23.70	26.20	5.26
1934	15	26.10	28.4	6.67

"In each year the exhibitor has shown from 70 to 120 per cent more British film than, by law, he was obliged; and so far as the principal item—'long' films—is concerned, the excess has been from 90 to nearly 150 per cent. Only in the category of short films has there been a consistent inability to show sufficient British short films to satisfy the quota liability for short films independently. . . . There is food for serious reflection in the fact that exhibitors are now screening fewer short films than two years ago, the average decline during the last two years being at the rate of 390 million feet per year—entirely foreign.

"These tables seem to contradict the assertion, very prevalent among exhibitors, that the quota has proved onerous and should be drastically amended either by abolishing the quota altogether or by cutting it in half. . . . . It must be abundantly clear that such grievance as exists would clearly tend to disappear with every increase in the number of good films.

"In the year ending March 31, 1934, there was registered 3,884,000 ft. of foreign and 1,275,000 ft. of British film of all kinds. Turning next to the exhibitors, returns for the year ending September 30, 1934, these gave 26,800 million feet of foreign film, and 9,460 million feet of British film. Thus the average screenings of the foreign film must have numbered 6,900 and of the British film 7,420 times. Assuming an average run of three days to each booking, and the average number of screenings as being three times daily, these figures indicate that the foreign films were booked to an average of 767 cinemas and the British films to an average of 822 cinemas. These figures appear to me to demonstrate quite conclusively the superior general attractiveness of the British film to British exhibitors and, presumably, to British audiences.

"The total number of paid admissions in 1934 to cinemas in Great Britain was 957 millions.

"The amount paid by the public for these admissions was £40,950,000.

"Of this sum about £6,800,000 was deducted on account of the Entertainment Duty then in force.

"The average price per seat was 10·3*d.* (including duty).

"The average number of times which every British film was screened in the last year was 7,420; the corresponding figure for every foreign film was 6,900."

FACTS OF BRITISH SCREEN INDUSTRY

Yearly admissions to British cinemas were 957,000,000 in 1934, paying $204,750,000, according to the Simon Rowson estimates.

Weekly patronage was 18,500,000; 42 per cent paid 12 cents or less; only 20 per cent paid above 25 cents.

There were 4,305 film theatres, seating 3,872,000, and more than 70 per cent of the theatres had less than 1,000 seats.

Each British picture is screened 7,420 times on the average; imported subjects, 6,900 times.

No Change at the Roxy

Notwithstanding the death of Sydney S. Cohen, there will be no change in the management of the Roxy theatre in New York, Howard S. Cullman, trustee, said last week. Mr. Cohen was a partner in Artco, which has a management contract with Mr. Cullman, and also had been an advisor to the Bondholders' Protective Committee.

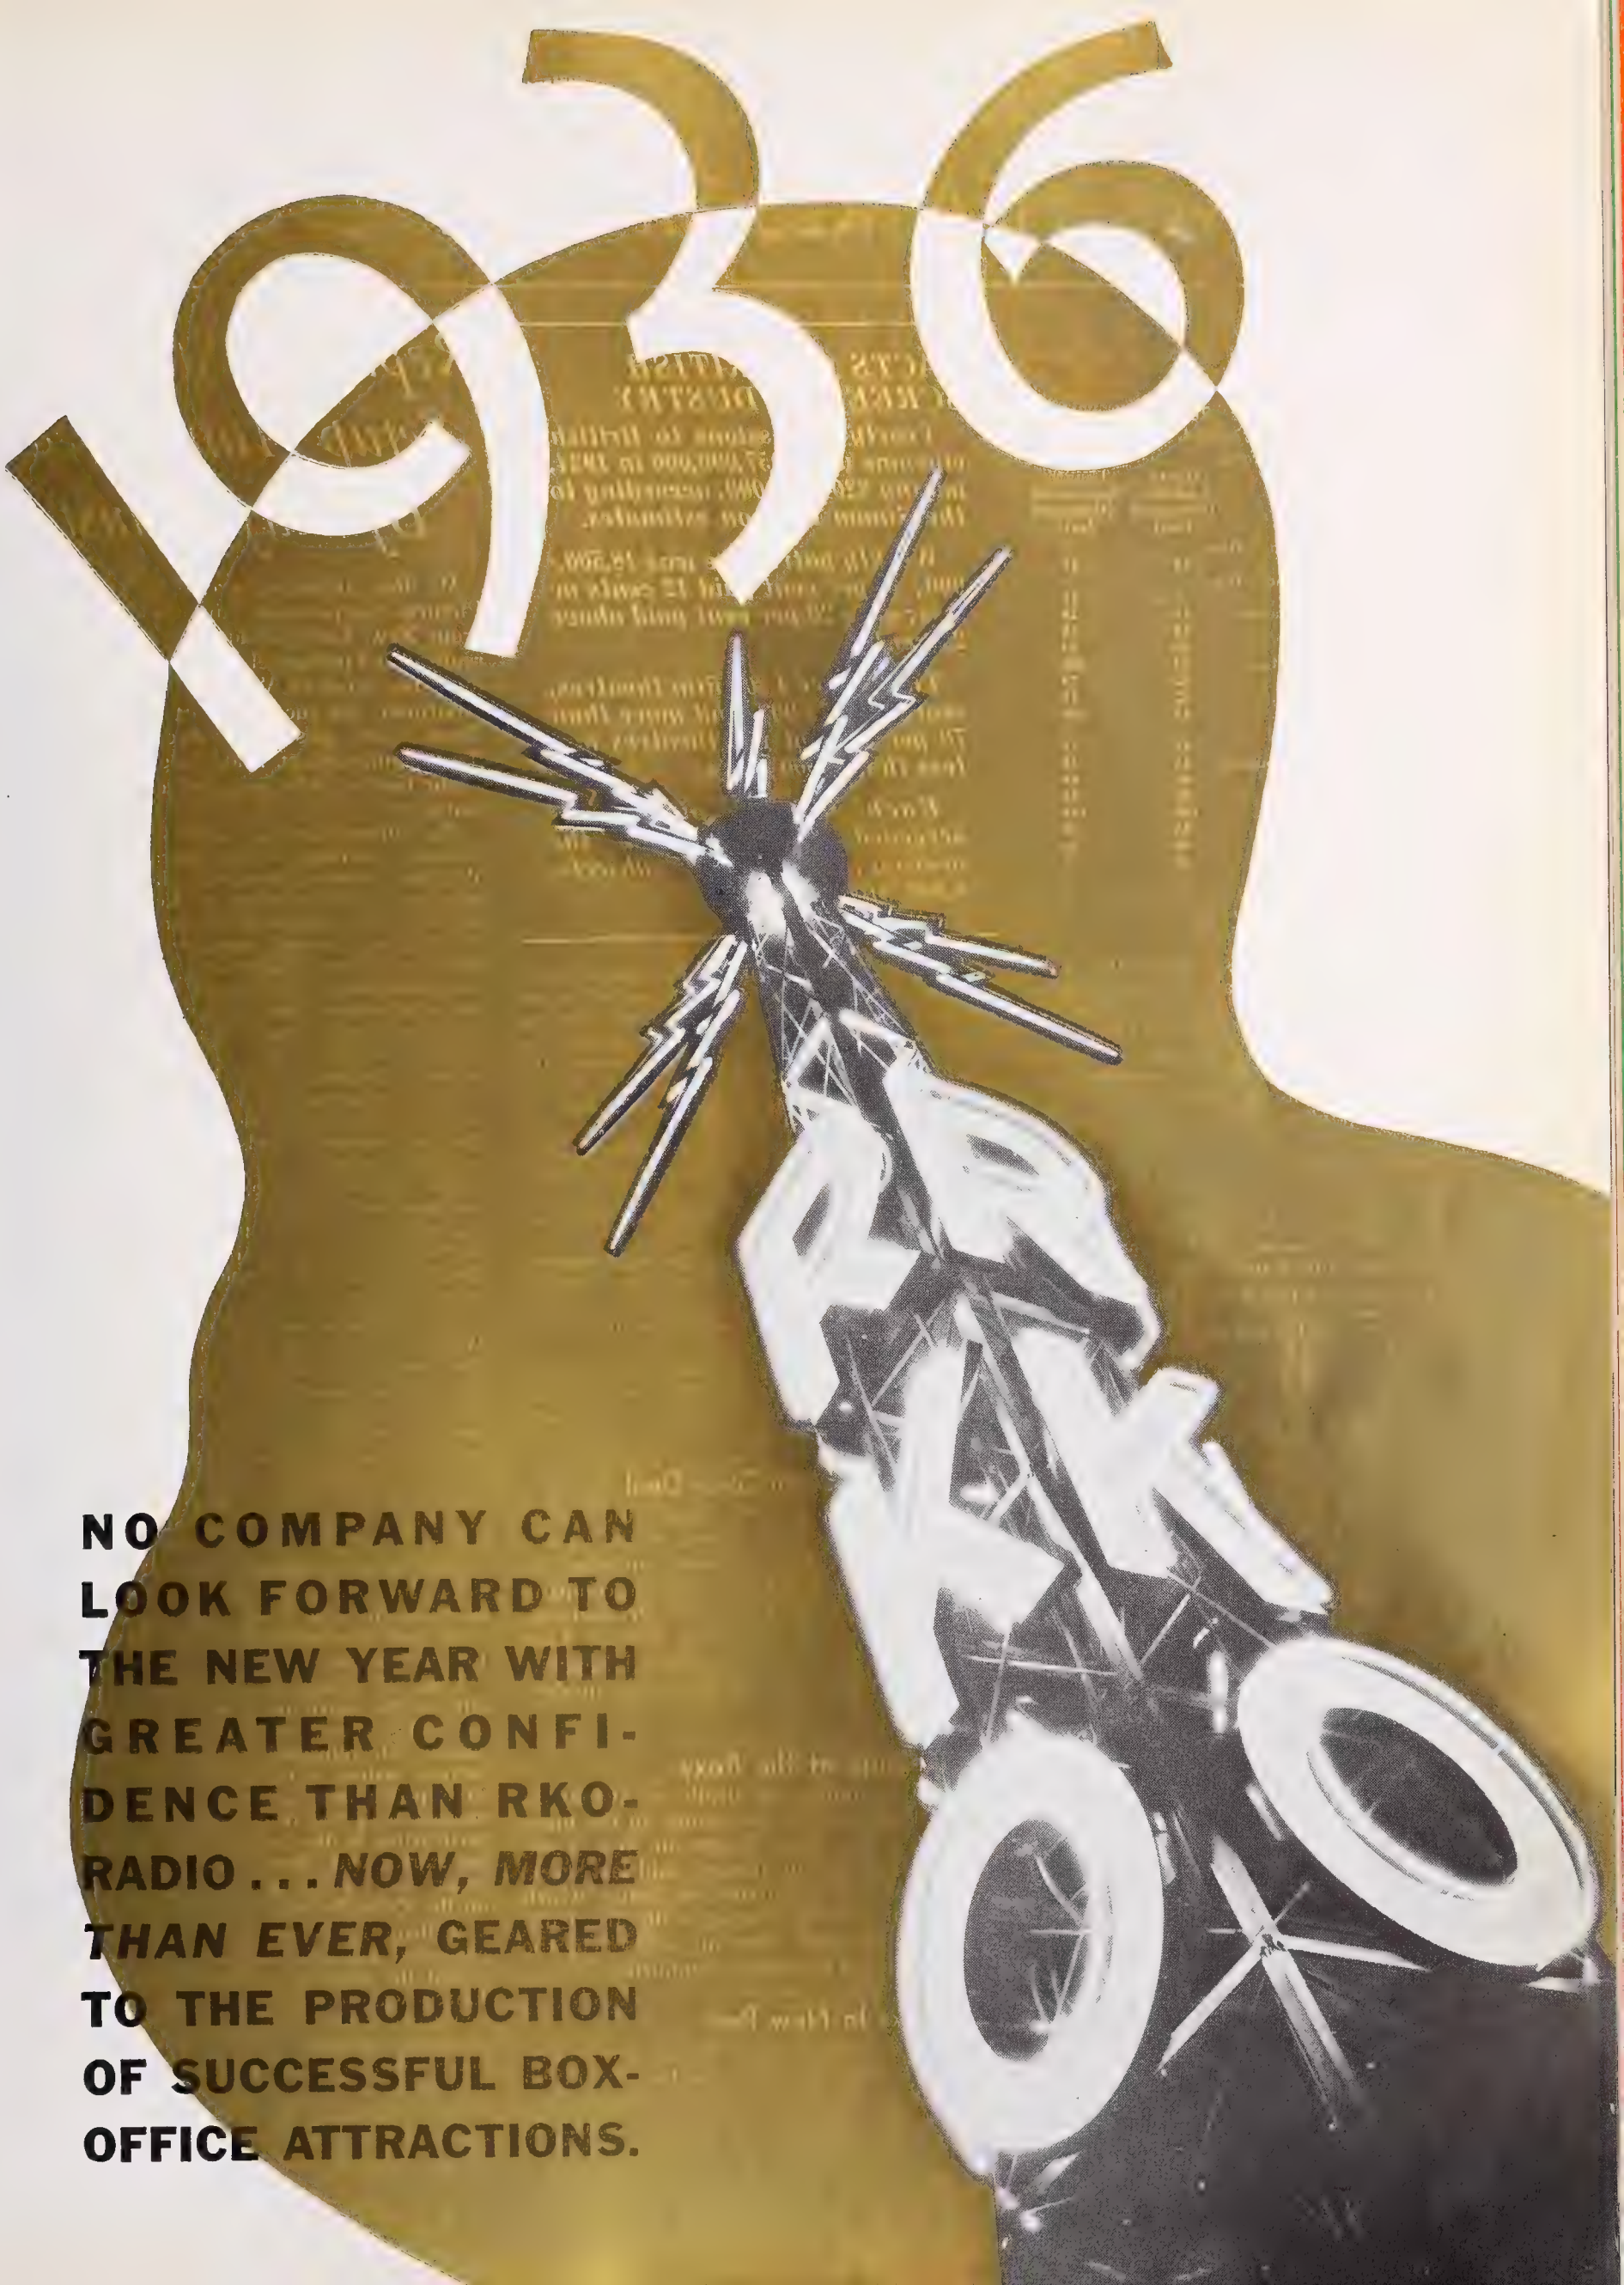
Robert Fairbanks was officially named last week as studio manager of the Twentieth Century-Fox Westwood studio. Various executives have managed the studio since the resignation of J. J. Gain.

Republic Staff Setup Announced By Ray Johnston

W. Ray Johnston, president of Republic Pictures Corporation, announced this week from New York headquarters the complete reorganized personnel, following the appointment last week of Walter Vincent as board chairman, the succession of Nat Levine to Trem Carr's post of production head, and the appointment of Budd Rogers to succeed Eddie Golden, who resigned as general sales manager.

The officers are as follows: Walter W. Vincent, chairman of the board of directors; W. Ray Johnston, president; Nat Levine, vice-president (and president of Republic Productions); E. H. Goldstein, vice-president; Norton V. Ritchey, general manager of foreign department; Morris Goodman, sales manager of foreign department; Edward F. Finney, director of advertising and publicity; Nat K. Loder, treasurer; Budd Rogers, general sales manager eastern division; Jack Fier, sales manager western division; Sam Hacker, manager of contract department; John S. Harrington, manager of print and accessory department; Russell Bell, art director; Lindsley Parsons, west coast publicity director.

The planning and operating committee of the company will consist of: W. Ray Johnston, chairman; Joe W. Coffman, E. H. Goldstein, Norton V. Ritchey, Morris Goodman, Budd Rogers, Edward F. Finney, Nat K. Loder and Sam Hacker.



The executive and advisory council consists: Walter W. Vincent, New York; Herman Rifkin, Boston; W. Ray Johnston, New York; Nat Levine, Hollywood; C. C. Ezell, Dallas; Irving Mandel, Chicago; Arthur C. Bromberg, Atlanta; J. S. Jossey, Cleveland; Floyd St. John, San Francisco; Norton V. Ritchey, New York; Herman Gluckman, New York; Joe W. Coffman, New York; Oscar Hanson, Toronto; Nat K. Loder, New York and E. H. Goldstein, New York.

Nat Levine, production head, is back on the coast after consulting Mr. Johnston and other associates in New York, concerning story material and production plans for the balance of the current season.

Louis S. Lifton, in charge of exploitation, left for the coast for a two week's conference with Mr. Levine, on story material for next season. On returning from Hollywood, he will become eastern story editor. Mr. Lifton went to Republic from Liberty when that company merged with the newer organization and has been active in the industry for 13 years, having started with Metro. He is a former newspaper man, and at one time held a staff position on the Paris Tribune.

William L. Peirce, for a number of years connected with important coast newspapers, has joined the publicity staff of Ed Finney. Mr. Peirce was formerly in Hollywood handling newspaper and syndicate material as well as magazine contacts. At one time he was connected with the Hubert L. Voight publicity agency in Hollywood.

Albert E. Levoy, general production manager, announced the elevation of David Silverstein and Mrs. Wallace Reid to supervisory ranks.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Philip Scheuer from Hollywood tells how one of the more hightoned actresses became greatly taken with the customs and manners of early Spanish California, and, concomitantly, of its neighbor, Spanish Mexico. Happening to dine with some friends at an atmospheric establishment up California's coast, its patio redolent of Don days, she was driven to raptures by the delicate flavor of the piece de resistance—a plate of beans! They were, she assured her companions, a chef d'oeuvre of such quality as the Spanish conquistadors of yesterday had smacked their lips over, and she hoped everyone was properly impressed. Every one was.

Carried away by her own eloquence the lady who had gone Spanish in a hi-falutin' manner then summoned the proprietor to her tableside, and as her own guests looked on, demanded that he provide more, much more, of the same dish for a party she was throwing in Beverly Hills, within the week.

To his purred objections that such an undertaking would require unheard-of expense, plus the dispatching of a retinue of trucks, cooks and possibly ovens from Santa Barbara to Beverly—a distance of some 100 miles—she returned that expense was no object, and in fact the least of her worries.

And so, indeed, it proved to be as expensive as the prediction of the restaurant proprietor. When the great night for feasting came, the assembled guests were treated to such a feast of Mexican beans as the hidalgos themselves would have savored with gusto; beans brown and bubbling from piping ovens shipped C.O.D. from Barbara to Beverly. So resounding was the success of the repast that the news reached even the ears of the catering proprietor, 100 miles away, who shared in it vicariously, but nonetheless happily.

Weeks, as a result, passed before he could bring himself to confide to his intimates what the lady star herself, unless she reads this, will never know: That the beans were, except for some incidental pepperings at the hands of a kitchen butcher, substantially as they had been when they were put up in cans by an American manufacturer of some sixty varieties of foodstuffs.

Lowell Thomas, by virtue of his news narrations both in Fox Movietonews and on the radio receives well over 200,000 fan letters a day—not including bills. This bulky load of correspondence consists for the most part of goofy questions from goofs. Typical goofies are these:

"Did the widow of the unknown soldier ever get married again?"

"Will you kindly tell us why it is so desirable to have the cockles of the heart warm?"

"According to the World Almanac, Wilmington, Delaware, has three more women than men. Would there be any way I could find out who the three extra women are?"

"Well," answered the horse trainer, "Mose got dis yere letter from his gal, boss, but he kain't read, so he gets me to read it for him, but stops up mah ears so ah kaint hear what his gal done writ him."

A HOLLYWOOD EXTRA PAGES GARBO, GABLE, et al

by JAMES J. MONTAGUE in the 'Herald-Tribune', New York

Sometimes I'm a part of an army;
  Sometimes I am part of a mob;
But few films you would see
If it wasn't for me—
  I simply must keep on the job.
When actors are gathered together
  You'll find me in every group;
But I garner no fame
And I win no acclaim,
  I'm only a Hollywood "supe".

Today I am cast as a pirate,
  And pitch people over the rail.
Tomorrow, perhaps,
I'll be tricked up in chaps,
  And follow the Oregon Trail.
But whether afoot or on horseback,
  Or a part of a crowd in a hall,
I always shall know
That wherever I go
  I shall be just a super, that's all.

But what would the films do without me?
  Somebody must carry the spears;
Somebody has got
To be right on the spot
  To furnish the shouts and the cheers.
If it wasn't for me and me buddies
  To make the empyrean throb,
And boldly engage
In battles off stage,
  No actor could hold down a job.

We hear by the electric grapevine running out of Rockefeller Center that the Radio Corporation of America has in hand a rather unusual request. A wife-and-mother wrote in from her small home-town in Pennsylvania that she had a son in high school who wasn't learning as much as he should. For this reason she wished to get some information, cost, etc., regarding the Magic Brain which RCA manufactures for its radios.

"Senator" William P. "Bernie" Bernfield in Kansas City, pushed his chair back from his United Artists exchange publicity desk the other day, cocked his feet at a slant, and asserted flatly that the story is true.

Some years ago when Bernie was selling film out in the Kansas prairie land, he dropped in to see an exhibitor. It was very, very cold.

"How's business?" Bernie asked Mrs. Exhibitor, by way of opening conversation.

Mrs. Exhibitor waved at some empty seats, "You can see for yourself."

Bernie peered about for a minute, and then his eyes lighted on the screen.

"Why," he said, "I do believe your pictures are actually sticking to the screen as if they had been glued!"

Mrs. Exhibitor stood back and surveyed the screen critically. "Why, I believe you're right. I'd never noticed before. As a matter of fact, I never look at the screen. What shall I do?"

"You ought to get some heavy screen oil and rub it off."

"We'll have to do that," Mrs. Exhibitor said worriedly. "Will you step in at that supply store in Kansas City and have them send us some?"

"Gladly," said Mr. Bernfield, in his most polite manner. Whereupon he retired to the sanctuary of his hotel to meditate.

A yes-man is reported to have been fired in Hollywood for absent-mindedly replying "Maybe."

Ripples of laughter greeted some of the expert testimony at the copyright infringement trial brought by W. A. (Bud) Wilkie against Santly Brothers, music publishers, and Bernice Petkers, who claims her song, "Starlight," is an original and was not thefted, as charged, from Mr. Wilkie's "Confessing." The hearing was proceeding in the somber United States district court in New York, Alfred G. Coxe presiding.

Louis Nizer, executive secretary for the New York Film Board of Trade, and counsel for large distributors, as attorney for Mr. Wilkie, was interrogating Fred E. Ahlert, composer and expert counsel for the defendants, in cross-examination. Mr. Ahlert sought to prove by his testimony that the two songs were not similar.

"If there is any difference, what is it?" Mr. Nizer slyly questioned Mr. Ahlert.

"One is based on the chromatic scale, and the other on the diatonic scale," said the expert.

Mr. Nizer was flabbergasted.

Then another expert, a Mr. Behrend, was placed on the stand. With the dignity befitting the former concert master for Gilbert of the famous team of Gilbert and Sullivan, this gentleman also attempted to prove there was a vast difference between the two songs.

"One," he said, in all seriousness, "is harmony melodized. The other is melody harmonized."

Mr. Nizer quit on the spot.

Professional Soldier

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy

As long as kids are kids, whether they are six, sixteen or sixty, there should be a ready market for this kind of a show. Although the title suggests that it might be one of those marines-have-landed affairs, it actually is decidedly otherwise. In every way, idea of story, the way it is told, style of acting, the dialogue, action and situations make it nothing but belly-laugh comedy. Geared to provoke laughter, pretty much has been made of logical production formula. Things are done the other way. In fact, the picture's opening episode, entirely irrelevant to the balance of the performance other than to introduce one of the leads in a characteristic belt-'em-around fashion, is stuck on just to present a personality of whom the producers have high future hopes. Nevertheless what happens and how, in a technique that blends first principles of picture making with the most uptodate, had the paying preview customers loudly expressing their enjoyment.

In the yarn, professional soldier Michael Donovan is engaged in trying to prevent expatriate American, Foster, from spending enough money in Paris to pay the war debt. Though the band plays "Halls of Montezuma," an entertainer sings and dances "Joan of Arkansas," which is only an excuse for Donovan to wallop about fifteen people. Hired by revolutionists to kidnap a mythical king and guaranteed $50,000, Donovan, like any other marine probably would, refuses to have anything to do with it when he finds the monarch is Peter II, a ten year old youngster. But $50,000 is a lot of money and when the king thinks Donovan and Foster are a couple of notorious American gangsters, he insists the plot go through. Then the fun begins, and resourceful Mike has a problem on his hands.

Dressed in a football suit the King wants to play baseball, but does so much like an Englishman plays cricket. The fun of the episode embellishes that of the chase escape sequence in which a couple of Rolls Royces spare the horses. Mike teaches the king to shoot craps and loses everything but his shirt. He entertains him while in exile with fabulous tales of his soldierly accomplishments which the king is smart enough to deride. Captured by revolutionists, Donovan and Foster are sentenced to a common firing squad execution as the king is doomed to die only as story book kings die. But not for nothing has Mike been a soldier. Escaping jail in slapstick fashion, he grabs a machine gun and, carrying it, wipes out most of the revolutionary forces and single handedly captures the rest, shooting the arch conspirator Gino.

Returning Peter to his throne, Mike next appears in a Marine uniform, pushes a few medals aside to make room for another and as the band agains plays "Montezuma" marches off to further adventures while everybody forgets about the $50,000 reward.

Pure fun, moving in a way that vividly suggests that McLaglen, Bartholomew and all the rest had a lot of fun while making it, it should prove a tasty tidbit for those who like to laugh and don't care how the laughter is provoked. It should have the kids standing up cheering and those more mature who are supposed to be a little dignified undoubtedly will have more than a little difficulty restraining their mirth.

Previewed at Grauman's Chinese Theatre, Hollywood deluxer, on a Saturday night. The audience, which included many studio people, gave vent to their enjoyment by applauding many times and walking out of the theatre talking about the show, its personalities and the refreshing manner in which the feature was put together.

The Ghost Goes West

(London Films-United Artists)

Satirical Fantasy

Originality is certainly Alexander Korda's middle name. Here the man who proved that costume could be box office very pleasantly demonstrates the even more unexpected truth that a phantom can be a film star. Robert Donat, doubling the roles of twentieth century Donald Glourie and of his disembodied predecessor Murdoch, of the 1,700's, has most of the screen and it's a fact that he catches the eye most pleasantly when he is the kilted youth who passed out 200 years ago.

This Glourie Ghost is no ordinary spook. He materializes in nightly shifts by which you could set your watch. He retains a liking for the ladies which is restrained only by the warning voice of his departed father. He goes to America and is feted. He ceases to be earth-bound as a result of proceedings in a Scottish castle in Florida constituting one of the most effective screen comedy finales in years. He looks like a box-office draw.

The peculiar flavour of the film, directed by the French screen satirist René Clair, of "Le Million" fame, is only faintly to be deduced from a recital of episodes, yet an account of the plot does indicate something of its imaginative freshness—it is remembered that Clair never loses grip of material which might easily have degenerated into near-slapstick.

Murdoch Glourie, last son of the last chief of a fighting clan, is killed while he is dallying with the maidens instead of fighting the English. His father, who passed out earlier, speaks from space and condemns him to haunt the family castle until he redeems himself by tweaking the nose of one of the MacLaggan, hereditary enemies of his family.

In the present day, Donald Glourie, last of the line, sits in the ruined castle with only creditors and the family ghost for company. Peggy Martin, spoiled daughter of a rich American business man, likes the castle, and Donald, and persuades father to buy the first and engage the second to superintend its re-erection in Florida.

On the liner bound for New York, the ghost, still bound to the dismembered stones of the old castle, does his haunting act as best he can with cabin doors as substitutes for the walls he must tap nightly. It's a big story for the ship's press man and the news is flashed to New York that a real Scottish spook is about to dock. A civic reception is arranged and brass bands escort through packed streets Martin's party and an empty car labelled: "Reserved for the Ghost."

All this publicity for Martin peeves Bigelow, another magnate who is bringing back to America nothing but a Swiss chalet. He does his best to discredit Martin's ghost, assisted by the fact that "Murdoch," running into a gun fight at the docks, has tearfully complained: "I don't like America," and been given permission, by his father's disembodied voice, to remain invisible.

The big test comes at the inaugural party at Martin's reconstructed Scottish-Floridian mansions, where the guests are greeted by searchlights, radio laid on to the figures of armoured knights and "Scots" music piped by buck Negroes in kilts. An empty chair is left for the Ghost, and Martin has persuaded Donald to impersonate him, in order to discomfit Bigelow. Things go wrong and, glorying in Martin's failure, Bigelow boasts that he himself is a better Highlander through his mother, a Mac Laggan. That is the signal for "Murdoch" to materialize with a whoop. Bigelow is chased and cornered, his nose is tweaked, and the ghost is laid.

Where there are audiences receptive to the essentially satiric flavouring of the story, "The Ghost Goes West" is a subject of excellent possibilities. The broad humour of the "ballyhoo" for the ghost, and the caricature of American new-rich infatuations with Europe are material for all classes. Donat's personal charm has certainly never been better used than in this dual role, with a soft Scots burr to give it flavour. It's a point that Scottish communities should find the joke a particularly good one.—Allan, London.

Jungle Expedition

The third Frank Buck production differs from its predecessors in the absence of so-called brutal scenes. In "Bring 'Em Back Alive" and "Wild Cargo" sequences of animal fights highlighted the picture. In the present version of Mr. Buck's expedition in the Malayan jungle such scenes are eliminated and only three, a scene wherein a tiger chases a native up a tree, another when a python catches a native unawares and coils around him, and thirdly, a scene showing a tiger attacking a baby rhinoceros, approach the prior releases in this respect.

The photography is excellent and on a par with that in the other two pictures and is the work of Nicholas Cavaliere and Harry E. Squire. Mr. Cavaliere was also responsible for the photography on the other pictures. Mr. Buck throughout the picture describes the scenes in a well modulated voice. The music score picks up during the absence of Mr. Buck's voice from the screen.

Exploitation directions will be determined by the situations and experiences of the exhibitor in the handling of the previous Frank Buck pictures.

Besides the aforementioned scenes there are thrilling captures of tigers and pythons, wholesale roundups of wild monkeys, a giant crocodile caught with nothing more than a pole, and there is an exhibition of the markmanship shown by Mr. Buck in bringing down a thick branch and a coiled python, with a minimum of shots. As usual Mr. Buck is more interested in capturing the animals alive than dead and while he is forced to kill at times the majority of the animals were caught alive and we are told, are now in the United States.—MOONEY, New York.

Distributed by RKO Radio. Produced by Van Beuren Corporation. Directed by Frank Buck. Narration by Frank Buck. Photographed by Nicholas Cavaliere and Harry E. Squire. Edited by Stacy and Horace Woodward. P. C. A. Certificate No. 0,736. Running time, 68 minutes. Release date, December 20, 1935. General audience classification.

Comedy

There isn't much in the way of outstanding name value in this picture, but there is in it plenty of comedy entertainment for any kind of audience, particularly the family type. Fundamentally it's the kind of show that exhibitors who really like to sell their attractions should revel in. The values it provides, both for exploitation requirements and audience necessity, are where they should be—on the screen. They are present to such an extent that an audience half way in the mood to scoff found itself whipped into a spirit of enthusiastic appreciation.

The picture is actually an hilarious delineation of many misadventures involving every character listed. Starting in a way that cleverly conceals what is to happen, providing much amusing entertainment as it runs its course, it preserves and conceals its real smash until the climax sequences. Capably directed with an intelligent consideration of what showmen and the mass public demand, the story itself and the manner in which it is acted, particularly by the central character, Beryl Mercer, is the thing that really counts. Though the title suggests something weird and eerie, there's none of that quality to the show. Similarly, though it motivates through the experiences of three ex-soldiers, it is not a war picture, that atmosphere coming only in the inclusion of a few montage combat shots.

The picture is localed in London, timed to the Armistice. Jones, Spoofy and Gubbins arrive home to find they are listed as dead. Though Mrs. Gubbins welcomes Jimmy home, her happiness is tinged with tragedy as the money-mad old lady realizes that his insurance payments will be cut off. Her grief is further tempered when she recognizes in Jones an American whom investigator Bolton has told her is a wanted man for whom there is a big reward posted. She'll make good for the loss of Jimmy's insurance money by turning him in. Harried by the exploits of shellshocked kleptomaniac Spoofy, she is also unmindful of Jimmy's pleas as she is of those of Ann, who carries the show's slight romantic thread with Jones.

The production is to be sold for the fun it provides and the excellent individual performances offered. Giving ordinary audiences what they like, solid substantial comedy entertainment, it also places in the hands of exhibitors the responsibility of selling it to their patrons along lines that capitalize that value. Offering scores of opportunities for tricky showmanship, aggressive exploitation men should be able to do much with it.

Previewed in Fox Ritz Theatre. First-run neighborhood house. The audience reacted enthusiastically.

Comedy Romance Drama

Showmanship angles with which to sell this picture shouldn't be difficult to find. They're present in sufficient number to suit even those who desire the utmost diversity. They're to be found, and all ready for quick and effective adaptation in featured names, story idea, production values. In a surprising manner they are present in the new but not altogether unknown personalities who will be seen in the picture. One should find it a simple task to pick them out of the production's comedy, drama, music, dancing, situations and spectacular sequences. All are included in a manner so that they can be talked about to inspire more than ordinary patron interest.

Essentially the show is a comedy romance drama, which as the title suggests is of a honky-tonk burlesque producer who visions that the road to wealth and fame lies in dolling up the old burlesque technique against a background of class and glamour.

It naturally can't hint very much at the laugh packed comedy that Oakie, abetted by Arline Judge, contributes. Little is made evident of the romance and drama that has a real human interest content revolving around Warner Baxter, Alice Faye and Mona Barrie. Nothing is said about the spectacular features, particularly the merry-go-round and flying trapeze numbers. Then there's the line of dancing by Dixie Dunbar and a flashing footed youngster, Gareth Joplin. Ratoff's comedy offers much for laughter and the numbers featuring Fats Waller and his band, Nick Long, Jr., Shaw and Lee, the Paxton sisters and Kenny Baker are definite entertainment and selling values.

As what exhibitors need to concoct a lively, bubbling, publicity campaign is presented from opening title flash to final sequence, opportunities to engage one's attention should be restricted only by how much one desires to work plus elasticity or limitation of the exploitation budget. The spirited campaign informs the public of the show's tone and character.

Previewed in Grauman's Chinese Theatre, deluxe Hollywood first run house. Though the audience numbered a large percentage of producing studio and professional people, the paying customers found much in the picture to excite their enthusiasm.

The Widow from Monte Carlo

(Warners)

Comedy

Here is the story of a handsome widow who, seeking to escape the pesterings of her aristocratic in-laws, found herself in a stranger pickle when she encountered an adventure in love and got mixed up with a pair of social climbers. The locale is England; characters with one exception, a comedy relief American gangster, are presumably English. Essentially, comedy is the show's character.

Seeking a change from her humdrum existence, Inez runs out on her dignified and icy relatives, Lord and Lady Holloway and Lady Maynard, for an evening's fun at a gambling casino. There she meets Major Chepstow, and it's mutual admiration at first sight. The situation becoming known to their ladyships, they summon Eric, whom they are determined Inez shall marry.

Comedy, together with the value of featured names, is the angle that appears to be the best available to sell the picture. Average in caliber, however, it will need the benefit of other support if best box office results are to be obtained. —MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

U. S. SOCIAL SECURITY LEGISLATION NOW EFFECTIVE; NEW REGULATIONS

Every Employer of Eight or More Subject to Unemployment Tax; Employees Also Must Aid Old Age Pensions

New Year's day marked the first decisive step taken in America's first nationwide program of social security which will cost exhibitors, distributors and producers, and employers in all other industries, hundreds of millions of dollars in taxes for unemployment compensation and for pensions for the old. At the same time additional regulations governing the tax on payrolls that is provided by the federal Social Security Act were made public in Washington by the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The great majority of theatremen appeared until a few days ago to be either unaware of the far-reaching scope of the new social security legislation or did not know what it means to them as employers.

Under the additional regulations that were made public this week, every employer of eight or more persons is required to keep, during each calendar year, such permanent records as are necessary to establish the total amount of remuneration payable to his employees in cash or in a medium other than cash, showing separately the total remuneration payable with respect to services excepted by Section 907 (c), the total remuneration payable with respect to services performed outside of the United States and the total remuneration payable with respect to all other services.

Under Section 907 (c), the term "employment" is not to include agricultural labor, domestic service in a private home, ship crews, service performed by an individual in the employ of his son, daughter or spouse and service performed by a child under 21 in the employ of his father or mother, government employes, state employees or employees of exclusively religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational purposes.

Must List State Contributions

Employers' account records are also to show the amount of contributions with respect to employment during the calendar year paid into any state unemployment fund, showing separately payments made and not deducted (or deductible) from the remuneration of employes; payments made and deducted (or deductible) from the remuneration of employees, and payments made with respect to services excepted by Section 907 (c).

The records of employers are also to show such other information as will enable the United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue to determine whether such employers are subject to the tax and, if so, the amount thereof.

"No particular method of accounting or form of record is prescribed," it is stated in the regulations. "Each person may adopt such records and such method of accounting as may best meet the requirements of his own business, provided that they clearly and accurately show the information required above, and enable him to make a proper return on the prescribed form.

"Records are not required to show the number of individuals employed on any day, but must show the total amount of remuneration actually paid during each calendar month and the number of individuals employed during each calendar month or during each such lesser period as the employer may elect.

Records Open to Inspection

"Any person who employs individuals during any calendar year but who considers that he is not an employer subject to the tax, should be prepared to establish by proper records (including, where necessary, records of the number of persons employed each day) that he is not an employer subject to the tax.

"All records required by these regulations shall be kept safe and readily accessible at the principal place of business of the person required to keep such records, or at such other place or places as the commissioner, upon written application by the person concerned, may approve. Such records shall at all times be open for inspection by internal revenue officers, and shall be preserved for a period of at least four years from the due date of the tax for the calendar year to which they relate."

Regulations covering the tax for old age insurance, which becomes effective in 1937, probably will not be announced until near the end of 1936.

A further effect of social security legislation on the motion picture was threatened this week when the idea of levying sales taxes on luxuries—possibly on theatre admissions—to support the social program was suggested in Washington by Chairman Buchanan of the House Appropriations Committee. This would be in addition to the existing 10 per cent federal admission tax and the various admission, sales and other taxes now being collected from exhibitors by the states and municipalities.

Such levies as suggested by the Texas representative would be substitutes for the taxes on payrolls and employes that are now provided.

Two Insurance Systems

Concluding a comprehensive study of the social security problem, the New York Times last Sunday pointed out that basically the act, signed by President Roosevelt last August, set up two nationwide insurance systems: one against old age and the other against unemployment. But, the Old-Age Insurance Law, based on equal payments by employer and employed, will not go into operation until January 1, 1937, and no old-age pensions will be paid until 1942. The unemployment insurance tax, however, became effective this week, and benefits will be paid out of the insurance fund during and after 1938.

The administration of unemployment insurance provides that, reckoning from January 1, 1936, every employer of eight or more persons, with certain exceptions, must pay a tax of one per cent on his total payroll. In 1937 this tax will be raised to two per cent. In 1938 and thereafter it will be three per cent, although an employer may be granted a lower rate if his employment record or his reserve funds justify it. In other words, he can be rewarded for keeping his employes on the payroll. He cannot, however, deduct any part of the tax from the employe's wage or allow the employe to contribute.

Direct to Federal Treasury

If the state in which the employer conducts his business has no state unemployment insurance system he will pay his tax directly into the federal treasury. If the state has an insurance law meeting certain uniform federal requirements he will receive a rebate of 90 per cent. He must, however, pay the full federal tax on employes insurable under the federal law but not provided for in the state law. This tax, levied for 1936, will not fall due until January 31, 1937.

Funds collected by the states under state insurance plans will also be remitted to Washington, but will be placed, with a separate account for each state, in the Unemployment Trust Fund of the United States Treasury. The money in these accounts will be paid back to the states, for unemployment compensation only, as need arises. No state, however, will receive from the trust fund more than it has paid in, plus accrued interest, and no money paid into the fund by one state will be used in another state.

The Social Security Act provides for a federal appropriation of $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and of $49,000,000 for each year thereafter. This sum will be allotted to the states, presumably in proportion to the number of employed who are eligible for insurance, and will be used for administrative purposes. It is not a gift, for the 10 per cent tax on state contributions will be more than enough to reimburse Washington for this expenditure.

According to an estimate made by the Social Security Board, which, under the chairmanship of John G. Winant, has general charge of the federal program, there were, in 1933, 14,611,000 insurable workers in the United States, and if the three per cent tax had been in effect during that year the total of payments would have been $528,060,000. In 1929, a year of relatively high employment, it would have been more than $1,000,000,000.

The intent of the federal law is to bring pressure on the States to pass unemployment insurance acts without delay, to protect the funds thus created and to insure fair and honest administration.

FETE 22D ANNIVERSARY OF "THE SQUAW MAN"

Cecil B. DeMille, who directed "The Squaw Man," was host at a luncheon on the Paramount lot in Hollywood Saturday in celebration of the 22d anniversary of the first feature length production completed in Hollywood.

William Farnum, who played the title role, was at the observance. Louise Saint Cyr, who had the part of Red Wing, was unable to attend because of stage and lecture activities in New York.

AMERICAN FILMS MAINTAIN LEAD IN EASTERN EUROPE, ASIA MINOR

Problems Presented in Several Countries by Restrictions in Favor of Local Production, by the Recent Quota Laws

by ENDRE HEVESI
Budapest Correspondent

A mixed market, for the most part favorable to American product but with handicaps presented by increasing attention to local production, quota laws, restriction of money exportation, and low rates of exchange, faces distributors in Central and Western Europe and Asia Minor, as the new year opens, according to Beno Slesin, Warner district manager for the whole of Eastern Europe, the Balkans, the Baltic countries, Palestine, Syria and Egypt.

Following is a summarization of the situation as pictured to me by Mr. Slesin:

Austria—American films have made much headway.

Hungary—A strict currency decree practically prevents exportation of money.

Poland—A very good market calls for 300 American pictures annually.

Czechoslovakia—Importation of American product was resumed this year, but vast unemployment leaves the people with little money for entertainment.

Rumania—A good market is somewhat offset by the low rate of exchange and the fact that no money may be taken out of the country.

Yugoslavia — American pictures have been getting a stronger foothold but most of the profits goes into taxes.

Greece—This very good market is free from currency restrictions.

Bulgaria—Practically all American companies have closed their local branches.

The Baltic States — American local branches have been dissolved.

Finland—An excellent market is featured by so high a standard of the conduct of business that a phone agreement is as valid as a strictly drawn contract.

Egypt—Vigorous business activity reflects an ideal market.

Turkey—American companies have no local branches.

Palestine—Three-fourths of the 200 annual releases are American.

Syria—While a small market, American product synchronized in French is preferred.

"American films," Mr. Slesin said, "still dictate the standard in international film trade, despite the growing national film production which has now started in many countries. It is we who set the standard, which has fallen in all the countries where we American companies have closed our local branches. Not every American film is good, of course, and many of the American films which satisfy the American public are flops in most European countries. Films showing typical American life, chiefly country-town life, are rejected over here as its problems, its characters and its humor are entirely lost on the European public. The cowboy films fall, too, in the bigger cities, and only the more unpretentious public of smaller towns seems to enjoy them. Films bringing real box office success over here are the ones of real literary value, or the witty, sophisticated films, or spectacular, brilliantly equipped revues.

Gangster Pictures Draw

"And, curiously enough, another type of film draws long files of spectators into movies—the gangster film. This appeals not only to the lower classes, but also to the intelligent picture-goer in most European countries. The following story is strikingly characteristic of the motives inducing a cultured man to enjoy the thrilling gangster films.

"In a big Yugoslavian town I recently met an acquaintance of mine, a clever and cultured lawyer, who told me that he had just seen a gangster film for the second time. He also explained why: 'Life is so difficult that one often feels the sudden impulse to hit, to fight, to destroy. Being a civilized creature, one naturally represses this impulse, but what a relief it is to see people fighting and hitting on the screen at least!'"

'This explanation might sound a bit too Freudian," said Mr. Slesin, "but I think it may be right."

Following is Mr. Slesin's analysis of conditions in the countries within his jurisdiction:

Austria

This German-speaking country was naturally the best market for German films. They are still imported, but owing to their inferior quality they have not the same chance in Austrian theatres as before. On the other hand, American films have made much headway, as many theatres which had not presented American pictures at all are now continually showing them very successfully. The Austrian producers complete 20 films annually and these naturally mean good successes for local markets. But Austria's 780 theatres require at least 400 films a year, and the local film industry, and the German films which hardly are shown, cannot cope with these demands.

German propaganda films are prohibited in Austria, and the inferior product is rejected by the exhibitors, so there is little left of really high quality, so that, at a rough estimate, about 200 films, the half of the total demand, may be imported from America.

The local film trade is at present no serious rival to American films, nor does it promise to be. Austrian films are produced according to Aryan requirements in order to comply with German standards. However, if producers strictly bear in mind the German demands for indisputably pure Aryan race origin of actors, directors, technical experts, and so on, they are not able to produce more than 20 films a year.

Of the American films the Austrian public prefers those with little dialogue and much action.

There are no business difficulties. The import is free except for the kontingent tax to be paid on distributed prints, which costs 1,560 schillings if the titles are made abroad, and 1,200 schillings if they are made in a local laboratory. In case of two prints, 2,160 sch. and 1,800 sch. are to be paid. Foreign currency to pay the licenses and prints is easily obtainable, and there are no difficulties whatever concerning film payments.

Opposition to German Propaganda Product Widens Market for Pictures from U. S., Dictating Standard of Quality

Hungary

This is an extremely difficult market owing chiefly to the strict currency decree which makes it almost impossible for local branches of American companies to take money out of the country. The other difficulty which American film companies have to cope with is the decree in accordance with which 10 per cent, and from January on 15 per cent, of the films shown must be Hungarian or locally synchronized in Hungarian. American distributing companies are collectively against such synchronization for two reasons. For one thing, it does not pay to have films synchonized for Hungary only. Then again, Rumania, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia refused for political reasons to admit films synchronized in Hungary even though the Hungarians living in these countries would gladly welcome them. Secondly, if American companies should start synchronizing their pictures in Hungarian, other smaller countries would demand the same thing, citing the Hungarian example.

There is a growing local film production in Hungary, a growing problem, according to Mr. Slesin. A Hungarian picture, in order to be profitable, must not cost more than 100,000 pengös. But more often than not this limit is exceeded by 25,000 or 35,000 pengös, and so they do not bring even an average profit. Thus the distributor can make his business profitable only by selling imported films along with the local product at a higher price than they would have fetched without a Hungarian film. But even at 125,000 or 135,000 pengös no film of high quality can be produced, and dozens of weak films, all much of the same pattern, have flooded the market, with the result that the public is already beginning to be fed up with them.

The taste of the Hungarian public is refined and American companies would be wise to import really first-rate products only, which would be sure to pay. Distributors have had the worst possible season from a business point of view. Whether it will pay for American companies to have branches at all in Budapest, or will be preferable to drop them, as in Czechoslavia, the next six months will tell.

Poland

This very good market requires 600 films a year. The German pictures have lost their market in Poland, for although the government is friendly to Germany the population has not much sympathy with Hitler's regime and its films. Besides, three million Jews are living in Poland and most of the film trade is in Jewish hands. About 300 American films are needed annually in Poland, for its own local production is small, about 15 films a year. Another reason for good business possibilities is the fact that Poland has many first-run theatres, twelve in Warsaw and from four to six in several other towns. In Austria and Hungary only the capitals have big first-run theatres.

Poland imposes a high duty on positive prints of imported films but hardly any on the negatives. American companies import negatives and complete the prints in Polish laboratories.

Czechoslovakia

In February, 1935, importing of American films was resumed. It is a very good market, but owing to the vast number of unemployed, people have little money to spare for entertainment. Import is free now except for a censorship on quality. The National Bank grants currency only for films of high quality which have passed the censor. The price of the kontingent ticket is 20,000 Czech crowns.

Rumania

All distributors here are under kontingent restrictions and the number of films imported is based on the import of the previous years. About 350 films are required annually, 250 of which are American. German films have lost footing and only the really first-rate ones find exhibitors. Austrian films, however, are popular and very profitable. On the whole, the Rumanian market is good, but there is no real profit to be made, owing to the low rate of exchange of Rumanian currency. Besides, no money can be taken out of the country, and the National Bank issues no currency for the purchase of films.

Yugoslavia

This small but healthy market has 170 theatres and requires 300 films annually, about 200 of which are American. Import is free and currency for films is obtainable from the National Bank. However, most of the profit goes into taxes, for there is an entertainment tax of 33 per cent on every ticket sold in bigger cities and 28 per cent in smaller ones.

Greece

Here is an extremely good market, its 200 theatres needing 300 films a year, 200 of which are American. (Some are shown synchronized in French.) The other 100 films are French, English, German and Austrian product. For American films this is a very advantageous market without any currency restrictions. German and Austrian films, on the other hand, are paid by means of clearing contracts only. The theatres are doing well.

Bulgaria

A very small market, there are only 40 theatres. Currency is not available at all. American companies, with the exception of MGM, have closed down their local branches.

The Baltic States

Latvia, Lithuania and Esthonia have no commercial significance as far as American motion pictures are concerned. No money can be taken out, and all American local branches have been dissolved. Only German and French pictures are exhibited.

Finland

An excellent market is available here. No written contract is needed; an agreement made over the phone is just as valid as a strictly drawn contract in other countries. The 300 theatres exhibit about 300 films annually. German films have suffered a setback owing to their inferior quality.

Egypt

This is the ideal film market with no kontingent requirements, no taxes on foreign companies. Out of the 300 films required annually 250 are American and they rule the market. The remainder are German and French. Business is vigorous.

Turkey

American companies have no local branches here; it isn't worth their while. They only sell licenses for local distributors.

Palestine

Of the 200 pictures released annually, 150 are American. The others are English and Austrian. German films are naturally not admitted, but recently a movement has been started aiming at prohibiting Austrian films as well, which are produced much on the same lines as the German films employing pure Aryans only.

Syria

This market prefers American films synchronized in French.

"Rose of the Rancho" Benefit

Mrs. Vincent Astor has named an entertainment committee consisting of Lucrezia Bori, Elsa Maxwell, George Burns, Gracie Allen, Eddie Duchin, Jimmy Durante, Abe Lyman, George Jessel and Eve Symington in preparation for the opening of Gladys Swarthout's "Rose of the Rancho," her first picture, at the New York Paramount theatre January 7th. The committee has taken the entire house that night at advanced prices, proceeds to go to the Musicians' Emergency Relief.

Pope Lauds Bishops For Legion Results

In a cablegram to all Catholic Bishops in the United States, Pope Pius XI has felicitated the Roman Catholic hierarchy for the Legion of Decency movement, initiated two years ago in the interests of films of higher moral standard. The cablegram was signed by Cardinal Pacelli, Secretary of State of the Holy See, and referred to the recent renewal of the Legion of Decency pledge by Catholic congregations.

The cablegram said:

"It is requested that this message be communicated to all Ordinaries. On the eve of the Sunday designated for the renewal of the pledge of the Legion of Decency, the Holy Father, moved by the deep conviction of the immense power of motion pictures for good or evil and the vital necessity for the continuance of efforts to cleanse and improve the screen, gladly seizes this opportunity to felicitate warmly the American Bishops upon the magnificent results already achieved through the admirable spirit of union and solidarity shown by all dioceses in their aims and methods, so essential to lasting success.

"With fervent prayer that, under the auspices of the Immaculate Mother of God, Pledge Sunday may result in a veritable plebiscite proclaiming the undying vigor of Christian moral principles, the Sovereign Pontiff from his heart imparts to the entire American episcopate, to priests, religious promoters and pledge signers his paternal apostolic benediction."

Marchetti Expands Distribution Abroad

Major Roger Marchetti, west coast attorney and counselor for American motion picture interests, returned from London Tuesday after a hurried trip to British studios.

Major Marchetti consummated reciprocal arrangements with British studio executives which assure more amicable relations between American and English motion picture producers and distributors.

Agreements were arrived at whereby American producers will have a far wider market for distributing their product in the British Empire, and the product of Great Britain's makers will find a greater outlet in the United States, the Major reported.

A plan has also been worked out whereby American artists may be exchanged for British stars for use in England, and the British artists made available to producers in Hollywood at reasonable salaries.

Major Marchetti will remain in New York for several days before proceeding to the Coast, holding temporary headquarters at the Waldorf-Astoria.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 4: (Answers copied directly from the Bluebook will not be considered. Put your answers in your own words). (A) What is meant by an air gap; a shunt; racing; a polarity switch; overshooting? (B) What serious condition is induced by worn motor or generator bearings? (C) What is meant by "angle of refraction?" (D) To what is depth of focus proportional?

Answer to Question No. 291

The answer to Bluebook School Question No. 290 will appear next week. Question No. 291, answered herewith, was: (A) Assuming the screen to be well protected from light, accept of course that from the lens, and its surroundings to be black for 19 inches, shading into gray, and further out not too light colors for ten feet on either side, with no lights on the front wall, what illumination is recommended for the auditorium? Screen lighting at center 13 foot-candles. (B) Is or is it not good policy to provide seats beside the motion pictre projectors? (C) Is white or amber color light best for use in the auditorium?

I don't quite know what happened, but I find the file contains no answer from the engineers to any of these questions. It has been my procedure to relay the questions to the engineers each time as soon as the list is formed, and to file their answers when received. Either a cog slipped this time or no answers were returned. I therefore must answer them myself, with the understanding that my answers merely represent my own views, formed, however, from long years of study and observation. If our engineers or any of the Bluebook School students object to my observations, I shall be well pleased to hear from them.

(A) In my judgment no value can be fixed in foot-candles, for the reason that any illumination measured thus depends for its effect, at least to a considerable extent, upon the color of th auditorium walls, ceiling, et cetera. If for example we fix a foot-candle standard of illumination, we then must also fix the value of the light from scources other than the lens, including light reaching the screen from auditorium lights, either direct or by reflection.

Moreover, the light reflected from screen surroundings and the front wall, as well as from glare spots has a decided effect upon the appearance of the screen image to the eyes of observers. I therefore hold that in order to effectively standardize auditorium illumination we must standardize everything that affects vision of the screen image by patrons of the theatre.

That is not all, for in order to secure the same effect in different theatres, not only must auditorium illumination and all those other things named be standardized, but screen illumination also must be, or else we must name a standard of auditorium for every variation in screen illumination, because with, for example, a 15 or 17 foot candlepower screen-center illumination, a decidedly higher auditorium illumination is possible than with a lower one. viewing distance remaining the same—assuming the effect to patrons to be equal in all cases.

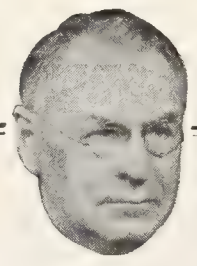
Gentlemen—including the SMPE committee—having this matter under consideration, I don't believe any single standard of auditorium illumination can be recommended for all theatres. What I regard as the most practical suggestion made up to this time is that auditorium illumination should be such as will enable persons of normal eyesight to find seats with reasonable comfort after a period of two minutes in the auditorium. A very loose definition, truly, but perhaps as close as we shall be able to come to the correct values until auditorium conditions themselves have been at least to some extent standardized, rather than as now left to the fancy or ideas of architects and others, many of whom are not too well posted upon the optics of motion picture theatres.

(B) My view is that there should be a good seat—a stool will serve—anchored in immovable position beside each projector; also there should be no other seat permitted inside the projection room. My reason for this is very simple. Projectionally it is near-criminal for a motion picture projector to be permitted to operate with an audience present and no projectionist beside it. It is not only bad, but very bad in every respect.

There is absolutely no valid objection to a seat beside the projector. The idea that men standing will be more alert may have some value in a way, but of what value is their alertness if a film breaks and they are ten feet away from the projector? If they are beside the projector, "alert" or not, they can and will become alert in less than one-tenth of one second if anything happens, and they are right there all ready for business. In a theatre of my own I would install at least a cushioned stool beside each projector. The projectors can be handled just as well and effectively from a seated or from a standing position.

(C) I myself believe a fairly light amber light to be best. Its effect on the picture (light striking screen, I mean) is not so great. It will affect the blacks far less than white light and not affect the whites perceptibly. Moreover, the effect of any glare spot of white is very measurably reduced if the light be changed to amber.

I think it best not to embarrass some very excellent projectionist students by publishing the very few answers to this one that could by any stretch of imagination be called correct, or even acceptable. Out of more than 900 answers, only seven "got past," and three of even these just squeezed past, but lost some skin doing it.



(A) William C. Brown, a South Dakota man, says: "As I did not know the recommended illumination for auditoriums I referred to my new Bluebook of Projection and found it to be 0.18 foot-candles. (SMPE recommendation. See my remarks.—F. H. R.) This is sufficient to enable patrons to find seats and read programmes."

Messrs. Evans and Rau, British Columbia, say: "Auditorium illumination should be such as will provide sufficient light while the show is running that patrons may find their way to seats with comfort. This may be provided by having a two (2) watt white light for every 100 square feet of floor area, the same to be evenly distributed and with the screen and patrons' eyes well shielded from the rays. Auditorium clearing light should not be less than one watt per square foot of floor area."

All of which is set forth without comment. It may be right and probably is approximately so.

(B) W. C. Brown says: "A seat beside each projector is not only good policy but also a necessity. A projectionist can attend to his projector just as well and efficiently seated beside it as standing. Seated he is subject to less fatigue and fatigue tends to lower efficiency in his work. Moreover, a seat tends to encourage the projectionist to remain beside his projector, where he should be."

(D) A surprising number of projectionists favor amber light for auditorium illumination.

IMPROVED RECEIPTS AND PRODUCT LEAD THE PARADE IN REVIEW OF 1935

Acceleration of the forward movement of theatre receipts as well as in standard of product from the studios gave a more sprightly tempo to the business of the motion picture in the outgone year. The biggest money making star of the 1934-35 film year was Shirley Temple. In the field of the courts, outstanding was the acquittal of Warner-First National, RKO and Paramount in the criminal anti-trust action at St. Louis. The year also saw the coup de grace administered painfully yet none the less effectively to the National Recovery Administration by the United States supreme court decision in the Schlechter case, the lowly chicken proving mightier than the Blue Eagle. The Paramount reorganization was finally approved; Joseph M. Schenck and Darryl F. Zanuck moved Twentieth Century Pictures into an integral part of Fox Film; Mary Pickford became president of United Artists on resignation of Al Lichtman, who moved into the Loew-MGM sector; Stuart W. Webb resigned his Pathe presidency; John E. Otterson left Electrical Research Products, Inc., to become president of Paramount, with Adolph Zukor as chairman; Winfield Sheehan resigned from Fox; Alexander Korda became fifth producer-owner in United Artists and a member of the board; Floyd B. Odlum named Peter N. Rathvon to reorganize RKO, and Leo Spitz was made president, M. H. Aylesworth being named board chairman and resigning as president of National Broadcasting Company in favor of L. R. Lohr; J. Cheever Cowdin obtained an option to buy Universal; Neil Agnew succeeded George Schaefer as Paramount vice-president and Watterson Rothacker became production head; Sam Briskin joined RKO Radio as chief of production; Edgar S. Bloom was named Erpi president; Republic, after several mergers, ended the year with Nat Levine in charge of production and Budd Rogers sales manager succeeding Edward Golden, who joined Chesterfield. Other highlights, as revised from a compilation of Motion Picture Daily, were as follows:

CLOSES THEATRE; BLAMES CENSOR

Ray Peterson, of the Pantages, Birmingham, Ala., will close his theatre this week, laying the blame on Mrs. Horace A. Adams, city amusement inspector.

According to the Birmingham Post, Mr. Peterson charges that, "Since we've reopened, Mrs. Adams has seen fit to cut something from every show we've had. She may be an amusement inspector but she has ceased to be funny to me. What's the use for me to go out and get a real show? By the time Mrs. Adams gets hold of it she will cut out all the parts that made it a real show. I might as well close up," he was quoted.

In his complaint, Mr. Peterson refers to the sanctioning of Earl Carroll's "Vanities," which was referred to as "art" by the inspector, and which he claims contained material similar to that presented in his theatre, but which is continually eliminated.

Hearst Says Films and Autos Give Most to World Happiness

The illustration above and the editorial below constituted a full-page piece on behalf of the institution that is the motion picture as the "March of Events" page in last Sunday's edition of the New York American, in William Randolph Hearst's "Buy America" campaign. The editorial follows, in part:

"The best moving pictures, as the world knows, are made in America.

"Good moving pictures stimulate and feed the imagination, stir up the mind, promote thought.

"Besides entertainment, movies provide an inexpensive means of relaxation after a long day at the office, in the store or factory, on the farm, or in the kitchen over a hot stove.

"There are movies for boys and girls, men and women, young and old.

"Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphonies for the kiddies . . . and grown-ups, too.

"Travelogues for those who never have the opportunity to enjoy adventure in foreign lands and other places of interest.

"Newsreels for the current news events all over the world, with actual sound.

"Full-length dramatic features . . . with elaborate stage presentations . . . for those who want the finest.

"They all provide a safety-valve for any pent-up emotions and enable folks to 'live' the many romances they miss in actual life.

"The two great industries contributing so much to happiness in this world are the moving-picture industry and the automobile industry. Fortunately, America stands far beyond the rest of the world in both.

"The twenty-four million people who read the Hearst morning and Sunday newspapers are spending over four million dollars every week just to see American movies.

"They are spending one million dollars every week to get to the movies and to get back home again.

"Some go in street-cars and buses, some go in taxicabs, some go in private limousines. . . .

"They are the type of American citizens who are leading this country out of the doldrums to a new and greater prosperity . . . "

Film Companies Seek Dismissal Of St. Louis Case

Sam B. Jeffries, counsel for Warner Brothers in St. Louis, filed a petition last week in the federal court seeking dismissal of the Government's application for a preliminary injunction against the company for assertedly refusing to service three Fanchon and Marco theatres in St. Louis. Paramount, through William R. Gentry, is scheduled to file a similar motion.

As in the Radio-Keith-Orpheum petition filed two weeks ago, Warner holds that the issues involved in the civil suit are identical with those disposed of by the jury acquittal on criminal indictment charges on November 11. With the filing of three petitions, Federal Judge Joseph West Molyneaux of Minneapolis is expected to devote the entire day of January 6 to arguments by defense counsel and Russell Hardy, prosecuting attorney, on the legal status of the preliminary injunction hearing.

Neil Agnew, vice-president and general sales manager of Paramount; Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc.; Warner Brothers Circuit Management, Inc.; Vitaphone, Inc., and Harold S. Baresford were served with subpoenas in New York in connection with the suit. John E. Otterson, president of Paramount; Spyros Skouras, general operating head for National Theatres; Joseph Bernhard, president of Warner Brothers Circuit Management, Inc.; E. K. Hessberg, an assistant secretary of Warner Brothers Pictures; Jules Levy, vice-president and general sales manager of RKO Distributing Corporation; Cresson Smith, western and southern sales manager of RKO Distributing Corporation, and RKO Distributing Corporation will be served later, it was said at the United States Marshall's office.

Eight attorneys will represent the Government. Headed by Russell Hardy, the Government's legal array will include District Attorney Harry C. Blanton of St. Louis, Walter Rice, William R. Benham, Harold L. Schilz, John S. Claggett and two other Washington men. The trial is expected to last from six to eight weeks, according to legal opinion. This estimate is based on the intention of the Government to go over the same ground covered in the criminal action in addition to the period from January 11, 1935, the day indictments were handed down, to the present date.

All New York lawyers interested in the case are scheduled to arrive in St. Louis late this week. Defendants and subpoenaed witnesses from all parts of the country are expected to convene a day or two before the date of the hearing. The serious illness of Samuel W. Fordyce of the law firm of Fordyce, White, Mayne and Williams, is not expected to delay the trial. Mr. Fordyce, who was personal counsel for George J. Schaefer, formerly vice-president and general manager for Paramount, in the criminal case that resulted in a verdict of not guilty for Mr. Schaefer and all other personal and corporate defendants, was expected to participate in Paramount's part of the defense against the equity petition.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Omaha, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

If it wasn't for the gambling spirit there is in the human race there would be fewer people at a horse-race than usually attend a Sunday School picnic. The only people who particlarily care for a horse-race are the man who owns the horse and the one who has money on him. We are reminded of the fellow who was at a race once and after the race started he got up and waved his hat and yelled, "Come on somebody, come on, somebody," and a fellow turned to him and said, "What are you saying 'Come on somebody' for?" and the man replied, " 'Cause I've got money on all of 'em."

A man will shake dice with the girl at the cigar counter to win one cigar, no matter if it costs him fifty cents. If he gets one cigar free he thinks he's ahead. We shook dice with a drayman once to see which one would go and call on a brunette at the ribbon counter and that doggone guy won. Since then we have confined ourself mainly to jaw-bone poker.

The Missouri river here keeps running down stream toward Kansas City just like it always did and it divides Omaha from Council Bluffs, and only for that Council Bluffs would be quite a town. In fact, it is quite a town anyhow.

A Good Meeting Place

This town is quite a place for the theatre boys to gather. We have met a lot of them here and every one of them was sober, probably because the most of them brought their wives along. It is wonderful what a sobering influence these ladies have on them.

Joe Swobada of the two theatres in Schuyler, Nebraska, was here. In addition to being strong for the HERALD, he is also strong for good pictures and fresh buttermilk. Joe says business is picking up in Schuyler. It ought to, for Joe has a couple of theatres that Schuyler is proud of.

Ralph Faulkinburg was also here. Ralph operates two theatres in Lexington, Nebraska, and Lexington is located in the heart of the alfalfa country. Ralph says a theatre man from the New York office came out there recently and he took him out and showed him an alfalfa field, the first he ever saw. Then he showed him a farmer milking a cow and he asked, "Is that where milk comes from? I thought you had a milk brewery out here." Ralph said, "No; we get some from cows and some from milkweed."

Dale Goldie was here from Cherokee, Iowa. Cherokee is where the Cherokee Indians used to hold their pow wows, but after Dale built his theatre and began charging an admission of 35 cents the Cherokees all moved down to the Cherokee nation in Oklahoma. Cherokee is located in the best agricultural sections of northwest Iowa, and northwest Iowa is the finest agricultural section on earth (outside, of course, the Elkhorn river valley in Nebraska).

Dale must be an American citizen for he has a cutout of an American flag out over the canopy. Whenever you see that flag in front of a theatre you will know that you can always see a good show.

We know a radio star who, if he would get himself an orchestra that could play something besides imitating the squawk of a duck, the squeal of a pig and the bray of a jackass, he would put on quite a program.

That Man Micky

We saw Micky Larson here from Oakland, Nebraska. Micky operates Oakland's favorite playhouse. It was Micky who asked us once to go up to Nels Benson's apartments and help him move a piano. We went up to help him and Nels came in with something that would hold about two quarts. We asked Micky how Nels was and he shocked us by saying that Nels passed away about a year ago. That just about knocked the wind out of us, then we glanced around and saw Nels sitting close to us and laughing. Doggone that Micky anyhow.

Billy Youngclaus came in but he brought his wife along with him. Billy operates a theatre in Grand Island, Nebraska, which probably accounts for why Grand Island don't take a back seat for any town except Neligh. Billy was perfectly sober all the time he was here; in fact, he usually is, and it isn't at all necessary for Mrs. Youngclaus to keep an eye on him. We generally do that ourself when we are in Omaha.

Bert and Walter Creel operate the Beacon theatre out on the north side of town. Bert used to go to college in our home town, and while he was there he was rated a pretty fine chap, but since coming to Omaha his politics have gotten all screwed around until now he's got some funny notions in his head. Bert needs fixing.

If you have any business to transact when you come to Omaha you better transact it before you call on Bob Ballentyne and Gus Harms of the Theatre Equipment Company or you are liable to overlook it. These two boys are counted the best entertainers west of the Mississippi. They also carry a full line of theatre supplies. Bob tells the stories and Gus tells the truth.

Splendid Crops, Too

We saw Mr. Van Wey from Gothenburg. We were out there a few days ago and we saw Gothenburg but we didn't see Mr. Van Wey. He must have heard that we were coming, for when we got there we found his theatre locked up, also his house. Van says that business has been rather above the average, which probably is due to the splendid crops they have out there in the Platte valley. Gothenburg is surrounded pretty largely by alfalfa hay stacks. We counted 296 before we got to the next town.

The railroads are not hauling very much film out of here. George Rogers has beaten the railroad to it. He delivers film to the boys in a radius of 175 miles of Omaha and is giving service that the railroads can't meet.

We were told that the Victoria theatre, a suburban house, had a fire recently in the booth which burned up several reels of film and did considerable other damage to the house besides burning the operator so that he had to be taken to the hospital.

If you ever hear a crooner crooning a love song with a jazz orchestra accompaniment, be patient. Just remember what Job went through.

The other day they screened Shirley Temple in "The Littlest Rebel," and, while we didn't get to see it, we are of the opinion, from the reports, that this one is the best picture she has ever made and will most likely rank well up to the top of the season's best.

We called on our old friend Van Housan of the Western Theatre Supply Company. Van used to sell us film back in the days when they put two subjects on one reel and when "Bronco Billy" had a private graveyard of his own. We used to trade Van jackrabbits for film back before they got to making two reel features "Deluxe." Van says he has a skyoodle dog that he wants to sell the Government to use out on that "shelterbelt." Van predicts a dry season next year.

Should we not have remembered you with our Christmas greetings we trust you will remember that it goes for you with no less sincerity, and we hope that you had a Merry Christmas and that the New Year will bring to you and yours, much of happiness and prosperity.

Rhode Island Considers Tax

The General Assembly of Rhode Island, to convene next month for its 1936 session, will consider a ten per cent tax on theatre admissions proposed by its recess commission on Ways and Means. The potential tax is one of nine suggested to give Rhode Island more than $5,000,000 in the coming year. It would affect passes, it is expected, as well as regular admissions. Theatremen are lining up opposition to the plan.

CHICAGOANS MAY TURN BANKS INTO THEATRES

Twenty-five to 50 Film Houses May Develop in Buildings Formerly Occupied by Banks

by BILL CROUCH
Chicago Correspondent

Conversion of closed bank buildings into theatres may give Chicago anywhere from 25 to 50 new theatres. More than 70 corner buildings erected during prosperous years housing banks which have closed are being investigated as possibilities for theatres seating 1,000 to 5,000.

Charles Sedell, theatre and real estate promoter, has an option on eight buildings, it is understood, with plans for rebuilding into theatres, and intends to get many more.

Other concerns also are interested in the idea, which provides an opportunity for good locations in buildings suitable for conversion. There is a large demand for theatres here, with plenty of money now becoming available for remodeling on a 20-year lease basis, according to reports.

What happened to the annual "Christmas Week" business is the question local exhibitors are asking one another. Usually this seven day period brings the healthiest grosses of the year. This year the business was not up to average in most cases.

One reason was the sub-zero weather on Christmas Day. Yet, when the mercury did rise, grosses failed to follow in ratio. Stores report the largest sales in a dozen years.

The small neighborhood houses suffered a great deal. Many said releases were so arranged that the larger houses got all the breaks.

Nat Saland, en route to New York by plane, was forced to spend Christmas Day in Chicago when plane schedules were cancelled and trains were many hours late. He left the day after Christmas.

Charles Trompe, manager of the Midwest Film Exchange in Milwaukee, is Coast-bound to spend the winter.

Olsen and Johnson, comedians, opened at the Marbro this week. The lads who started on their stage careers after leaving Northwestern University played their first major engagement at the Rialto theatre on State street more than 20 years ago. Since that time they have played in more than 4,000 theatres.

"Spancs" Advance Plans

The "Spancs," new association of press agents and newspaper correspondents in Hollywood, held their third meeting in Hollywood, late last week at the Beverly Hills Athletic Club with about 40 members in attendance. A committee of six was appointed to work out additional details of the organization and another meeting was set for late this week at the Cafe de Paris on the Twentieth Century-Fox lot.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

First National

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Saved this picture for my Thanksgiving program. It lived up to all the many nice things that have been said about it in "What the Picture Did for Me." Personally I think it the best comedy production in the past two years. It is so far ahead of the other comedy features that it practically stands alone. Running time, 83 minutes. Played November 28-30.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

CASE OF THE LUCKY LEGS, THE: Warren William, Genevieve Tobin—Very good, for one day. Played December 10.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

CASE OF THE LUCKY LEGS, THE: Warren William, Genevieve Tobin—This is easily the best of "The Case of—" series. The dialogue is snappy and witty and brings many laughs. The murder mystery is well developed and intrigues and misleads as to the identity of the slayer. Played this on a double bill and it brought more favorable comment from patrons than a picture much higher rated by the critics. Running time, 77 minutes. Played December 12-14.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

GOOSE AND THE GANDER, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent—A refreshing comedy of the type that we haven't seen for a long time. While it didn't draw particularly well, it pleased everyone who came. Played December 15-16.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

IN CALIENTE: Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien—Right up my alley. Thought it a very good musical, but received divided opinions. Did only average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—It's a wow. Excellent business on this. The cash customers sure got a kick out of this picture. Played December 18.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

PAYOFF, THE: James Dunn, Claire Dodd—Fair one day. If they don't give Dunn better stories he'll soon be washed up. He will deliver if he has half a chance, but can't make good without something to work on. Played December 17.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Top notch entertainment for everyone. Drew a good business at a time of the year when nothing else is clicking and only ten days before Christmas when little is expected. Patrons think Powell improves with each picture. The supporting cast is excellent and the musical recording is the very best. This is a picture that an exhibitor can well be proud to show. Running time, 108 minutes. Played December 15-17.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

WHILE THE PATIENT SLEPT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—Not up to the average programer. Played to below average midweek business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AH, WILDERNESS!: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore—Good entertainment and well produced. Good for best days. Played December 8-9.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BISHOP MISBEHAVES, THE: Edmund Gwenn, Maureen O'Sullivan—Most are English. We should have cancelled this as English players don't go with us. Picture might have been passable with American players. Played November 8.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell—Good business on this musical. It is a very satisfactory picture. However, it is not the world beater that Leo would have you believe. Played December 7.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Eleanor Powell, Jack Benny—If this picture had been released a year ago it would have been a sensation, but coming along with a bunch of poor musicals, it suffered the fate of the rest and did nothing much more than average. Without a doubt, the best of any musical yet released, but thousands of dollars were lost because of the lateness of release. Running time, 103 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell—Tops for entertainment and played to fair business in spite of pre-Christmas slump and bad weather. Running time, 103 minutes. Played December 15-17.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—A light pleasing comedy drama in every respect. Music, laughter, suspense of a sort; some unusual twists, a grand finish. Business just a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—Suppose this is okay but somehow we'd like to see Joan get out of this frivolous feather-weight stuff and sink her teeth into something dramatic. Brian Aherne does nicely and gets across better in this one. Played December 15-16.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel, Ted Healy—Good entertainment. Played December 6.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel—A nice little comedy drama that pleased generally. Nothing big but good entertainment, which is all that matters. The public is not interested in what a picture cost, but whether they like it or not and whether it is entertaining. Running time, 80 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel—Excellent comedy that pleased 100%. Did fair business on this. Played December 11.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel—A good comedy feature. The stratosphere flight is a wow, with Ted Healy doing great work. Played December 20-21.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—A bad disappointment to my patrons. Whose idea was it to mix low comedy with high-brow singing? Singing was okay for its type, but Marx Brothers fans do not care for it. What they wanted was more harp and piano playing by the Marx Brothers. Might have cost a million, but who cares? Running time, 96 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

NIGHT IS YOUNG, THE: Ramon Novarro, Evelyn Laye—I personally thought this a rather good musical, but our answer was: it played to the poorest business this fall. Never saw it worse. It didn't click with our patrons; lacked action.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Ye gods! What a title! Business slightly better than nothing on this. Could have done more business on a western. Played my best nights and flopped.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—A rather drab and dreary affair. Some customers said "good picture" and more of them remarked "hogwash." Also rank business. Worst weekend for some months. Played December 14.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

PENTHOUSE: Myrna Loy, Warner Baxter—A well-produced picture that gave us average business. Those who came rejoiced.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell, Rosalind Russell—Two good stars with a good story. Excellent entertainment. Stars are made over night. This makes Miss Russell. Hope to have her often. Played December 18-19.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—Was skeptical about repeating this, but did more business than when first released. Comments fine.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

Paramount

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Jack Oakie, Burns and Allen—Played this first four days of week. Opened big on Sunday to less than average the remaining three days. It is a fine evening's entertainment, but it has been shown in all the nearby towns so they come up to the ticket office and say this about the great "Big Broadcast:" "I do not know whether I have seen this or not." The answer to my prayer is lower rentals, or newer pictures.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

EAGLE'S BROOD, THE: William Boyd, Jimmy Elison—Excellent for Saturday. Played December 14.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

EAGLE'S BROOD, THE:. William Boyd—Prepare for a disappointment on this one. The first "Hopalong" was great and I expected this to be even better, but it turned out to be just another western. Had none of the music and light comedy that characterized the first. Played December 13-14.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—Not colossal but more entertainment than any picture played in weeks. Only average business but the picture is swell. Good enough for Sunday in any town. Running time, 80 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan, Randolph Scott—A good western picture that did extra good business on Saturday and Sunday nights. Good story, good acting, and plenty of action. Played December 7-8.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

LAST OUTPOST, THE: Cary Grant, Gertrude Michael—We agree with someone else who reports on this one as fine, if we didn't know the story so well. All in all a good picture though, with plenty of action and some love interest. Played December 17.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LITTLE AMERICA: Byrd expedition—Build this around a good program of shorts. Had the school sell tickets and my share was 50% over average business. Many favorable comments. Played midweek. Running time, 55 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

MILLIONS IN THE AIR: John Howard, Wendy Barrie—No names in the cast but a most pleasing show. An ideal show for Bank Night.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

PETER IBBETSON: Gary Cooper, Ann Harding—If the picture is a flop and the public does not like it, the producers call the picture a piece of art. This picture is the biggest kind of art we have seen in many a day. Make a run for the basement just before this is over unless you can take it.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott—The locale being in the South, this picture should score below the line. The stark tragedy of the Civil War is realistically done and the cast is excellent. With the exception of the first reel, or before the war started ravishing the southland, the grim story precludes comedy relief. Technically the picture is all that could be desired, but the theme does not make for entertainment and our sohisticated youth of today failed to grasp the significance of the anguish, heartaches and sacrifices endured for a cause. Business below weekend average and patrons were noncommittal. Running time, 83 minutes. Played December 19-21.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

TWO FISTED: Lee Tracy, Grace Bradley—Very good comedy for a dual. Running time, 59 minutes. Played December 18.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

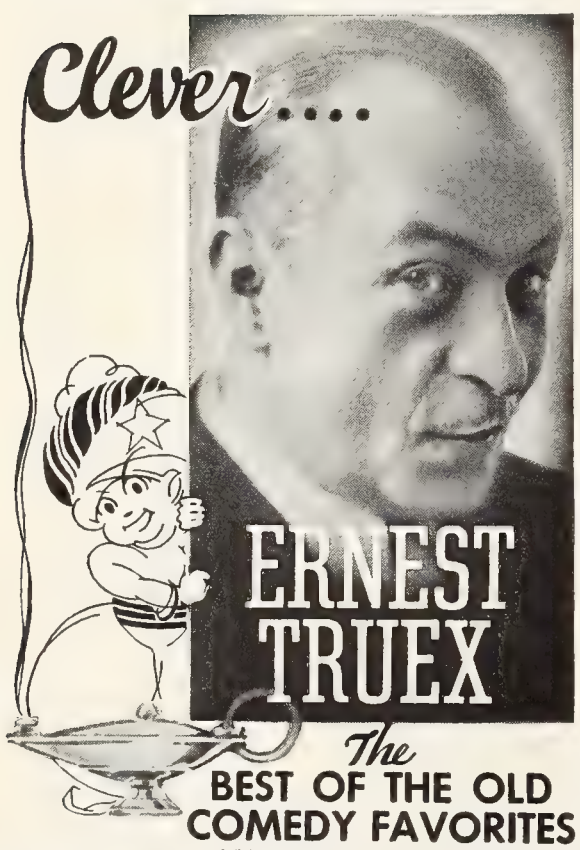
TWO FISTED: Lee Tracy—A good picture to average business. The story is different and well played. Played December 10.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TWO FISTED: Lee Tracy, Grace Bradley—They got to be better than this one. We cannot stay in business with this kind of feature product. Single or double, it makes no difference.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—Unfortunately this one meets with little response from Bing's followers. The story is light and failed to click. The songs are good and the cast tries hard but it's a losing game. Business weak. Played December 13-14.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Myrna Loy, Cary Grant—A good action picture for a small town. My audience seemed to enjoy this one. Played December 5-6.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

WINGS OVER ETHIOPIA: Special—Save your money. Played December 18-19.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.



Republic

TUMBLING TUMBLEWEEDS: Gene Autry, Lucille Browne—Here's a company that all independents should patronize if they care to show a profit at box office. Their film rentals believe in "Live and let live."—Ben Brinck, West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO

BREAK OF HEARTS: Katharine Hepburn, Charles Boyer—A very good picture that failed at the box office. Hepburn pretty much washed up in our town. Played November 30-December 1.—W. J. Carter, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

GIGOLETTE: Adrienne Ames, Ralph Bellamy—Just a fair program picture that pleased about eighty per cent. It will get by on your bargain nights. Played December 10-11.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

AND BEST WISHES FROM US ALSO

"We hope that our fellow exhibitors shall enjoy a prosperous New Year, and continue to support this department as they have in the past. It is the duty of every small town exhibitor to express himself in this department, just as much as it has been referred to when booking and buying product. It is a credit to the publishers for making this department. Now! it is up to us exhibitors to give it 100 per cent to support."

—HARLAND RANKIN
Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Can.

INFORMER, THE: Victor McLaglen—This picture is a little different. Some wonderful acting by McLaglen. Liberty gave this picture four stars. Personally did not like the picture and the box office was below average. Not the kind of a picture that our customers like. Played December 17-18.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, THE: Preston Foster, Dorothy Wilson—Very well produced story. Greatest drawback seemed to be a lack of interest in it from the ladies. If they could only know that it is really a dandy human interest story they'd go for it. Those who came were well satisfied. Played December 11-12.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—One of the best from Wheeler and Woolsey, but did not draw at the box office. Plenty of comedy and wise cracking in this one, but it's what the people seem to like. Played December 14-15.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson—A very good western. If RKO is smart they'll team up these three musketeers, Carey, Gibson and Williams, and give us some more pictures of this type. Played December 18-19.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

ROBERTA: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Irene Dunne—This picture did not show up very strong at the box office with us, though it was well liked by those who saw it, particularly the younger set. Dancing and singing was good, but there was little of interest in the plot. You will make no mistake by playing it, but don't expect too much.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

SHE: Helen Gahagan, Randolph Scott—Not a small town picture. Did not gross enough to pay for the picture. Better pay for it and leave it on the shelf. I don't know why they make such pictures. Played December 3-4.—W. J. Carter, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Walter Abel, Paul Lukas, Margot Grahame, Heather Angel—Done fair. Weather was very bad. Played December 1-2. I have used RKO pictures for over two years. Eighty per cent are money-makers for small towns.—R. L. Sherman, Strand Theatre, North Branch, Mich. General patronage. (This report is repeated from the issue of December 14th in which, because of typographical error, Sherman's conclusions were incorrectly stated.)

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix—Another western, not as popular with us as Ken Maynard or Buck Jones. Did below average weekend business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

CHARLIE CHAN IN PARIS: Warner Oland—Very clever of the Chan series, which has a good following in this situation.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—This struck a delightful refreshing note. In these days of rapid transit up to speed of four miles a minute it is quite a relief to picture the calm peaceful era of four miles an hour by way of a canal boat trip, and plenty things happen in this picture even if it did take place in those socalled quiet and peaceful times. Drawing power a good average for a Sunday and Monday when we usually get a drop being so close to the Christmas holiday. Double billed this with a Buck Jones picture, "Border Brigands."—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn—A very good musical. Entire cast played their respective parts to perfection, but Ned Sparks walked off with the show. The corridors throughout the prison are still ringing with "Don't call me Snooky!" This one completely outdistanced last year's "Scandals." Cliff Edwards knocked the boys for a row of Japanese cuspidors with his "Dream." We couldn't have made a much better choice for our pre-Christmas show. Running time, 83 minutes. Played December 21.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education, State Prison, Trenton, N. J.

HERE'S TO ROMANCE: Nino Martini, Genevieve Tobin—Poison for the small town. The trailer on this kept them away. As far as Martini's singing was concerned, he is wonderful, but we don't have enough that appreciate this class of singing; 36 adults and 3 children. Played December 13.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Claire Trevor, Ralph Bellamy—Played this on a double bill with "The Pay Off" and had a program that just got by. "Navy Wife" is episodic and jumpy. Alan Dwan has done lots better directing than displayed in this picture. Looks like it was rushed through. Claire Trevor overacts in the emotional scenes. Most of the women will like it in spite of its faults. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 19-21.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles, Dixie Lee—Only fair. Just gets by. Played November 27.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY: Rochelle Hudson, Cesar Romero—Believe me if you crave action here it is. No one will go to sleep on this show. Personally I thought it was one of the best of its kind I have shown in many a day.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

SILK HAT KID: Lew Ayres, Mae Clarke—One of our outstanding pictures from Fox.—Ben Brinck, West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda—The Squire goes to town to get the lowdown on the gal, driving his horse and sleigh down the river. Meets men on river cutting ice two and a half to three feet thick. That very night the ice goes out of the river. Dope that one out. Fairly good picture that failed to draw. Played December 4-5.—R. E. Quady, Isle Theatre, Minocqua, Wis. Small town patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda—An excellent attraction, at least for around these parts, that provides lots of the type of story that gets across. Everyone well pleased and business okay. Played December 8-9.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda—Seemed to please our patrons. Played December 11-12.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison Ark. Small town patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda—This epic did just 70% of film rental.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

United Artists

BARBARY COAST: Miriam Hopkins, Edward G. Robinson, Joel McCrea—A good melodrama of its kind. Pleased the male patrons but too rough for the ladies. Drew very light business, resulting in film rental taking approximately half my three days' receipts. Had several patrons compliment the picture as being an exceptionally fine production, but compliments don't pay help and rent. Running time, 89 minutes. Played December 1-3.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

BORDER BRIGANDS: Buck Jones—This has the ingredients that make Westerns popular. I would class it an above the average western. While this was double-billed with "The Farmer Takes a Wife" in this double bill town, "Border Brigands" held up its end nicely, as business was better than expected for a Sunday and Monday ten days before Christmas.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Warners

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—Excellent comedy. Pleased all and did very good business considering the punk weather we had on this date. Played December 4.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Very good musical. Played November 23. —B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran, Sheila Mannors—Several said this was the best western we had ever run. Foran's singing excellent. Give us some more as good as this. Mountains beautiful. Takes me back when I landed in the Rockies in Colorado in 1896, in the La Plata mountain district. Played December 7.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell —Good comedy feature that the cash customers all commented favorably on. However it's a mistake to waste Dick Powell on a role that could be filled by a thousand others. Played November 30.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell —Business was lower than we usually get on the Warner specials which I naturally attribute to the holiday season. The picture as a whole has much in it to entertain. It was not a drawing card or we would have done more than we did. The picture has class and a lot of money was spent on it and pleased those that saw it. Played December 12-14.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Miscellaneous

TRAIL'S END: Conway Tearle—Not a bad western. Acting just so-so. Did not draw much on account of Christmas entertainments. Running time, 55 minutes. Played December 21-22.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Educational

AMATEUR HUSBAND, THE: Ernest Truex—A fair comedy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

AMATEUR NIGHT: Terry-Toon—An excellent black and while cartoon and good for any spot.— C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

BIRD LAND: Terry Toon—So-so cartoon, not above average.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BIRD LAND: Terry-Toon—A black and white cartoon that will get by.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

CLEVER CRITTERS: Treasure Chest—An interesting reel showing some cute and clever animals. Running time, one reel.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

STRIKES AND SPARES: Oddities—With Pete Smith doing the talking and wisecracking, world's champion Variapa, bowler, showed us all the plain and fancy tricks with the galloping maples and oversized cue-ball. If you like bowling, this one is a perfect strike with room to spare!—J. A. Reynolds, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

TRAINED HOOFS: Miniature—A very good "Miniature" that fully justified the top spot I gave it. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

E-FLAT MAN: Star Personality Comedy—Will get by but not as good as the other Keatons.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

STYLISH STOUTS: Tom Howard—A poor comedy. This team is only funny when given excellent lines to deliver. This one just "ain't."—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TOYLAND: Terry-Toon—The distributors sent us this one in answer to our S. O. S. for a Christmas short, and we owe them a million thanks. It was chockful of the old Christmas spirit neatly interwoven with ample laughs. Running time, 7 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education, State Prison, Trenton, N. J.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BARNYARD BABIES: Happy Harmony—Color poor. Would have been very good cartoon had it been in black and white.— D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BEAUTIFUL BANFF AND LAKE LOUISE: Fitz-Patrick Travel Talk—Another great colored travel picture.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HISTORIC MEXICO CITY: FitzPatrick Travel Talk—A fair number in a pretty good series. The color is fine and helps lots to create the atmosphere needed to put across an entertaining travelogue.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HISTORIC MEXICO CITY: FitzPatrick Travel Talk—Excellent.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HONEYLAND: Happy Harmony—A very fine colored cartoon. All about the bees. Will please old and young.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HONOLULU, PARADISE OF THE PACIFIC: FitzPatrick Travel Talk—Just a waste of time and space to continue raving about the excellence of these FitzPatrick Talk Talks, but blamed if I can help it. Played this one on same program with Mickey Mouse "On Ice" and with "Broadway Melody" for the feature. Boy, what a show! Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

LITTLE SINNER: Our gang—One of the best "Our Gang" we ever had.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

METROTONE NEWS: Newsreel—Minus so much political stuff this could be a good newsreel. Leans heavily on the side of propaganda, though mostly good otherwise.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NURSE TO YOU: Charley Chase—An average Chase comedy. Not as good as Charley can give, but gets a few laughs.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

OLD PLANTATION, THE: Happy Harmony—Another excellent cartoon from the best series of cartoons we are using.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

POOR LITTLE ME: Happy Harmony—Very good. The color in these shorts is wonderful. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

PRO FOOTBALL: Oddity—The best football single reel we have ever played. Running time, 8 minutes. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa.

SLIGHTLY STATIC: Todd-Kelly—Generally liked. These girls are prime favorites here. "Slightly Static" is a mess stirred up in a broadcasting station. Good with any heavy program. Running time, two reels. —W. M. Nolen, Colonial Theatre, Monroe City, Mo. Rural patronage.

STARLIT DAYS AT THE LIDO: Oddity—Excellent entertainment. Beautiful color. Enjoy seeing Cliff Edwards again; come again soon, our patrons like you.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

STARLIT DAYS AT THE LIDO: Henry Busse, Cliff Edwards—Certainly the best musical that Metro has made and one of the best that anyone has made. Wake up, Leo, and star Cliff Edwards in a series of light musical short subjects. He was a panic in "Red Salute," and is a favorite the world over.— Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

TRAINED HOOFS: Miniature—The life of a race horse. Just an ordinary filler.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Paramount

EXCUSE MY GLOVES: Jack Doyle, Betty Jane Cooper, Ted Husing—Excellent one-reeler any day any time. Running time, one reel.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

JUDGE FOR A DAY: Betty Boop—Pretty good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

KING OF THE MARDI GRAS: Popeye the Sailor —One of the best Popeyes we have played.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE MARDI GRAS: Popeye Cartoon— The best series of black and white cartoons on the market, and this one of the best. My people eat 'em up.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

PARADE OF THE MAESTROS: Red Nichols, Ferde Grofe, Emery Deutsch—Good with any feature. —D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SPORT ON THE RANGE: Grantland Rice Sportlight—Excellent. It refers to the western cow country. At that it's good any time any day.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

RKO

MAJOR BOWES AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR: Number 2—This is far superior to number one and makes a good short. However, I don't think this nor "March of Time" are worth any more than any two-reel subject. Running time, two reels.— Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

NEWLY REWEDS: Flash Comedy—Another one of those "gets by" comedies. We'd sure like some improvement in these socalled comedies.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WORM BURNS, THE: Radio Flash Comedy—This one deserves all the panning one is able to find words for. Patrons will not sit through one like this. The day of this kind of stuff is positively over, and if there is any more like this one, RKO will not get any more two-reel comedy playing time from me.— W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

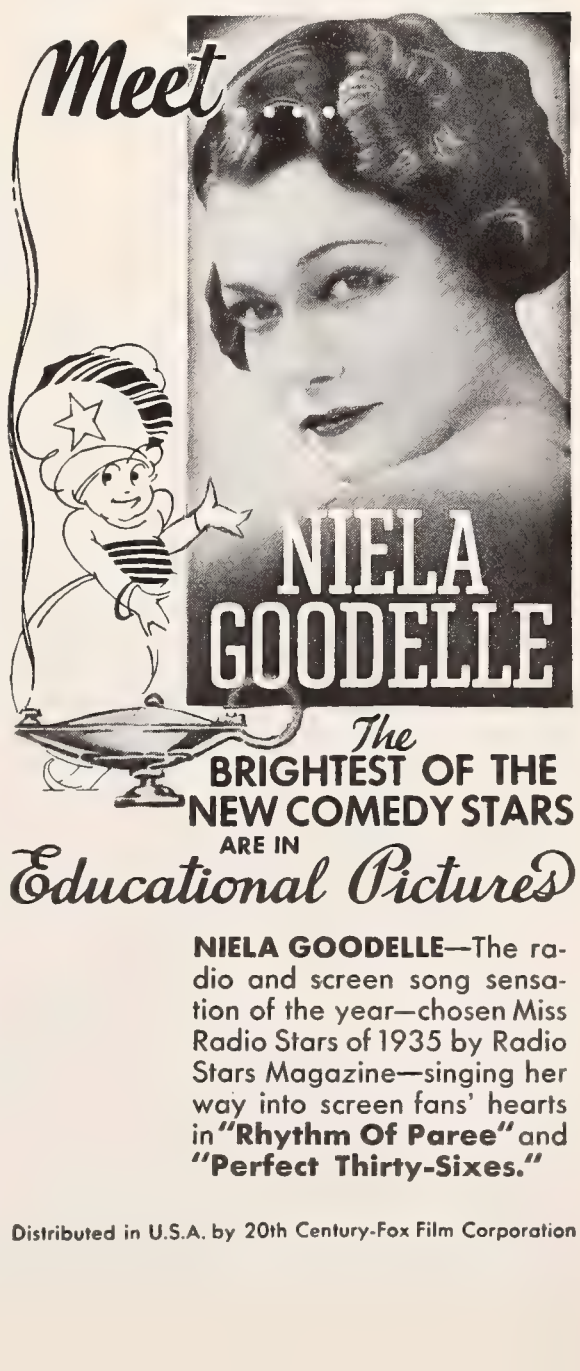
Twentieth Century - Fox

FOX MOVIETONE NEWS: Newsreel—Minus so much political talk-talk this would be an okay news. Sports by Ed Thorgensen is its highlight.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

United Artists

ON ICE: Mickey Mouse—For genuine entertainment this one has never been excelled; in class with "Mickey's Band Concert" and "Who Killed Cock Robin," and got more laughs. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Universal



AT YOUR SERVICE: Oswald Cartoon—A good subject. These "Oswalds" can be relied on for plenty of good fun.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT DANE: Oswald Cartoon— A very good black and white cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GOING PLACES: Number 8—A usual travelogue. —L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TOWNE HALL FOLLIES: Oswald Cartoon—A good cartoon with plenty of fun for anyone.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DOORMAN'S OPERA: Charlotte Arren, Johnny Broderick—A very good musical. Staged with a chorus and excellent vaudeville.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DUBLIN IN BRASS: Morton Downey—A pretty good musical in spite of Downey. He can make more faces before a camera than a wrestler with a toe-hold. Supporting talent is good.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

FLOWERS FOR MADAME: Merrie Melodie—An excellent colored cartoon, and deserves preferred time. —C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

FREDDY MARTIN AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Master—Good band but poor number in a series that should sparkle and add pep to any show. Most of them do; this one doesn't.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

JOHNNY GREEN AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Master—An excellent band act with good singing and dancing.— C.L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

JOHNNY GREEN AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Master—Very good.—Ben Brinck, West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

KEYSTONE HOTEL: Big V Comedy—Believe it or not, this is the first time our house has roared with laughter over a two-reel comedy in years. Old Timers, come again with another one. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

KEYSTONE HOTEL: Old Timers—If you haven't shown this one already, by all means do so! If the pie-slinging sequence doesn't bring tears of laughter to your eyes, laughing pains to your stomach, and plenty of shoulder vibration, then you had better pay a visit to your nearest psychiatrist. Running time, 21 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education, State Prison, Trenton, N. J.

Supply Company Moves In Boston

The National Theatre Supply Company has moved to new quarters in the film district of Boston. The firm was formerly located some distance away from the center of motion picture activities. A projection room is one of the features of the present setup.

Bader's Plans Indefinite

Dave Bader, who resigned from Universal, said his immediate plans are indefinite upon his arrival last week on the Georgic from London. He plans to go to the Coast after the first of the year and then back to England. This Christmas is the first he has spent with his family in seven years.

Schultz Opens Law Firm

Joseph Schultz announces that, after January 1st, he will no longer act as general counsel for Macfadden Publications and affiliates. In association with Henry E. Schultz, he will continue in the practice of the law, under the firm name of Schultz Brothers.

Zeidman Schedules Five

The first five productions to be released by B. F. Zeidman Film Corporation will be "St. Elmo," "Sweethearts of the Navy," "In His Steps," "The Gold Bug" and "The Rogue's Gallery," in the order named.

Walkathons Barred By City's Council

The city council of Quincy, Ill, has voted to instruct its ordinance committee to draft an amendment to the license ordinance barring walkathons.

The decision followed disclosures in connection with a recent walkathon at Highland Park which resulted in the fining of eight "walkathon persons," the eviction of several from the city, the remanding of one to federal authorities for prosecution on a "white slave" charge, as well as police action that sent one minor girl home to her parents in northern Illinois and prevented another contestant from leaping to her death from a bridge, according to the Quincy Herald Whig.

Latchis Circuit Grows To Fourteen Houses

Latchis Theatres, Inc., with headquarters at Kenne, N. H., has increased its circuit holdings to fourteen houses in the past year. Peter D. Latchis is head of the company.

Holdings in Vermont include two theatres at Brattleboro, the Palace in St. Johnsbury, the Gem in Lyndonville, and the recently acquired Strand at Windsor. In New Hampshire the circuit has taken over the Orpheum at Woodsville and also has the Latchis in Claremont and the Latchis and the Colonial in Keene, which were a part of the original circuit. In Massachusetts the Latchis company has acquired the Plymouth and the Rialto in Leominster and in Greenfield Mr. Latchis also controls the Lawler theatre.

Clair and Pommer to America

Having seen the world premiere in London of his initial film in English, the Alexander Korda production of "The Ghost Goes West," Rene Clair is preparing to sail for America on his first visit to this country. He will be accompanied by Eric Pommer, producer, who was recently signed by Mr. Korda under a long term contract.

Wells Film in Cutting Room

With Alexander Korda's production of the H. G. Wells screen play, "Things to Come," ready for cutting and editing, the cost of the picture is estimated as in excess of $1,200,000 and represents the most costly picture ever produced in England, according to United Artists, which will release the picture in this country.

THREE SHOWMEN JOIN REPORTERS

The constantly growing numbers of exhibitors reporting to "What the Picture Did for Me" add three showmen to the list this week. They are:

Guy P. Colier, Orpheum Theatre, Mitchell, Indiana

R. E. Quady, Isle Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin

W. M. Nolan, Colonial Theatre, Monroe City, Missouri

Read the reports of these showmen in forthcoming issues of the HERALD.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

THEY DO, INDEED

The honor of winning a Quigley Plaque has often meant promotion, numerous instances of which have been reported in these pages. But what of the "Firsts" and "Honorable Mentions"? Do the winners of the Sheepskin Certificates also receive real recognition from their superiors? They do, indeed.

To recipients of the "Firsts" and "Honorables" this department recently directed an inquiry asking whether these successes had in any way improved their situations or enhanced their personal prestige. The first returns are eloquent:

Twenty-five per cent report bonuses and salary increases; 20 per cent say their personal prestige definitely enhanced, and 12 per cent write the "Mentions" have aided in developing finer cooperative spirit among their personnel.

Other letters credit the Competitions with improvement of general picture exploitation, with helping theatremen to prepare for better jobs and with acting as a stimulant to bigger grosses.

It is a fine thing to know the industry acclaims the purposes of the Quigley Awards. It is also fine to know that through the Competitions, accomplishments of those taking down the "Mentions" are also so gratefully and practically recognized.

BIG CITY HEART

Folks being folks in big burg or village, there isn't a lot of truth in the oft repeated line that the Big City, too occupied with its own affairs, has little time and less consideration for the unfortunate and needy. New York, of course, has as much heart as any other place and as good a spot as any to observe its operation is the annual drive put on by metropolitan theatre circuits to give underprivileged youngsters a break at holiday time.

Just to name a few that come to mind, Messrs. Frisch and Rinzler of Randforce Theatres have recently sponsored their fifth canned-goods party to an audience of over 80,000 eager-to-aid Brooklyn children. And Loew's Theatre heads also did a bit of hosting with Messrs. Sidney, Moskowitz and Vogel on the "receiving line" to greet some 50,000 juvenile guests in the New York area.

Not so long ago we said that theatremen make it possible for a lot of nice people to have something to be thankful for on Thanksgiving. It may also be noted that sincere and helping theatre hands reach out as gladly in the Big City to help make a not too merry Christmas very much merrier.

"CUT YOURSELF A PIECE OF THROAT"

It's no lodge secret that the deplorable condition in which many a manager finds himself today is due in great part to the attitude displayed by a species of theatreman(?) toward his brother manager and the job of managing.

Oh, yes, we know the situation is aggravated in a heap of situations where the manager's every action is dictated and that he does only what he is told to do and when. We also know of a certain executive who spoke frankly when he said today the average manager is only a custodian. And we know further that too many exhibitors look upon the operation of a theatre as they do any conventional form of merchandising in which the hiring of cheap help is merely considered good business.

But after discounting all of this, the fact still remains that there are man only too eager to undermine the other fellow, work for half his salary, allow whatever self-respect they may have had to be ground into the dust just so long as they are on a payroll.

From a Round Tabler in a nearby state comes a bit of finger-pointing on the matter and from his letter in which the member gets it properly off his chest we quote a few paragraphs:

"Theatre manpower will never get a break as long as many of the would-be's have the idea that the other man's job is sweeter than theirs and that $25 or $30 is sufficient wages for their labors, experience and the handling of a quarter-million investment. Right in my own organization I discovered an assistant writing to the home office that he could do the job better than the manager at half the salary.

"So you tell me the answer as to the logic of trying to protect fellow-workers or theatre manpower when the powers-that-be tolerate this chiseling. The answer as I see it is that the head of the John Doe circuit knows his files of applications hold many requests for a $25 managerial connection . . . "

The smartest job that exhibition can do for the safeguarding of its future is to take definite steps to rid the business of the motley army of so-called theatremen whose slogan is "Cut Yourself a Slice of Throat" and whose emblem is the chisel and dagger.

A. Mike Vogel

At the recently held "Produced In Canada" exhibition in Montreal, George Rotsky's Palace Theatre booth reproduced above aroused great interest. Animated display in center contained miniature theatre showing four different scenes with figures gowned in copies of dresses worn by Joan Crawford in "I Live My Life." In addition to stills and posters, exhibit was further decorated attractively with flowers, rugs and soft chairs.

Advance Campaign Announced For U.A.'s "Strike Me Pink"

Beginning week of January 12 and continuing until January 26, United Artists are breaking 1,000-line rotogravure ads to appear in 41 leading newspapers on Eddie Cantor's new picture, "Strike Me Pink."

Also is announced is a hookin with Lux Soap for a series of 500 and 1,000-line ads to break day and date with the local openings. Ads will feature the Goldwyn Girls and scenes stills.

U D C President-General Cooperates With Smith

For the opening of "So Red the Rose" at the Paramount, Hot Springs, Ark., Manager W. Clyde Smith obtained the unlimited cooperation of Mrs. Wm. E. Massey, President General, United Daughter of the Confederacy, resident locally. Mrs. Massey approved the script before the picture was filmed and at the U. D. C. convention held in Hot Springs gave the date further favorable publicity.

Private screening was arranged for the convention delegates at which time were presented flowers from Margaret Sullavan and Randolph Scott. Smith reports the wire services as well as the local sheets carrying convention stories which included news of the screening.

The public opening was very gala what with special front of lattice work and cutout roses, American, Confederate and state flags, flood lights and National Guard of honor on opening day. Also obtained by Smith was a lobby display (see photo) of civil war relics of all descriptions.

Papers carried stories and photos of the opening with extra publicity on society page. Endorsement letter from Mrs. Massey was also published and used in display ads. Other stunts included window display with girl wearing dress fashionable in time of picture and another window held a display worn by models of old and new styles.

Localize "Oakley" Date To Cincinnati Opening

Famed Annie Oakley starting her career in the Ohio metropolis, E. V. Dinerman, RKO Theatres Cincinnati ad head, tied in the date at the Palace with showing of stills carrying local copy. Additionally, large banner was spread, copy as follows:

"It Happened in Cincinnati back in the days when Eden Park was a bicycle path . . . and the Vine Street horse car special took you 'Over the Rhine.' . . . Back in the good old days when 'Annie Oakley' came to Cincinnati to start her career.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Announces Two Serials

For "Last of the Pagans," MGM has made available a 12-chapter and also a three-instalment serialization. The 12-chapter version comes in two full-length columns, each with two-column illustration; the three-instalment in four three-quarter column instalments each with three-column illustration.

On "Small Town Girl" serial is illustrated with black and white drawings by James Montgomery Flagg. Blowups of these are also furnished for lobby, bookstore and newspaper office display.

Invites Prominents To Record Laughter

Neat space grabber conceived by Manager Ed Siegel, Davis, Pittsburgh, Pa., was a tiein with local radio station and company sponsoring new type recording equipment to record laughter of leading citizens. Stunt was put on in the theatre lobby between one and three for three afternoons ahead as builder-upper on "Two Fisted."

Siegel sent out letters to 300 prominents inviting them to stop by and have their voices plated with proper introductions to be made by popular radio commentator. Ed wrote that best of these recordings would be forwarded to Lee Tracy, star of the picture, which of course was mentioned, and also promised that all records would be broadcast from the cooperating station. Among those taking part was the city's Director of Safety.

Though Pittsburgh papers have an agreement against publicity stunts, Ed managed to crack sports, radio and theatre columns with mention of the gag. Title and theatre were also announced at local fight rings.

Regent Horthy Attends Budapest "Dream" Premiere

Starting two months ahead, Charles Bergus, Budapest Warner Bros. manager, built up an elaborate campaign at the Radius Theatre on "Dream." This included a new angle in that sector of direct communication with headmasters and professors of local high schools asking them to draw their pupils' attention to the date. Language schools and English instructors were also advised.

By arrangement with post office officials, phone operators rang thousands of subscribers, informing them of the attraction and all apartment houses were covered with heralds. Radio concerts of Mendelsohn's incidental music to the picture were broadcast and prominent Hungarian poet was engaged to lecture on the film.

Opening night was distinguished event with local celebs in attendance headed by Regent and Mrs. Horthy. Wired greetings from Reinhardt were read from the stage.

Silver and Bronze Plaques Will Again Be Given Monthly In the Third Year of Quigley Awards; Industry Executives Accept Places As Judges

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Definitely established as the theatreman's own competition to select and honor outstanding showmanship, the Quigley Awards now sweep into the third year as managers all over the world again set themselves to bring home the well known bacon in 1936. Enthusiasm is rife and it is expected that the New Year will see a new high reached in the short but stirring history of these unique monthly contests.

Again, the Silver and Bronze plaques will be awarded monthly as will First and Honorable Mentions, winners to be selected as previously by majority vote of the monthly Judging Committees. Grand Awards also are offered in 1936.

Consensus of opinion from last year's entrants indicates hearty approval of the doubling in 1935 of the monthly and yearly awards. Expansion of the prize list undoubtedly stimulated interest among theatremen to enter the 1935 Competitions which will result in 24 campaigns receiving consideration for the 1935 Grand Awards.

Top Names to Judge

Almost without exception it is pleasing to note how the various industry leaders in the distribution, advertising and exhibition branches again agreed to serve upon the 1936 Committees.

The majority of these have served enthusiastically in both 1934 and 1935 and as it is to be noted are as eager to act in 1936. Three different judges will be asked to form each monthly committee and from the entire list of these names will come the Grand Awards jury.

The rulings and regulations are practically unchanged and are published in column to left for the information of those already familiar with them and newcomers to the Competitions. The rules are simple and present no obstacles to interested theatremen in any part of the world.

As the gun sounds for the start of the 1936 Quigley Awards, a warm invitation is again extended to previous winners, non-winners and theatremen everywhere to enter the new year's Competitions. Big town, small town, circuit and independent showmen in the United States and every other part of the world are hereby told the "latch is out."

Remember it's not how much is spent on a campaign or how elaborately it is presented to the Judges that counts. The quality of showmanship is the only factor taken into consideration.

1936 JUDGES ENDORSE AWARDS

NEIL AGNEW

Vice-President
Paramount Pictures Inc.

I will be most happy to serve as one of the judges of the Quigley Awards Competition for 1936.

I am pleased to learn that these are to be continued next year, as I firmly believe that all branches of the industry are benefitted by this competition.

W. RAY JOHNSTON

President
Republic Pictures Corp.

I should be very happy to serve as one of the judges on the committee for the Quigley Awards Competitions. Congratulations on the way in which these competitions have been conducted. They have had a very fine effect on the industry as a whole. I trust that their success will be greater than ever in the future.

J. J. FITZGIBBONS

General Manager
Famous Players Canadian Corp.

We are happy to know that you are to continue the Quigley Awards Competitions in the Motion Picture Herald through the Managers' Round Table Club during the year 1936.

I will be happy to serve as a judge and do everything possible to encourage our managers to take advantage of this splendid medium for stimulating merchandising effort in selling motion picture entertainment and, too, it gives each manager who takes advantage of this opportunity a chance to exploit his personal ability.

M. J. MULLIN

Partner, Mullin & Pinanski Circuit
Boston, Mass.

I am very glad to learn that the Quigley Awards are to be continued for 1936 and I will be very happy to serve for another year on the Judges' committee whenever my presence in New York makes it possible to attend your meetings.

It has been a source of gratification to Mr. Pinanski and myself that so many M & P managers have received awards and honorable mentions during the past two years. The boys, also, are very proud of them. Recognition for work well done is always to be commended. I believe that the Quigley Awards have become a badge of honor to all managers.

OSCAR A. DOOB

Director Advertising and Publicity
Loew Theatres

Of course I'll be glad to act as a judge in the Quigley Awards Competition for 1936. I think the Herald is doing a fine thing in continuing this idea, which, undoubtedly, does a lot to stimulate theatre exploitation efforts. Best of luck for the coming year.

R. J. O'DONNELL

General Manager, Interstate Circuit
Dallas, Texas

I have your letter of the 19th and will be very happy to act as a judge in the Quigley Awards competitions if it develops that I will be in New York at the time—as I feel that this activity has been most worthwhile and deserves the cooperation of every theatre organization.

RICK RICKETSON

General Manager, Rocky Mountain Division
Fox West Coast Theatres

It will be a pleasure to serve again as a Judge on your committee for Quigley Awards for 1936. I think the Quigley competition furnishes one of the most needed stimuli to theatre management in the country. It inspires initiative and resourcefulness in showmanship and competition among exhibitors who otherwise wouldn't have the opportunity of comparative effort, and if there is anything that is needed for 1936 in exhibition, it will be sound showmanship developed to get the maximum results out of every picture at a minimum advertising cost.

JOHN DOWD

Director of Advertising and Publicity
RKO Theatres

I have your letter of December 18th requesting that I continue as a judge on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1936. I shall be most happy to do so and I want to thank you for the fine cooperation we have received from you this year. It is indeed very nice of you to extend this honor to me.

A. W. SMITH, JR.

General Sales Manager
Warner Bros. Pictures

The Quigley Awards for the best advertising and exploitation campaigns of each month are certainly a most constructive force in the moving picture industry. I consider it a great honor to serve as a judge on the committee and shall be very happy to do my bit for 1936.

LEON J. BAMBERGER

Sales Promotion Manager
RKO Distributing Corp.

I shall be very happy indeed to accept your kind invitation to serve as a judge on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1936. It has been a great pleasure to me in the past to join with the other members of your committee in studying the great number of splendid exploitation campaigns that have been submitted and to have the privilege of rewarding the most meritorious.

The Quigley Awards, in my opinion, have proven of immeasurable value to the entire industry and have brought home most forcibly the obvious fact that the most vital element in showbusiness is showmanship.

HOWARD WAUGH

Zone Manager, Warner Theatres
Memphis, Tenn.

Naturally it will be an honor to act as a Judge for the Quigley Awards Committee. There is no question about the award idea stimulating exploitation activities among theatre managers.

JOHN W. HICKS, JR.

Vice-President
Paramount International Corp.

I will be very glad to accept your invitation to serve as a judge on the Quigley Awards Competition Committee for the year 1936. In my opinion, I consider the Quigley Awards a great medium for stimulating box office grosses, and encouraging the advertising and exploitation efforts of our men in the field, as was evidenced by the fact that our Mr. Armstrong in England won first prize with his campaign on "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," and our Mr. Lebreton of our Paramount Theatre, Paris, also came in for a prize for his campaign on this picture.

SALARY BOOSTS GIVEN WINNERS

LOUIE CHARNINSKY
Manager, Interstate Capitol
Dallas, Texas

The Quigley Competitions are one of the greatest assets in the show world. It makes one get up and do things. I have won two Honorable Mentions the past year and I know that it helped me in my bonus check from the big bosses of Interstate. More power for the Quigley Awards for 1936.

L. A. WARREN
Manager, Sipe's Criterion
Anderson, S. C.

Great business, lots of publicity, created plenty of good will, became more popular and raise in salary.

MIKE GUTTMAN
Manager, Colonial
Watertown, N. D.

The Quigley Awards have made me more exploitation minded, i.e. going after detail in window tieups as well as selecting choice spots. There is no doubt as to increased box office value. I found even small towns go for the "something different."

Have been fortunate in receiving an increase in salary since winning Honorable Mention, no doubt as results of it bringing my name to attention of the office.

ERNIE PETCH
Manager, F P Canadian Strand
Brandon, Canada

Quigley Competitions are a great help in many ways. First they give us something to go after and then if we win an award our winning campaign has certainly been a big factor in putting our picture over and thereby stimulating box office returns. And even if our campaign has not won an award, it has helped our business. Our company is just as proud of our gaining an award as we are ourselves.

HARRY W. CRULL
Manager, Loew's Valencia
Jamaica, L. I.

Aside from the personal satisfaction in winning a Quigley plaque and Honorable Mention, the pleasure in hearing from old friends, words of congratulations, doubly compensated me. An added touch of pleasure was the fact that the little daily paper in the Indiana village of my boyhood copied the story from the Herald.

E. A. STEINBUCH
Manager, Loew's State
Cleveland, Ohio

I have found the Quigley Awards as a great stimulant to greater efforts towards exploitation. There is no question but the Awards I have won enhanced the prestige of myself and Loew's Theatres.

"MENTION" HELPS TO WIN RAISE

"The winning of an Honorable Mention certainly helped for soon after the writer received a 15 percent raise in salary and only the past Saturday the Boss handed me a check in the sum of $500 for a bonus and Christmas present as a token of work accomplished during the year. Many of the selling points were obtained from your splendid pages.

"Let's keep the Quigley Awards going during 1936 and thanks to your magazine for the help during 1935."

Manager, Delman,
Houston, Texas

GUY W. MARTIN
Manager, Publix Colfax
South Bend, Ind.

Without doubt, the Quigley Awards, in some cases go a long way in promoting various activities from theatre managers. For the past several years I have been both theatre manager and district manager for a group of houses in Indiana and I have had the experience that awards of this sort are instrumental in proving to managers that good campaigns do sell pictures.

LLOYD A. HELDMAN
Manager, Burns
Newport, Vt.

Anything that induces a theatre manager to work out a real exploitation campaign for better grosses is worthwhile. The Quigley Awards are tops as a stimulant. I feel that my Honorable Mention on my "Curly Top" campaign deserves plenty of credit for my increase in salary at the time I staged the campaign.

LESTER POLLOCK
Manager, Loew's Rochester
Rochester, N. Y.

Personally, competing in the Quigley Awards has aided me no end. It's been fun sending in my campaigns, receiving Honorable Mentions and finally the Silver plaque. It's something to work for and needless to say, added exploitation efforts show up at the box office. The Awards have kept me going and I hope they will continue to do so for a long, long time.

JULIUS LAMM
Manager, Warner's Uptown
Cleveland, Ohio

Your Quigley Awards are a stimulant to improve business. I've tried many times, but have had only two Honorable Mentions, one in 1935 and one in 1936—but I WON'T GIVE UP THE SHIP!

H. D. GROVE
Manager, Tri-States Fort
Rock Island, Ill.

Mr. A. H. Blank, president of the Tri-States Theatres Corporation, and Mr. G. Ralph Branton, general manager, have notified all their managers that they will give a suitable award to every manager from the Tri-States organization who wins any award in the Quigley Competitions. The writer, having been fortunate enough to obtain one of your Honorable Mention Certificates, wishes to say that they have kept their word in a very fine manner.

Every manager should enter these Competitions, and should stick to it, regardless of whether he wins or not, because this kind of exploitation requires constructive thinking and honest effort; and cannot help but make a man better fitted for his present position and help to prepare him for still better positions in the future.

LARRY WOODIN
Manager, Arcadia
Wellsboro, Pa.

Quigley competitions are to the theatre manager what a bromo is to that next morning feeling. Taking part in them and winning a plaque has been one of the most satisfying things I did all year. Hitting a winner in a small town such as mine has resulted in at least waking the industry in this territory up to the fact that even we small towners have a few good tricks in showmanship up our sleeve that will click off the old ducats to the tune of new house records.

KEN GRIMES
Manager, Warners
Morgantown, West Va.

The keen competition created by the Quigley Awards among theatre managers everywhere has in my opinion caused a general improvement in picture exploitation. Personally, my knowledge of exploitation has been increased by my two years of experience in competition with other managers and through the activities of other managers reported on the pages of the Managers' Round Table Club.

FRED C. SOUTTAR
Manager, Fox Lincoln
Belleville, Ill.

I'm only sorry that I didn't get into the plan earlier and wasn't in oftener. Any competitive plan is bound to bring forth extra effort. And, with a plan such as the Quigley Award, it is well directed for the theatreman's own benefit. And don't overlook the prestige and satisfaction we all have in seeing our names on the list of the month's best campaigns.

The Quigley Awards help in the creation of new advertising ideas and the study of the winning campaigns is a source of worthwhile knowledge to us all.

Moss Dresses Staff In Chinese Costumes

Accompanying photo shows how attractively Dick Moss, Egyptian Theatre, Long Beach, Cal., dressed part of his staff for "Oil for the Lamps of China" a week ahead of opening.

For "Accent on Youth", Dick announced that at a certain matinee every lady would be presented with a rose which had been promoted from local florist. Stunt was plugged in newspaper ads.

Burnett Stages Gala Opening on "Splendor"

Through the cooperation of local Chamber of Commerce and the retail association in Dayton, Ohio, Martin Burnett at Loew's Theatre arranged a formal night week on "Splendor." Mayor Brennan attended opening night and special invitations were sent to all social leaders in city. Cards plugging "the week" were distributed at all local stores.

Theatre was decorated with bunting, flags and special valances, ushers dressed in tux and cashier in formal wear. Searchlight played on theatre opening night, mikes were placed in lobby and radio station ran 15-minute description of event. Another highlight was tieup with department store which resulted in models displaying latest evening attire in lobby. Window displays carried scene stills, another store got out window on fashions with blowups of Miriam Hopkins and leading jeweler arranged attractive display tying in with picture.

Neat Copy Tiein

Plugging his two-feature bill with a smart bit of cooperation on chewing gum, Manager Louis Christ, Arlington, Santa Barbara, had the gum people make up a lot of sample slices each with a lettered card in paraphine envelope. Copy said gum was as pure as the snow in "Little America" and fresh as the blossoms in "Way Down East."

Lamm's "Wild" Theatre Party

A theatre party was arranged by Louie Lamm, Palace Theatre, Lorain, Ohio, on "Call of the Wild" for Boy Scouts and their friends. Boys sold tickets and enlisted aid of their friends in putting it over. Department store featured window of scout uniforms and equipment and a display of flags, pup tents, fireplace, utensils, etc., was planted in lobby with picture tiein copy.

Cooper Stages Fashion Show for "Redheads"

Max Cooper at the Fox Theatre in Hackensack, N. J., launched his "Redheads on Parade" campaign by advertising in local dailies for redheads to model in his fashion show. Each cooperating merchant contributed $30 for his share of the expenses and garments to be worn by models in the show were displayed in lobby ten days ahead.

Girls who were hired were taken on a shopping tour in bannered cars, going to the various merchants' shops to select the coats and gowns they were to wear. Merchants' ads plugged event and newspapers came through with stories. First five redheaded persons to enter theatre each day during engagement were admitted free. For street bally usher on bannered tandem bike with one of the redheads toured shopping districts.

Brown Ties Jeweler To Treasure Hunt

Harry Brown, Jr., publicity director for downtown M. & P. Boston theatres, made a newspaper ad tie-up and 10,000 no cost heralds with the opening of new jewelry store. In this connection treasure hunt was staged at the store in which prizes were 20 $50 diamond rings and wrist watches locked in treasure chests at merchant's shop.

The treasure chest keys were distributed to patrons of the Paramount, Fenway, Modern, Olympia and Scollay Square theatres the opening days. Through newspaper ads and heralds the public was generally informed that to obtain keys to try at the store they had to attend one of these theatres.

Warren Builds New Front For "Harmony Lane"

Nick Warren, Criterion Theatre, Anderson, S. C., for "Harmony Lane" converted his front into a log cabin box-office by using slabs of bark on them and putting pine bush around the cabin and pine straw in lobby. Sign over the door read "My Old Kentucky Home."

Private screening was held for local celebrities. Copies of the six songs composed by Stephen Foster were tacked up around town and hits plugged over radio with theatre and playdate mention.

Walking 6-Sheet Plugs "Seas"

L. Levitch at the State Theatre in Rochester, N. Y. used the services of four boys and one 6 sheet to plug "China Seas". Each boy carried a part of section of the sheet to different vantage points in city, where two more boys would ring a gong and the four boys would get together with their respective sections and assemble the walking sheet. Levitch says he gained a little extra publicity by having the boys appear at football field before crowds.

Paper Ties In With Silver On "Mutiny" Ship Contest

Through tieup with Evening Leader in Lowell, Mass., Nat Silver at the Strand put on a ship model contest for "Mutiny" with cash prizes awarded winners. Accompanying photo shows Capt. Volney Phifer and Charles Gallagher, editor of paper, viewing display in lobby.

Five and ten featured theme song with window and counter display of stills, papers ran stories and mats, book stores plugged copies of the book and large upright display with cutout of Gable was used in inner lobby week ahead.

Botwick's Marine "Mutiny" Display

Botwick Invites Captains To Preview "Mutiny"

Featured newspaper stunt put on by Manager Harry Botwick, State, Portland, Me., on "Mutiny," was a special preview for local sea captains in the Port of Portland. Dailies broke three-column cut and story on this and Botwick said the showing helped sell the entire waterfront on the date.

Lobby set piece was given unique treatment with nautical equipment promoted from local ship chandler's company for maritime atmosphere. Blinking bulbs in the ships' running lights posted at each corner of the display attracted attention (see photo) and further accessories as follows:

Anchors, eight ships' lights, dory sails draped from railing, coils and drapes of tarred rope, the latter giving off a real sea odor, says Harry. Also included were ship model, helm, life preservers, propeller and deck cleats. Green rayon around the base set off the display nicely.;

Lobby Peep Show Features McBride's "Night at Opera"

Penny arcade machines were installed in lobby of Loew's State in Syracuse by Eddie McBride for "Night at Opera" (see photo). Lever was fastened back so that no deposit was necessary and patrons looked at 8x10 stills of the Marx Brothers, which dropped through machine continuously. Eddie says the stunt created plenty of laughs and was a great plug on picture week in advance.

WHO WILL STEM THE TIDE?

Massachusetts Member Sets Down His Opinions On Encroachments Of Radio Upon Theatre Grosses

by CHARLES S. BASSIN
Manager, Oriental, Boston, Mass.

What is opposition? Webster defines it in part as an obstacle; a hostile or contrary action or condition; in politics, the party opposed to the party in power."

Good old lexicographer though he was, Webster completely forgot show business when compiling his famous reference volume. Opposition, as we know it, is any attractive force of an external nature that affects the sale of tickets at the theatre box office adversely.

One of these forces, probably in itself more potent than all others combined is radio. Heretofore we have taken radio more or less for granted, accepting it as a natural amusement parasite, against which combat was futile and unnecessary. Occasionally, in some remote corner of our showmanship planet, rumblings of an upheaval against it would be heard, only to die down before gaining momentum. All well and good up to the present. But now that radio has descended upon Hollywood much the same as a hawk descends upon ye barnyarde fowle, and the bloodstream of showbusiness is about to become contaminated, can we afford to overlook the future?

A fortnight or so ago NBC opened a new studio in Hollywood with an hour and one-half broadcast. In "Viewpoints" of December 14th's MOTION PICTURE HERALD, Martin Quigley aptly sums up the entire situation in one sentence by saying, "Coincidentally with the broadcast, some fourteen thousand motion picture theatres throughout the country were seeking—and seeking to serve—customers." And generally speaking these theatres were probably doing more seeking than serving.

Radio didn't go Hollywood for the sake of the cinema. Radio went Hollywood for the betterment of radio. Henceforth we can look forward to having our audiences entertained by our stars and our pictures via the air waves without the customers even going through the formality of securing a pass.

Many a disbelieving Daniel will remark "Pecans" to the thought that radio is going to put a crimp into the theatre business, but these will be the self-same gentlemen who yelled "Walnuts" when mere mention was made of the fact that talking pictures might hurt the legitimate stage.

Soon will come the time when we are ready to offer our friends a nice juicy gem of entertainment. With pride bursting thumbs thrust in none too dependable galluses we'll stand in our lobbies and await the storming ticket buyers in blissful anticipation. Only there aren't going to be many ticket buyers. Most of them will be sitting beside the fireside comfortably slippered and amply tobaccoed with their superheterodynes tuned in on everything the motion picture business has to offer.

Radio will sell Hollywood an idea that the publicity involved in permitting stars to broadcast will put pictures across as they have never been put across before. Overrich commodity executives flattered by having top names advertise their product will dangle national debt salaries, perfumed with long term contracts, in front of our celebrities and the panic will be on. Soon it will be a battle of who'll pay the most, Little Miss Hollywood or Persuasive Mr. Broadcaster, and the spending orgy will be in full swing with the poor little theatre carrying the bag of increased production costs.

Must we have radio? Of course we must. It is here and here to stay. And rightfully so. Little can we expect the average person to traipse to the theatre night after night. All we ask is our share. Radio brings lots of pleasure to many shut-ins and other unfortunates.

Then there are the commercial reasons. Properly used, radio is a good advertising medium for a variety of product, including picture productions, when it (radio) is used to advertise pictures and stars and not present them.

Radio and theatre are both purveyors of amusement much the same as wine and whiskey are sirens of inebriation, but the former don't mix any better than the latter.

Says Hollywood Has Yielded

No overnight seduction will this be. The harm that radio in Hollywood will do the picture industry will be transitional. It may take several years. It may only take several months. But it is coming unless someone stems the tide. Going into the future a bit, what will happen when radio suddenly unfolds television and with one clean blow severs the head of exhibition from the torso of production. One day will come an announcement that Miss Verree Glorious will appear in her latest motion picture via television. And an attraction that would have put bread and butter into the mouths of many cinema industry employees for months will be given to the country in one hour's time through the courtesy of the Brides' Biscuit Company.

But who will stem the tide? Not production. Hollywood has already yielded to the supplications of radio revelry. Exhibition can stick its finger into the hole in the dyke, but will it? If it does, will production cock an ear from its almighty pedestal and listen to the theatres? It never has and only time will tell.

Circularizes Vets for "Bees"

To usher in his "Keeper of the Bees" date at the State, Harrisonburg, Va., Sam Roth circularized Vets of Foreign Wars and Legionaires stressing angle in picture. Broadcast was devoted to life of author, special cards were posted in libraries and letters were also sent to all city and county school principals.

"MUTINY" ANIMATED DISPLAY

To right and below are reproduced finished lobby display and working plan of ship animation used on "Mutiny" by Manager Jerry DeRosa and district publicist, Perry Spencer, at Loew's Paradise, New York. It attracted a lot of deserved attention and Spencer states the plan may be adapted without difficulty to other situations.

"Diamond Jim" Plays Santa Claus

Al Beckerich assisted by publicist Mort Goodman at Warner's Hipp, Cleveland for "Diamond Jim" ran a teaser campaign in paper for three days stating that man dressed as the former playboy would circulate through streets picking out folks at random who looked as though they could stand a little "gift." Cash was awarded the lucky ones and stunt drew plenty of human interest stories from newspapers.

Wyeth Oil Painting for "Mutiny"

MARKET NOTES

AS ever the hit production situation is getting plenty of attention, with a reasonable flow of contemporary hit product now working and more in sight.

To the exhibitor this means that Saturday and Sunday probably will be most competently taken care of, and he is grateful. But the middle of the week sags and promises to keep on sagging. There is a feeling among the showmen-customers that there is a considerably wider spread in box office values between Class A and Class B pictures. The intelligent showmen who are articulate on the matter say they would be pleased if the picture makers would not so concentrate their endeavors to prove their own genius and thereby release a bit of their intensity of attention for something less than the super-supers.

The fact seems to be that one or two tremendously big pictures a year can make the fame and fortune of a producer, but the sum total of all such product possible or probable will not keep the box office going fifty-two weeks a year. Some of these showmen would like to have the peaks lowered a bit to bring up the level of the valleys.

A very obvious sanity is to be noted in the remarks which Miss Reine Davies quotes from Mr. Everett Riskin, producer, in a recent Hollywood column, in which Mr. Riskin remarks:

"Ignoring the quantitative aspect entirely, critics are forever shouting about 'artistic excellence.' They overlook the fact that there is a market demand for three grades of pictures, just as there is for three grades of automobiles, shoes, dresses or suits.

"The automobile and the movies came into existence at the same time. Their histories run parallel. Both have served humanity well. But no one criticizes the motor industry because it turns out a thousand flivvers to one limousine. In both cases it is a matter of public demand and preference."

And if you need some evidence turn to "What the Picture Did for Me" department in any issue of Motion Picture Herald and see what happens to some of the big time material in a little time market.

WHEN Mr. Red Kann went to see "The New Gulliver", the Soviet-made puppet picture, he discovered delightful technique, but entertainment "warped into Soviet propaganda of the most blatant kind." Which is not surprising, but when he announces that the owners of the American rights are pondering a version for general release in which all possible propaganda elements either will be "eliminated or toned down", he has exciting news. That has never been done to a Soviet picture yet.

DELICATE

ESPECIALLY relevant these days, considering the endeavors of advertisers to make ballyhoo for merchandise out of all entertainment, all entertainment personalities, are the manifestations pertaining to copy writing. Printers' Ink, we were advised by Motion Picture Herald recently, in its issue of the week previous, proposed a Department of Decency for business in general under direction of a "civilizer" with authority to civilize, starting in the advertising department.

The editor, sitting in the shade of a walled cantina in Mexico, a rare spot in which to consider decency, turned from that page of the Herald to page 159 of Hearst International—Cosmopolitan for January, and in the third column reached an advertisement reading:

"It's no secret out in Hollywood that more than one famous star has lost her job because of constipation. . . ."

At the moment we doubt if even Mr. Walter Winchell could name "more than one" or even one. And doubtless he would, cheerfully.

Meanwhile—an Olive Tablet to the copywriter. He needs it.

MAY one be forgiven a minor but poignant pleasure in observing the approach of a grand hell of a time in the world of our radio friends on the subject of what we may call "protection and zoning" for broadcasting stations? It seems that the Federal Radio Commission has a-brewing plans for superpower stations to insure service to the remoter regions of the republic, thereby somewhat disturbing the balances and adjustments of the present machinery that concentrates radio where the advertisers' customers are thickest. Formal submissions of plans and the ensuing conflicts are about a year off. It would seem that the lawyers will be doing a lot of business.

MR. ARTHUR BRISBANE, for these several decades an exemplar in the art of writing for the masses, is slipping. In a recent column, discussing the luxury of private railway cars he remarked that in the gala days before 1929 "American private cars were as thick as Milton's Autumnal Leaves That Strow the Brooks in Vallombrosa." Just fancy that in Thoid Avenoo.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

By Ordinance

Small town theatre interests are sponsoring a movement to prevent new competition arising in their cities by controlling the erection of any new theatres and reopening of old structures through local laws which provide fines and prison sentences for violation.

Already enacted in several towns, including Baraboo, Wisconsin; Alameda, California, and Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin, which are typical of the type of centers involved, there are indications of a considerable spread of the movement to come.

Specifically directed at "ruinous overseating," the move has taken form in two "model" ordinances which are being put forth for the use of small town exhibitors. See page 13.

Music Tax Defi

The music pot continued to sizzle this week, with indications that a legal determination of the respective rights of Warner Brothers, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and the music users is not far off.

The large radio networks registered further defiance of Warner, and the American Hotel Association joined them in rejecting Warner's proffered license agreement.

Columbia Broadcasting System said a suit against Warner was in preparation. For particulars, see page 36.

Minors

The descent last weekend of squads of Commissioner Lewis Valentine's New York City policemen on some 59 theatres for violating the law against the admission of minors immediately caused Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia to present to the state legislature a plan for a bill which would permit unescorted children under 16 years of age to attend theatres under the supervision of a theatre matron. Independent owners expressed approval of the plan.

Some 69 theatre managers, cashiers or doormen, out of 115 summoned, were arraigned Monday in municipal court, where they were paroled for hearing later.

Starting at noon Saturday and continuing throughout the day and evening, detectives served 59 neighborhood theatres in Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx with 115 summonses for violation of Section 484, subsection 1, of the Penal Code, which makes it a misdemeanor to permit children under 16 to attend theatres and certain other public places unless accompanied by a parent, guardian or other authorized adult. In most instances, summonses were given to the owner, the ticket seller and the doorkeeper of each theatre. According to Byrnes MacDonald, head of the Juvenile Aid Bureau of the Police Department, the action was taken only after "repeated warnings had been given to owners of theatres."

Immediate passage by the New York State Legislature of a bill which would permit unescorted children under 16 years of age to attend motion picture theatres under proper supervision was urged by Mayor LaGuardia. The proposed bill provides that youngsters under 16 will be allowed to go unaccompanied during non-school hours to those theatres "which have been certified as meeting all requirements for proper showing for children." These requirements, the Mayor explained, include the setting aside of a certain part of the theatre for children, with one or more qualified matrons on hand to care for them, and the showing of pictures suitable for children during the non-school period.

Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York, "wholeheartedly" endorsed the Mayor's suggestion.

Tax Outlook

Sessions of Congress at Washington and legislatures in ten states opened this week, and immediately the attention of the motion picture industry was directed to their potential effects, direct or otherwise, on the box office.

Possibilities of new general taxes were seen resulting from the Supreme Court's nullification of the AAA, which, in addition, caused exhibitors in the agricultural and cattle belts to speculate over the possible effects.

The Presidential budget submitted to Congress anticipated a 25 per cent improvement in amusement receipts in 1936-37, and accordingly, set down an anticipated amusement tax income of $19,500,000, as against $15,000,000 last year.

The legislative situation both in Congress and in the various states is discussed in its possible relation to motion pictures, on page 34.

Spain Approves

Improvement in motion pictures reaching Spain since the Legion of Decency drive has pleased the public in that country, according to a letter received by William F. Montavan, director of the legal department of the National Catholic Welfare Council, in Washington, from Jose Torre de Rodas, editor of Filmor.

Filmor is the official motion picture publication of the Catholic Parents' Association in Spain. The letter follows:

"We congratulate you most heartily on the news reports that you have sent us which are evidence that there has been noticeable improvement in the morality of pictures that are being publicly exhibited in your country.

"We are happy also to report that here in Spain we, too, have noticed that in all motion picture productions coming from the United States there is a marked improvement."

Author!

Hollywood's growing dominance of Broadway is threatened in the impending fight of the Dramatists Guild to obtain for the author a larger share of the proceeds from the sale of screen rights of plays. Indirectly, it is a threat to a thriving source of screen material and talent. The producers, however, welcome Hollywood's bankroll. See page 24.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

WPA's Child

Tangible results in Uncle Sam's long heralded $7,000,000 theatrical production venture are now promised for late this month when WPA officials hope to present several units to the public in New York City.

Critical of some aspects of the project, Elmer Rice, New York regional director, explains it is intended by means of low prices to attract a huge audience for the stage. And Hallie Flanagan, national director, assures that the project will continue beyond next June.

The story, including a resume of the New York program, appears on page 30.

Tax Protest

Allied of New Jersey will protest against the collection of a two per cent city sales tax on film rentals from exhibitors. A court test, seeking an injunction, was proposed at Tuesday's meeting.

The sentiment of exhibitors whose theatres are located outside of New York city limits is that the levying of a city sales tax is unfair to them because they cannot obtain their film supply any place but at the New York exchanges, although their own places of business are not located within the city. They contend that it would be injurious to their business to attempt to pass on to their patrons in New Jersey and up-state New York a tax designed solely for local relief within New York City.

The next hearing on the distributors' protests against the tax comes Friday.

Claims Cut

Creditors' claims which were filed against RKO in the company's reorganization proceedings have been reduced by approximately $21,750,000.

The total claims against the company amounted to $55,104,721. Thus, this amount has been reduced now to less than $34,000,000 and additional reductions in large amounts are more or less certain to be effected. The largest reductions made up to date resulted from the amending of claims filed. Reductions of this kind totaled $15,720,125. Claims amounting to $4,641,386 were withdrawn and stipulations on 17 claims totaling $3,212,283 were recently made, effecting a reduction of approximately $600,000 on that amount. Other reductions have been made through payments toward the retirement of the RKO six per cent secured notes held by Consolidated Film Industries.

The secured debt of RKO is $13,968,500 and approximately $19,500,000 of other claims probably will be ultimately allowed by the court subject to further reduction. Many of the claims in the latter classification can be offset by provisions for their allowance at reduced amounts in a plan of reorganization. Among the most important of such claims is that of Rockefeller Center, amounting to $8,207,000. Provisions for this claim could be made in a plan of reorganization which would reduce it by from $4,000,000 to $6,000,000. From this, unofficial estimates are made that RKO could reorganize with a capitalization of approximately $27,500,000.

The capitalization of Paramount outstanding upon the consummation of the company's reorganization was $61,441,806 and 1,610,452 shares of common stock, by comparison.

Forty-one Hollywood producers, invested approximately $3,070,000 during 1935 on original stories, books and plays for feature production.

Originals, of course, led as the chief source of supply, that division of the story market providing 52 per cent of the acquisitions, or 312, as against 229 books, representing 37 per cent of the total, and only 73 plays, equaling 11 per cent. See page 19.

Silence

Meeting in highly secret session behind closed doors, George L. Berry's "industrial council" convened in Washington Monday to serve as "the voice of industry" in the development of a successor to the NRA.

As President Roosevelt's coordinator for industrial cooperation, Mr. Berry discussed with his handful of supporters the task he has set for himself, but with the United States supreme court dealing another blow to the New Deal, declaring the Agricultural Adjustment Act to be an invasion of state's rights, labor delegates to the Berry meeting foresaw the utter defeat of all plans to force the adoption of a 30-hour week, and began a discussion of a "compromise" at 38 or 40 hours. Other subjects of discussion were the minimum wage and the outlawing of child labor.

One of the surprises of the conference was the listing of Felix Jenkins of New York, counsel for Twentieth Century-Fox, as one of the delegates, it having been expected that the motion picture industry would hold coldly aloof. Only one or two other large industries were represented at the meeting, big business as a whole maintaining its attitude of opposition.

Government Round

The Government won two preliminary victories Tuesday in its equity suit seeking to compel Warner, RKO and Paramount to discontinue their alleged conspiracy against Fanchon and Marco theatres in St. Louis.

Judge Joseph West Molyneaux, 73-year-old jurist of Minneapolis, overruled defense pleas for dismissal and denied Warner's request to interpose a special defense charging Fanchon & Marco and associates conspired to control the St. Louis first-run theatre situation.

Defense counsel contended the issues had been decided conclusively in the criminal action in which the same defendants won acquittal. See page 41.

Japan's Censors

Any newsreels or scenics made in Japan which the censors consider derogatory to the royal family or inimical to the national prestige of the Empire are being barred under new censorship regulations which have gone into effect this month.

Governmental control over industry is spreading over the motion picture industry, the Tokyo correspondent of the HERALD also writes. One objective is protection of domestic production, and the newly formed Tokyo Federal Association is taking an active part in the movement.

These and other developments in the Japanese field are discussed in the article on page 56.

Union Control

Formally effected this week was the resumption of jurisdiction over California studio crafts by the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, which resulted from the IATSE's threat of a few weeks ago to call a strike at all theatres and studios unless its former studio status was returned.

Hundreds who left their studio jobs two years ago, as IATSE members, during the production strike, were returning to their posts, all reinstated. George Browne and John Nick, national IATSE president and vice-president, respectively, were on hand in Hollywood working with Pat Casey producers' union contact, in effecting the new arrangements.

The agreement gives IATSE jurisdiction for five years. It was a signal defeat for the IATSE's competitor, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

This Week in Pictures

WITHOUT STOOGES. On her own, Marcia Healy, sister of comedian Ted, won a part in MGM's "The Great Ziegfeld," which Robert Z. Leonard has near completion. Heading the cast are William Powell, Myrna Loy and Luise Rainer.

TWO GOVERNORS AND A STAR. Governor James Allred of Texas (right) presents an honorary commission in the Texas navy to Ginger Rogers at the state's centennial anniversary, with Governor Frank F. Merriam as a guest. John Boles, who stars with Miss Rogers in "Follow the Fleet," was toastmaster at the dinner of the California Texas Society. Miss Rogers, a native of Texas, was the center of attention of the autograph-hunters after the festivities.

INQUIRING REPORTER. Shirley Temple, on the return of Jean Hersholt and Dorothy Peterson from Callander, Ontario, asks the principals all about the Dionne quintuplets in the forthcoming "The Country Doctor" of Twentieth Century-Fox.

LOOKS ALL RIGHT, but the man at the receiving end of Al Jolson's right seems to be taking it without any particular difficulty. He would. He's James J. Braddock, world's heavyweight champion. But perhaps they're talking about Joe Louis. Jolson is now making "The Singing Kid" at the Warner studio out in Burbank.

STAR AND STAND-IN. Edward Arnold, who stars in the forthcoming "Sutter's Gold," Universal production, talks it over with William Hoover, his "stand-in," and it's indeed a close resemblance. It would be easy to understand that Hoover frequently is mistaken for the star. The picture is now through the shooting stage and in the cutting room and Universal believes it has real reason for predicting the production will be found among the season's leaders.

AN ORANGE JUICE TOAST. W. G. Van Schmus, managing director of the Radio City Music Hall, proposes it to Eileen Creelman, motion picture critic of the New York Sun, and to Eddie Cantor, his guests at a luncheon in the penthouse of the theatre. It's all because of Cantor's "Strike Me Pink," at the Music Hall January 16th. (Cosmo-Sileo photo)

THREE GENERATIONS. Dancers all, but Rita Cansino, third in line, has given up the dance in favor of screen drama. Antonio Cansino, her grandfather, and Edouardo Cansino, her father, hope she'll find some time for the family art.

HER SCREEN DEBUT. On her toes for her premiere on the screen is Harriet Hoctor, ballerina whom the late Florenz Ziegfeld was said to have called "the American Pavlowa." Miss Proctor heads the "American Circus" in MGM's "The Great Ziegfeld."

JUST ONE BIG HAPPY FAMILY GATHERING. The holiday season is past but the memory of the party at which Leon Schlesinger played host to his staff on one of the stages at the Sunset Studios in Hollywood is remembered by the personnel of the producing organization. Mr. Schlesinger, who produces Vitaphone's "Looney Tunes" as well as the "Merrie Melodies," cartoon comedies, made the third annual gathering of the studio folk a memorable affair. The host is standing behind the group. He's not the one holding the "Greetings" poster; instead, he's announcing his good wishes for the year.

SECRET MOVE TO CONTROL NEW THEATRE COMPETITION

Local Ordinances Being Used to Prevent Overseating, Providing Fines and Prison Sentences for Violation; 2 "Model" Forms Devised; Spreading in Small Towns

Exhibition is facing a movement that is proceeding quietly and independently along several fronts, to prevent or curtail considerably the erection of new theatres or the reopening of old structures in places of limited population, by enactment of local laws which provide heavy fines and even prison sentences for violation. Eventually there is expected to develop a stormy tempest in the courts over the issue of Constitutional rights.

Fresh in its present form, but with tangible indications of spreading, the movement is defended by its sponsors—independent owners in small towns—on the grounds that it is aimed at socalled "ruinous competition."

The extent to which exhibition is focusing attention on the strategy is revealed in a private bulletin issued by the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, which said: "We have been informed by other state (exhibitor) organizations that city ordinances have been passed in some of their smaller communities limiting the number of seats to the population of the city or town, in order to keep out "fly-by-nite" promoters who have been operating in their towns to the ruination of a number of small town exhibitors."

Interested exhibitors were told by the Indiana organization that copies of "model" ordinances through which the curtailment could be effected are available for study and use.

Typical of the places where such regulations already have been effected are Baraboo, Wisconsin; Alabama, California, and Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin.

Doubt Legality

The large producer-owned circuits, independently or through their concentrated efforts as the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, have as yet done nothing to contest the action. A spokesman, however, expressed the opinion that the ordinances never would hold up under a court test, which will be undertaken when pressure is felt from the laws.

The distributor-circuits charge that the ordinances are unconstitutional, of the same weight as if Congress had passed a law to prevent any person other than those already so engaged from producing motion pictures, or prohibiting a prospective merchant from opening a bakery, drug store or meat shop where any such shops already exist.

"The moves are bold attempts to preserve monopolies in small towns," it was charged by the distributor-circuit spokesman, who had studied the situation and concluded that the sponsorship usually rests in places where one exhibitor controls the theatre situation and seeks to protect that control.

The laws are not necessarily directed against circuit invasions, but are aimed at any threatening competition, whatever its source.

The model ordinance now being made available to exhibitors in the middle-west, as enacted at Baraboo and Sturgeon, Wisconsin, among other places, controls theatre expansion through a system of licensing and regulating exhibition. It is "declared to be the purpose of this ordinance to protect the citizens in the safety of the theatre going public, to promote the general welfare and to preserve for the citizens proper theatre surroundings." The law controls the business of keeping, conducting or operating any theatre or place for theatrical performances or for the exhibition of motion pictures without first obtaining a license as provided. The problem is to get the license.

The ordinance, however, does not apply to the exhibition of motion pictures or to theatrical performances in schools, churches or in fraternal halls when staged in connection with the work of the fraternal orders, nor does it apply to the exhibition of pictures in connection with educational or scientific lectures wherever given in the community, nor to the exhibition of motion pictures for advertising purposes only and without charge. The natural conclusion, then, is that non-theatrical competition is permitted, regardless of whether or not it is unfair to existing theatres.

Various license fees are charged by the different municipalities, and each licensee and the employees of licensees shall be subject to inspection "at reasonable times" by the police officers of the places where this particular "model" is adopted, and shall be subject to such further "reasonable" rules and regulations as may from time to time be adopted by the common council.

Any license granted may be revoked by the council "after due notice" to the licensee and hearing before the council. Reasons for such revocation are not specified, leaving the exhibitor virtually at the mercy of the council.

A license shall be issued by the city clerk or town clerk only after a vote and authorization by the city council. Each application to the clerk for a license must set forth the

CENSUS BUREAU STUDY OF THEATRES STARTS

The United States Census Bureau has begun the task of surveying theatres and other places of amusement throughout the country for the 1935 census of business. Initial reports are expected to be made available in the summer.

The survey will show the number of theatres in each state by type of shows, box office receipts, number of employees, wages paid, rents, overhead costs and other information, but will not concern itself with profits and losses. Its outline will be based on the 1934 survey, covering business of the preceding year, so that comparisons may be drawn showing the extent of recovery in the last two years.

Mindful of the inadequacies of the business census of two years ago, officials are making every effort to assure complete coverage of the amusement industries. If the survey proves its worth, legislation may be sought for the making of such studies at stated periods.

The canvass will cost $8,000,000 and will employ about 30,000 qualified enumerators, taken from WPA projects and relief rolls. The survey in New York will start the middle of this month.

Argument in Erpi Suit Set for January 17

The damage suit filed by more than 100 exhibitors and sound equipment plaintiffs against A. T. and T., Electrical Research Products, Inc., and Western Electric comes up in the federal district court in New York January 17 on a motion by the defendants for a bill of particulars. The hearing was postponed from Tuesday.

Numerous New York theatres, many of them members of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, filed the actions more than a year ago alleging Erpi's contract arrangements resulted in their making excessive payments for sound equipment and servicing, which they seek to recover. Several independent equipment manufacturers are also plaintiffs.

Ohio Censor Board Cuts Small

The Ohio censor board reviewed a total of 660 reels in December, ordering eliminations in but 27. For the week ending December 19 there was but one deletion in 136 reels. This compares with 20 deletions ordered in 437 reels reviewed in November.

FIGHTING COMPETITION

name or names of the proposed theatre operators, the seating capacity of the theatre, and the approximate cost of the theatre, including building and equipment.

This type of ordinance states that "no more than one license shall be issued by said council for each————————thousand of population in said city as shown by the official census; provided, however, that said Common Council may, in its discretion, issue one additional license for each such unit of population, where the said Common Council is satisfied that said additional licensee has bonafide expended not less than $——— for said theatre and equipment." Obviously, the amount required by the respective councils for expenditure on theatre and equipment by the prospective licensee could be set at a figure as to make construction in that place prohibitive.

Fines or Prison Sentences

Cash fines and/or prison sentences are provided by this ordinance, each day's violation constituting a separate offense.

The second "model," as used in Alameda, California, decrees that "it shall be unlawful for any person, company or corporation to engage in the business of conducting, managing or otherwise controlling any moving picture theatre in the City of Alameda for the purpose of 'cinching' a competitor, or preventing or destroying competition." This provision in itself could prevent or destroy competition.

There is also a provision making it "unlawful for any person, company or corporation to conduct or maintain a moving picture theatre in any location within the City of Alameda where the side walls or front entrance of such theatre will be within 150 feet of any gasoline supply station; and it shall be unlawful for the city council to permit the establishment of a gasoline supply station within 150 feet of the side walls of front entrance of any moving picture theatre."

Anticipating Adverse Ruling

Possibly in anticipation of a test of the constitutionality of the law, this model ordinance provides that "if any section, sentence, clause or phrase of this ordinance is for any reason held to be unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions of the ordinance. The Council hereby declares that it would have passed this ordinance, and each section, sentence, clause or phrase thereof irrespective of the fact that any one or more other sections, sentences, clauses or phrases be declared unconstitutional."

"Any person, company, or corporation violating any of the provisions hereof or failing to comply with any of the regulatory requirements of this ordinance, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor," says the model, "and shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $300 or by imprisonment for a period of not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Each such person, company or corporation shall be guilty of a separate offense for each and every day during any portion of which any violation of any provision of this ordinance is committed, continued, or permitted by such person, company or corporation, and shall be punishable accordingly."

Called "Emergency Measure"

The California type of law explains its purpose thusly: "This ordinance is hereby declared to be an emergency measure for the immediate preservation of the public safety and general welfare, the reason for its urgency being as follows: Several motion picture theatres have been erected in the City of Alameda, and after a comparatively short period of use the buildings have been abandoned and closed. The vacating and disuse of these theatre buildings have caused a depreciation of adjacent property and the various businesses therein located. Furthermore, these vacant buildings constitute a fire menace, and the lobbies thereof become the receptacle of old papers and rubbish, and the resort for dissolute and immoral characters. The construction of more theatre buildings under the circumstances would be contrary to public welfare."

Waxman Renews Contract at GB

Prior to sailing for England recently, Mark Ostrer, chairman of the board of Gaumont British Pictures, gave A. P. Waxman, advertising counsel, a renewal of his contract which continues him in sole charge of the advertising, publicity and exploitation departments.

Disney Receives Legion Honor

Walt Disney was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor Wednesday. The ribbon was bestowed by J. J. Viala, French consul at Los Angeles, at a ceremony held in the Disney Studios. Mr. Disney was inducted into the Legion, formed by Napoleon in 1802, for his contributions to art and entertainment since Mickey Mouse was born some seven years ago.

Protesting Billing of Condon

A scheduled appearance of Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon, important witness against Bruno Richard Hauptmann, at a Plainfield, N. J. theatre, was protested this week in a resolution adopted by a group of 25 ministers who condemned it as "exploitation of human tragedy."

Virginia MPTO Meet Set

Hy Daab Goes to Columbia

Hy Daab, formerly advertising and publicity director for RKO Radio, was scheduled to arrive in New York Saturday from the coast to join Columbia in a similar capacity, succeeding Bruce Gallup, who resigned Tuesday.

Frank Spicker, head of Columbia's art department, also resigned, and will go to New Mexico for a rest. Another resignation was that of Arnold Van Leer, who resigned as exploitation manager, effective January 18, to become associated with Blackstone Company, Hal Horne's advertising and publicity agency.

Since leaving RKO in 1931, Mr. Daab has been in Hollywood, and several weeks ago was placed in charge of special trailer work for Columbia. He directed some big campaigns for RKO, notably "Cimarron." From editorial work on the Jersey City, N. J., Journal, he went to the New York Telegram as columnist. His subsequent posts were with Robertson-Cole, FBO and RKO, becoming advertising and publicity head in 1925.

Mr. Van Leer, formerly executive secretary of the Motion Picture Club, was with First National in 1930 and headed Warner Broadway Theatres. He was publicity director for RKO New York Theatres and exploitation manager for GB Pictures.

Society at the Opening of "Rose of the Rancho"

New York society leaders turned out in full force for the opening of Paramount's "Rose of the Rancho" at the Paramount theatre Tuesday night. The entire house was sold out at $10 admission, the difference between that and the regular admission going to the Musicians' Emergency Fund, sponsored by Mrs. Vincent Astor.

Ampa Luncheons Resume

Observations

Some travel notes of an itinerant editor

by TERRY RAMSAYE

BY a fireside in a La Jolla bungalow of the Elmer Brown Masons at midnight. Outside the Pacific surf boomed and long fingers of foaming water ran up the beach as though to reach into the warming glow of the houselights just beyond.

The flames licked around the weathered driftwood, colored with the stains of some old derelict and the encrusted salts of seven seas.

Lank, glum Max Miller—the same who wrote "I Cover the Waterfront"—sat sprawled in contemplation, seemingly thinking some very long thoughts, remote from the chattering highballers about.

Gossip of Hollywood filled the rest of the room.

A grin spread over Miller, and then he broke into laughter as mad as the cacophony of a macaw.

"What appears to have hit you?"

"I was thinking about when they sent me a story to do for Shirley Temple."

"And, how the hell did they think your hardboiled stuff would apply to a baby story?"

Miller took a violent poke at the fire.

"The story had a boat in it," he explained.

—o—

And speaking of Max Miller brings to mind his latest opus, "The Great Trek," published by Doubleday Doran, in which is related the amazing tale of the five-year drive across the Arctic of a vast herd of reindeer bought from Lomen Brothers' Alaskan herd by the Canadian government to establish a food supply for the Dominion's starving Eskimos. It is such a saga as the Harrison-Cooper-Schoedsack "Grass" so ably recorded for the screen a decade ago.

And that by a certain continuity brings one to the story that Dr. Alfred Goldsmith, consultant, researcher and inventor of authority on radio and other noises, tells of the adventure of Mrs. Goldsmith in quest of a maid at an employment agency.

It appears that she arrived at an interview with a red-cheeked, robust Finnish girl candidate, a recent importation.

"Can you cook?"

"No."

"Can you make beds?"

"No."

"Have you had experience in cleaning?"

Herewith are set down some observations from the editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD concerning various manifestations in the scene with particular reference to Hollywood and thereabouts, in connection with his midwinter excursion to those parts.

This was a puzzle, but the answer ultimately was "No."

Then demanded Mrs. Goldsmith, "What can you do?"

The Finnish girl brightened up and raised herself in pride.

"I can milk reindeer," she proclaimed

IN THE CAN

One of the advantages of travel is that friends put themselves on record in letters with notions which would be lost and forgotten in the usual prattle of the cocktail hour. Now, for instance, is at hand a note written of a leisurely Long Island Sunday afternoon by Harry Dryer, sound engineer and associate of the writer in the days when the Pathe rooster was learning to crow through a photocell.

Says Mr. Dryer: "Soliloquy on American merchandising methods—For years we get along with glass radio tubes and they are O.K. But General Electric in 1935 must make radio tubes of metal—much better than glass tubes (?) Five minutes later, every independent tube manufacturer announces glass tubes with bases to fit the same sockets as metal tubes—these are much better than metal tubes (?) Now, is this procedure unique in radio? No. For years we drink beer out of glass bottles and it is O.K. In 1935, the Krueger beer concern announces beer in tin cans—much better than beer in bottles (?) Five minutes later Mr. Piel, beer maker, announces his beer in glass bottles, shaped like a tin can—much better than beer in cans (?)"

"This," observes Mr. Dryer, with the pressure of feeling in his pen, "is progress (?)"

"MYSTERY" in THE DESERT

The fevered efforts of the Los Angeles press to write deep mystery into the unhappy ending of the life of Hollywood's Thelma Todd represent typical floreation of that school of journalism which has so large a share in the making of the world's state of mind about the motion picture.

What the Los Angeles papers have to say of the screen and its people is spread to the world, through its own pages, over its syndicate wires, and endlessly through the rewriting of the two hundred and more special Hollywood correspondents of the daily and fan press of the world.

If Los Angeles journalism was solely for local consumption it would be as unimportant as that vast and vapid city itself. It is because it tells the world that it matters.

One of the commonplaces of the time-worn yellow technique now still applied is the conversion, for page one purposes, of accidental and suicide deaths into "murder mysteries." This method inevitably produces a mystery that can not be solved because there isn't any. In a city where two policemen, posed with their fingers crossed because it is Friday the thirteenth, rate a three-column picture in the news section, it is probably not difficult to get cooperation for such fabrications.

Substantially any day's paper is an exhibit. A few weeks ago the morning press of Los Angeles had Sol Wurtzel's home robbed of $50,000 worth of rare jewels. By late afternoon it was down to $3,000 in old keepsakes. A few days later the morning editions had Tom Geraghty's daughter, Carmelita, wife of Carey Wilson, "found murderously attacked in Hollywood mystery." The Wilson residence, it was alleged, had been entered, with details about jimmy marks on a backdoor. The place had been thrown into confusion, rifled no doubt by robbers, etc., etc. And, believe it please, the police suspected the use of "some blunt instrument." After exhaustive examination of the dire situation it was modestly recorded in subsequent papers that Mrs. Wilson had fainted and fallen, and it seemed that the blunt instrument was the corner of the bathtub. They just naturally forgot about the jimmy marks, which were not, and the looting of the house, which had not occurred.

Some of the movie columns share in this amazingly freehand journalistic technique. One of the most entertaining and certainly terrifically original writers about the screen is Lloyd Pantages, who recently set down that Cecil B. DeMille was a playwright with "The Squaw Man" to his credit. That will set some to wondering what it was that Mr. DeMille, Jesse Lasky and Samuel Goldwyn got from Edwin Milton Royle for $5,000 in 1913. Another Pantages item of charm was his account of how the American Film Company, many a year ago, built a studio up at Santa Barbara to remove Mary Miles Minter from the irritations and disturbances of Hollywood. That will be interesting to the Chamber of Commerce up at Santa Barbara in view of their gift of the site of the American's old "Flying A" studio to Samuel Sheffield Hutchinson back in 1912 while Mary was little Juliet Shelby and hadn't heard about movies yet.

That's how history is made.

Whereas, some years ago when you had that same job before, there came to your fair land Mr. Lupton A. Wilkinson, aide to Mr. Herbert Hoover, and on missions of Near East Relief and projects of American largess,

And whereupon in your royal appreciation you subsequently made conveyance to Mr. Wilkinson of notification of his glorification by conferring upon him the Order of the Golden Cross, highest of all Greek orders of honor,

And whereas, while that was in transit you lost your job and got t'hell out of there, and, whereas, when Mr. Wilkinson appeared at the Greek embassy in Washington, D. C., to receive his hardware, your successors and assigns, pro tem, ad interim, gave him the Hellenic Republican razz—making him the first un- or de-decorated American in Greek history.

Would it not be royal Greek justice to forward forthwith, duly engraved, post-dated, one Golden Cross to Lupton A. Wilkinson, of public relations counsel, Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc., Hollywood, California.

SO RED THE RIVERA

Across the table in an estaminet in the Vieux Carre along with the cafe brulot at rendezvous with an old friend, a civil engineer up from Mexico for the holidays in gay New Orleans, came gossip of the vagaries of that Diego Rivera, Mexico's Art Director of fame in our world of the motion picture by reason of his ill-conceived mural for what was then called Radio City.

Our friend, who must be nameless here in behalf of his health, had not so long ago officiated a bit as advisor to the volatile Senor Rivera, in what that very Mexican worthy considered an "affair of honour."

It seems that some ardently red—Moscow red—Mexican blade had been so indiscreet as to say that Rivera for all his proclamations of faith was but a lukewarm red at best, not a real radical, not a real Communist, etc. And this, it would appear, had tremendously infuriated Rivera, who at the moment could think of nothing suitable except that he should arrange for a spectacular shooting of his critic. It developed that Rivera was not a little hazy about the meaning of Communism, but that he likes red, just because it is red.

The consulted and consulting engineer, being yet a bit under the inhibiting influences of his Anglo-Saxon culture, demurred a bit.

"Is shooting, in this case, absolutely necessary? Suppose you just ignored the matter?"

"'I have no choice,' he quoted Rivera, 'because under our customs I must either be avenged so, or else meet him in a public debate on the subject of my devotion to the cause.'"

"The debate," observed my friend, "might be very nice—why not?"

"But, it is not appropriate that I as an official of the Government of Mexico should meet him in debate."

"That might be just as appropriate as shooting him—also as an official."

In sequel came much talk about it, endless talk about it.

The last word from Mexico was that Senor Rivera, with some reluctance, had decided to meet the situation by writing a pamphlet, a very red pamphlet, to show indeed how very red is the Rivera. He will write it out, if it takes all winter.

WHY CHILI!

All of the eccentricities of Hollywood and in fact all of Southern California may yet be explained by endocrinology. The fact seems to be that many if not most of the local products of the soil are deficient in various mineral salts and vitamines to such a degree that physicians are prescribing green stuff imported from east of the mountains, from the markets of Denver and Kansas City for ailing folks. This obviously gets no space in the California press.

Presumably not guided by any scientific advice, the laboring strata of the native population achieve an equivalent result through their preference for the super hot peppers of the Rio Grande valley, far to the east, for their chili. The Santa Fe pepper is said to be a riot of Vitamin A.

The proudest boast of a California menu is "eastern beef" and a real steak is to be come by only through research.

This explains that certain mysterious emptiness and unidentifiable yearning that overtakes the transient sojourner from the green pastures of the east, in these parts. The climate is adverse to sincere drinking, thus reducing the effectiveness of the usual treatment indicated by such symptoms. The best in the spirits of the east taste as though they were depressed, too, and the desert water makes a chaser a curse.

A typical manifestation bearing on the local taste is the currently exciting success in the liquor trade of a locally produced tipple known as "Fast Gin," being, one may suppose, a sequel to Sloe Gin. "Fast Gin" is pink in color and has a perfume flavor reminiscent of a powder puff. You must taste it to appreciate it. As cagey Gus McCarthy remarks about many pictures: "I've never seen anything like it before."

Some of the ex-patriates interned in the motion picture colony import a considerable share of their groceries from New York and Chicago, using air express.

The public eating trade of the Los Angeles area is remarkable for the grace and skill of its presentations, despite the vapidity of the content. It all looks almost exactly like something to eat. In Hollywood high class restaurants onions are to be found on the menu but are served only by special and persistent order. Garlic for salad dressings is available, under substantially bootleg terms.

This is, however, not a sectional complaint. From the western slope of the Appalachian mountains to the surf beaten beaches of the Pacific the vast majority live in shocking culinary and dietary ignorance. The result is to make New Orleans, dominated by its French and Creole cooks, stand out as a great world capital.

$3,070,000 SPENT IN 1935 FOR 614 FEATURE STORIES

Originals Constitute More Than Half of Purchases by 41 Producers; Books Second; Only 73 Plays Bought in the Year

Forty-one producing companies in 1935 purchased 614 stories for feature production, investing approximately $3,070,000, based on the generally accepted average expenditure of $5,000 each. Costs, however, actually ran as high as $100,000 and $125,000 for "hit" stage plays.

Original stories lost no ground in 1935 as the principal source of material, those purchases amounting to 52 per cent of the total made, there having been 312 original manuscripts acquired, as against 229 published books (including a scattering of magazine stories), representing 37 per cent of the total, and only 73 plays, equaling 11 per cent.

The purchases were made for immediate production, both to complete 1934-35 schedules and, for the most part, for 1935-36. However, several dozen properties were, as usual, placed "on the shelf" for future use, adding thereby to the millions of dollars' worth of story material on hand in the vaults of studios.

The average monthly story purchase was 51, ranging from the all-time low of 14 in October, to the record-breaking high of 100 in April, and comparing as follows:

Month	Originals	Books	Plays	Totals
January	26	14	7	47
February	21	17	3	41
March	28	15	5	48
April	43	44	13	100
May	23	19	9	51
June	24	19	7	50
July	41	12	10	63
August	21	7	4	32
September	34	53(a)	4	91
October	7	5	2	14
November	22	12(b)	5	39
December	22	12(c)	4	38
TOTALS FOR THE YEAR	312	229(d)	73	614

(a) Including 4 published magazine stories.
(b) Including 1 published magazine story.
(c) Including 2 published magazine stories.
(d) Including 7 published magazine stories.

There was unusually spirited bidding during the year among the principal producers for the best books, outstanding plays and originals and magazine stories with good potential value to the releasing schedules of affiliated distribution divisions.

Too, the ambitions of virtually all producers to continue under the new order to produce stories of high standing, from a literary standpoint and otherwise, were noticeably reflected in the high quality of many dozens of the properties purchased. There was hardly a book or play or manuscript of merit that lent itself to filming that was not taken by one or another of Hollywood's producers for conversion into motion pictures.

December closed the year with only ordinary activity in the story market, 38 purchases having been consummated by 12 producers, as follows:

Outstanding among December acquisitions was "Winterset," the long-running Maxwell Anderson play, which went to Radio. "Hurricane," a book by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall, authors of MGM's successful "Mutiny on the Bounty," was bought by Samuel Goldwyn for United Artists release. Mr. Goldwyn also bought Rachel Crothers' play, "Perfectly Good Women." Paramount decided to film Robert Louis Stevenson's "Suicide Club" stories. December purchases, with authors' names and all other available credits, were as follows:

ABSOLUTE QUIET, book, by George F. Worts, purchased by MGM.

'Fang and Claw' Teems With Thrills

"FANG AND CLAW," a Radio Picture produced by Frank Buck; filmed by Nicholas Cavaliere and Harry E. Squire; musical score by Winston Sharples; presented at the Rialto Theatre.

Frank Buck doesn't wander the wilderness to play charades—his pictures teem with exciting life and action—and none more than that now sending quivers along the spines of Rialto audiences. Buck went to camera-capture thrills and once again he brings 'em back alive. Slithering pythons lash and thresh in deadly fury, struggling with cold hatred to encircle hapless victims in their terrible crushing coils; fierce, snarling cats, with death in every fang and claw, charge with gaping jaws into the very face of the camera with human prey one scant leap ahead; those jungle jesters, the monkeys and the bears, supply the comic touch in an atmosphere of ever-threatening tragedy; unblinking crocodiles yawn under the sweating sun to come to sudden perilous life in clinches with their captors; indeed, the whole big parade of the jungle tears across the screen, only the Rialto's safety-robbing each scene of terror. Every sequence is topped by the one that follows; suspense and drama build with each succeeding scene, and the interludes between shots of heart-stopping adventure are filled with welcome respites of laughter at the antics of the simpering simians and blustering bruins. The film fulfills its every promise.

Otterson Leaves For Coast; Leake Quits as Trustee

Activities in Paramount's corporate affairs this week were threefold: (1) John Edward Otterson, president, was scheduled to arrive in Hollywood on Thursday for studio conferences with Floyd B. Odlum, a director and large stockholder; (2) Eugene W. Leake resigned as trustee, his resignation being significant of the proximity of the winding up of the affairs of the old bankrupt; (3) Federal court granted applicants for fees for bankruptcy services the right to appeal disallowances.

Mr. Odlum, according to New York reports, has also been in conference with Leo Spitz, RKO president, on the Coast, in connection with management and new financial arrangements for RKO. It is expected they will return east with Mr. Otterson in about two weeks. The latter is expected to stop at St. Louis en route west to be formally excused by the court from attending the equity trial there, for which he was subpoenaed.

Eugene W. Leake resigned Monday as one of the two remaining trustees of Paramount Publix, his resignation being accepted by Judge Alfred C. Coxe in United States district court in New York. Judge Coxe directed that Charles D. Hilles, the remaining trustee, "shall be deemed to assume charge of remaining contracts, commitments and obligations entered into by Charles D. Hilles and Eugene W. Leake" as trustees of Paramount. Charles E. Richardson, the third of the trustees, all of whom were appointed by the federal court in 1933, resigned about a year ago and is now a member of the Paramount board.

Leave to appeal from Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe's order reducing or disallowing the applications for fees was granted by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals Monday to eight participants in the reorganization of Paramount Publix. The applications for leave to appeal were unopposed. Those who were granted the right to appeal to the higher court yesterday are Kuhn, Loeb & Co., whose application for $114,287 was disallowed by Judge Coxe; Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood, whose application for $150,812 was disallowed; the Paramount stockholders' committee, whose application for a $70,000 fee was disallowed and whose application for $170,875 expenses was reduced to $110,533; Adolph Feldblum, whose application for $3,020 was disallowed; Samuel Zirn, whose application for $76,207 was disallowed; Archibald Palmer, whose application for $15,000 was disallowed; Jacob J. Lesser, whose application for $37,512 was disallowed, and A. J. Schanfarber, A. M. Frumberg, Edgar J. Schoen and Samuel Zirn, jointly, whose application for $82,868 was disallowed.

Previously, the Circuit Court had granted leave to Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine and Cook, Nathan & Lehman to appeal from Judge Coxe's order reducing their applications by $500,000 and $135,500, respectively. The appeals will all be placed on the high court's calendar for hearing when reached.

Guaranteed Opens Foreign Branches

Samuel Goldstein, treasurer of Guaranteed Pictures, has returned from a three months' European tour, during which he established a London office, with M. Swift, former British agent for Mascot, in charge. Mr. Goldstein will next proceed to open South American offices, having lined up additional independent product for distribution abroad.

Offices were also established on the Continent, in charge of Frank Bates, who will make headquarters at Paris. Mr. Bates formerly represented Monogram.

Mr. Goldstein found the industry "flourishing" abroad. Citing as typical of the "tremendous production activities going on throughout Europe," Mr. Goldstein told of the construction of a $2,500,000 studio at London, with 16 stages.

Berg Leaves United For Post with Horne

Herbert Berg, for the last two years in charge of trade paper publicity for United Artists, has resigned to become associated with the Blackstone Company, Hal Horne. His duties there will place him in charge of trade publicity and advertising. He will concentrate his activities on the Walter Wanger Production and other Blackstone accounts. Prior to joining United Artists, Berg was on the editorial staffs of Film Daily and Box Office, and handled publicity for various major producers. He assumes his new duties at the Blackstone Company January 20.

Buying Combines Advance in Omaha And in New York

The comparatively new independent exhibitor buying combine movement this week made substantial progress in Omaha, where a corporate setup was effected, and in New York, where sponsors claimed 130 theatres were already lined up.

New Exhibitor Organization

With the turn of the year, NIDEA became the newest alphabetical organization to join the long list in the film industry.

NIDEA is the official cognomen of the Nebraska, Iowa and Dakota Exhibitors Association, with headquarters in the Loyal Hotel, Omaha, recently formed to serve as a protective organization for independent exhibitors in the matter of meeting with circuit expansion in small cities and towns; also, it is to serve as an aid in joint film buying.

Charles E. Williams, who is serving his 16th term as president of the Nebraska-Western Iowa MPTOA, was selected business manager of the new organization. Mr. Williams insists that NIDEA and MPTO are to be in no way confused even though he acts as spokesman and head of both, and the affairs of both will be handled by him from his own office, 315 Loyal hotel.

The titular head of NIDEA is H. S. Tammen, Yankton, S. D., chairman of the executive board. His six executive committee associates are: Dale Goldie, Cherokee, Ia.; Jennie Wickman, Tekamah, Neb.; R. F. Kehrberg, Sheldon, Ia.; H. F. Kennedy, Broken Bow, Neb.; Mons Thompson, St. Paul, Neb., and O. C. Johnson, Falls City, Neb.

Listed in the charter organization of NIDEA are 22 exhibitors from the three states that make up the title of the organization. All future prospective members will be received into NIDEA upon a three-fourth's vote of the total membership. There is generally an open-door invitation to all exhibitors of the independent variety, but the clause of acceptance makes it a fairly exclusive society.

What the fees for each member will be, Manager Williams said he was not at liberty to disclose. Nor could he divulge the actual working agreement, if any, with the distributors.

There will not be a joint buying contract, he said, but rather each member buys his own film and will use a specially created contract—an instrument only recently drawn up for NIDEA.

What the content of the contract is, Mr. Williams said will not be announced immediately. The executive board of NIDEA will disclose its stipulations, he said.

The organization has created little stir in these parts as yet owning to the extreme secrecy with which it was created. The organization does not have any Omaha members except Mr. Williams, who operates the Park, a suburban. No other suburban managers belong, though at least two of them attended organization meetings held in the early part of December.

Independent Circuit Plans

Approximately 130 theatres in New York are definitely committed for the projected new independent circuit which is sponsored by exhibitors affiiliated with the I.T.O.A., Milton C. Weisman, attorney for the exhibitor organization and one of the originators of the plan, was quoted as saying on Monday.

Mr. Weisman estimated that it would take "three or four more weeks" to perfect plans.

AUTHORS DEMAND NEW CONTRACT IN HOLLYWOOD'S STAGE INVASION

Dramatists Guild Contends That Film Company's Share in Producer's Returns Discourage Bidders; Drives Prices Down

Hollywood's capture of Broadway has precipitated a crisis in the affairs of the legitimate theatre. Not a financial crisis, because the million dollar backing made available this season by motion picture interests to theatrical producers has proved a godsend to a languishing stage, but one of serious disagreement over the respective share of playwright and producer in the "movie money."

It has reached a stage where the dramatists are preparing to fight the Hollywood invasion, and their first move is to demand that managers agree to a new author-manager basic agreement when the present five-year pact expires March 1.

The situation arises directly from Hollywood's aggression on Broadway in the last two or three years, brought boldly to the fore by the unprecedented underwriting this season. Some 25 New York plays are known to have been backed by motion picture interests. The estimated ratio ranges from one-third to one-half, and even more of the total put on the boards since last fall.

(By mid-November, 14 of the 44 productions which opened in New York had screen bankrolls behind them. See HERALD, November 23.)

The Dramatists Guild, the "closed shop" union of those who write Broadway's plays, has given notice that the basic agreement would not be renewed in its present form. There are several important issues involved, but the chief bone of discontent is the terms under which the screen rights are sold.

The increasing participation of Hollywood interests in Broadway theatrical production has lessened and often eliminated competition among the film companies for the purchase of screen rights, with a corresponding reduction in profits for the authors.

Under the prevailing arrangement authors and producers have shared 50-50 in the price paid for the motion picture rights. When a film company invests in a Broadway production, however, it becomes entitled to a part of the producer's share, and in some instances the major share. It can therefore afford to outbid other film companies for the "movie" rights since it is merely paying money to itself.

The Dramatists Guild, or its individual members, contend that this practice, by discouraging other companies from bidding, drives down prices.

It was reported that the dramatists would demand the full amount obtained from sale of screen rights. A royalty plan, based on film box-office receipts, also was favored.

Sidney Howard, president of the Guild, has invited suggestions from authors and managers. Meanwhile both groups have formed committees to study the situation, but an agreement is not likely very soon.

The problem is a knotty one, for if the terms are altered to please the author, it will certainly discourage motion picture financing, and it is realized that the stage will suffer.

Elmer Rice, New York regional director of the federal theatre project and playright of note, believes that "about 50 percent" of the current Broadway plays are financed by motion picture companies.

"If we eliminate the struggling cooperatives, such as the Group Theatre and the Theatre Union and the stars who are appearing in revivals of the classics, the proportion of the plays backed by Hollywood approaches 75 per cent," estimates Mr. Rice. "In most instances the picture companies do not get back their investment. But the theatre is useful to them as a source of story material and a proving ground for actors, directors and writers."

And the producers, most of whom seek the film industry's backing, admit that it has been greatly responsible for the improved condition of the New York stage this season. "Movie" money has made possible production on a lavish scale, and a number of hits have resulted. Notable among these are "Boy Meets Girl," from which Warner is drawing generous profits; MGM's "Jubilee," "Winterset" and "Pride and Prejudice;" Paramount's "May Wine;" "Jumbo," in which prominent industry figures have a major share, and "Libel!", which is backed by Twentieth Century-Fox.

Brock Pemberton, one of the more astute of New York producers, considers it one of the economic phenomenons that "the movie makers have discovered the legitimate in a big way and gold from their bankers is flowing into productions in streams."

"Two things have motivated this new policy—a need of screen material and a lack of aversion to making money," Mr. Pemberton observes. "A profit of several hundred thousand dollars on a $10,000 investment in a stage production looks just as well on a financial statement as a return of the same amount on a $500,000 movie production. In fact, it looks better, since a picture is quite as apt not to return its investment as a play in these sales-resistance days.

"On the whole the experiment has been successful. Several movie-backed plays have made or will make fortunes; others have been spectacular failures. Some of the latter, including several of the most costly débâcles, should really not be included in the score, since they were backed not by companies but by individuals associated with the picture industry. Statistics would probably prove that individuals dealing exclusively in screen scenarios know little about play scripts. Values in the two media are so different an expert in one could easily be fooled by the other.

"The highest quotient of success has come in those instances where Hollywood has picked a legitimate producer and backed his judgment or where the New York branch of the picture outfit has passed on a play.

"Generally speaking, a play script which is inherently a great picture possibility is by the same token a lousy play, as we say on Broadway, and vice versa. Almost any successful play can be given a treatment which, combined with its prestige on the stage, will make it a valuable picture possibility.

"If Hollywood will stick to the lot and pick its New York producers carefully, great good will come to both camps from the new policy. Not only have they furnished financial sinews but they have loaned players. The logical development of the arrangement would be a close interlocking of stage and screen, with players shuttling back and forth between the two. This would add to the players' screen life and furnish new interest in the speaking drama for provincial movie hordes.

"The stage has been richly rewarded as a result of this largess. More productions have been made than could otherwise have been done, and they have been on a more lavish scale. The physical standard of production has reached new peaks since the advent of movie money."

Thirteen Hours by Air

(Paramount)

Adventure Drama

A story in which thrill action is the keynote, together with the presentation of a pair of stars with a supporting cast of acknowledged name value, plus direction by a man who just turned in an unanticipated entertainment box office success, are the commercial values in this feature upon which Paramount is depending to arouse exhibitor interest.

The story is an original by Bogart Rogers and Frank Dazey with screen play by Howard J. Green. It is being directed by Mitchell Leisen, who made "Hands Across the Table."

Fred MacMurray, currently in "Hands Across the Table" and "The Bride Comes Home," shares the featured roles with Joan Bennett. Two of Paramount's promising junior players, Adrienne Marden and Bennie Bartlett, also have prominent parts. The remainder of the cast is composed of players well known to audiences. Included are Brian Donlevy, Alan Baxter, remembered for his work in "Mary Burns, Fugitive," Zasu Pitts, Ruth Donnelly, Mildred Stone, Fred Keating and Ed Shaefer.

Practically all the action takes place aboard a speeding transcontinental passenger plane. As the picture runs the scale of romance, drama, comedy, thrill and action, it builds to its melodramatic apex in a bitter battle above the clouds when MacMurray, anxious to protect the safety and lives of his passengers, stages a sensational fight with a vicious killer who is trying to prevent the plane from reaching its destination.

During the past few weeks, because of several extraneous circumstances, public attention has been drawn to this picture. Patrons already know that the company sent a technical crew aboard an eastward bound plane to get authentic background shots. A follow-up on this publicity, plus hints of what is to be expected from the virile spirited entertainment, should be beneficial in again centering patron interest on the attraction.

Next Time We Love

(Universal)

Dramatic Romance

Story quality, concentrating on its power to stimulate sympathetic human interest, is the element upon which the producers are counting heavily to excite popular interest in this feature. At the same time they are not overlooking the potential commercial value attached to the prominence of the author, the prestige of the director and the name value of principal players and supporting cast.

Substantially, "Next Time We Love" is a story of a great love, a great friendship, many disappointments, and thrilling triumphs that were sacrificed to the great love. Dealing with human characters moving in human situations, it tells of a newspaper reporter who had grand dreams all of which were part and parcel of the life of the girl he married. It deals of the friendship, always honest, helpful and straightforward, of a disappointed suitor. It takes the wife to glowing stage stardom; the husband to fame as a foreign correspondent. It brings tragedy to him in the form of a believed incurable illness. It brings happiness to husband and wife when the woman, spurning her husband's offer of freedom, remains at his side when he needs her most.

The production is based on Ursula Parrott's published novel, "Say Goodbye Again." The screen play is by Melville Baker, collaborating author of "Last Days of Pompeii" and "The Gilded Lily." Direction is by E. H. Griffith, maker of such features as "Holiday," "Animal Kingdom," "No More Ladies" and "Another Language," productions which indicate the character of this.

Margaret Sullavan, currently in "So Red the Rose," is featured with James Stewart, previously seen in "Murder Man" and in the forthcoming "Rose Marie" in his first leading role. The third element of the triangle is Ray Milland, remembered for "The Gilded Lily" and other Paramount pictures. The supporting cast includes Grant Mitchell, Anna deMetrio, Robert McWade, Ronnie Cosbey, Florence Roberts, Christian Rub and Charles Fallon.

Sky Parade

(Paramount)

Adventure

This production is based upon "The Air Adventures of Jimmy Allen," a radio broadcast feature sponsored by several commencial oil companies, in which it is pointed out that opportunities for valuable exploitation contacts with these companies are almost limitless.

For story purposes, with original screen play by Byron Morgan, it is a thrill history of commercial and business aviation development in the United States from the days of the ex-war ace fliers down to the present. Geared to a thrill action motif, it is a subject which it is believed will prove of unusual interest to juveniles who have followed Jimmy Allen's radio adventures, but also will be more than ordinarily appealing to adults.

Jimmie Allen is presented in the leading role, in which he enacts many of the thrilling incidents that have been part of his air career. The supporting cast includes William Gargan, now in "Man Hunt;" Katherine DeMille, Kent Taylor and Grant Withers in the featured roles. Others who participate are Billy Lee, Bennie Bartlett, Robert Fiske, Sid Saylor, Betty Jane Rhodes and Ed Dearing.

The Roughneck

Comedy Romance

Combining romance, drama, comedy, mystery, action, suspense and thrill; localed aboard a Cuba bound pleasure liner, in Havana and in a swank society home; the characters are a ship's stokehold crew and its boss, battling sweethearts, interloping chislers, legitimate business men, crooks, would-be smugglers, all heroes, heroines and clowns, it is the belief of the producing company that this feature embraces all the fundamentals necessary to assure pleasing entertainment and more than the usual allotment of showmanship availability.

Based on an original story by John Bright and Robert Tasker, with screen play by Robert Ellis, Helen Logan and Barry Trivers, the production, while running the range of the elements noted, majors in fast moving comedy in situations, dialogue and action. An odd collection of humanity is thrown together on the boat. The stokehold boss is in love with the manicurist. A gem buyer is en route to purchase a fabulously priced jewel. Two conspiring groups of crooks are planning to steal it. One succeeds, and through making love to the stoker, tries to smuggle it into the United States without his knowledge. But the manicurist heroine, aided by the prinicpal comedy relief, intervenes to see that all get justice.

Paul Kelly and Arline Judge, currently in "King of Burlesque" and "It Had to Happen," are teamed in the roles of the battling lovers. Sammy Cohen, long absent from the screen, is the principal comic. The role of the gem merchant is assumed by Gregory Ratoff, with Mona Barrie and Halliwell Hobbes as one team of crooks and Edward Brophy another who plans to rob him. The major action of the production revolving about these players, a running drunk gag features Ernest Alexander. Others in the cast are George Chandler, Frank Hagney, Charles Stevens, Robert Hemans and Granville Bates as members of the crew, and Wade Boteler, Stanley Blystone and Tom O'Grady as detectives.

Direction is by Lewis Seiler, recently engaged in making Spanish versions, but also credited with "Paddy O'Day" and "Charlie Chan in Paris."

The Walking Dead

(Warner)

Mystery Drama

The subject matter of this production treats of a topic, the restoration of dead to life, that for ages either as a scientific experiment or piece of spiritual mysticism has intrigued the public mind. In this case, with a melodramatic semi-mystery story as a motivating basis, the subject is approached from a scientific standpoint, as it is currently being investigated by Drs. Alexis Carrel and Robert Cornish. An innocent man is electrocuted legally as a murderer. A scientist obtains permission to endeavor to re-create life within him. After a successful operation picturizing the uses of much scientific apparatus, the doctor is acclaimed by the world. The revived man sets about to annihilate those who were responsible for his electrocution. While he is killed by the two principal plotters, they are in turn electrocuted following an auto crash. As attention is concentrated on the development of this angle, other entertainment elements, except for a slight romantic contrast, do not have a very important function.

The picture is adapted from an original story by Edward Adamson and Joseph Fields, with the screen play by Peter Milne, Robert Adams and Adamson. Direction is by Michael Curtiz, maker of the current "Captain Blood," and experienced in this brand of mystery thrill picture by such features as "Mystery of the Wax Museum" and "Doctor X."

Boris Karloff of "Frankenstein" and other scare pictures will be seen as the revived man and Edmund Gwenn as the scientist. Barton MacLane and Ricardo Cortez are the super crooks, accidentally electrocuted after the revived Karloff has killed their minions Paul Harvey, Robert Strange and Joseph Sawyer. The show's minor romantic quality is shared by Marguerite Churchill (returning to the screen) and Warren Hull. Other players to be seen include Henry O'Neill, Joseph King, Eddie Acuff, Ruth Robinson, Addison Richards, Kenneth Harlan and Adrian Rosley.

F Man

(Paramount)

Comedy

It was to be expected that the G-man cycle eventually would be satirized from a comedy standpoint. That is the atmosphere in which this picture is being produced. Its aim is to substitute comics for heroics. To that end it is the intention of the producers to put the money which is invested in it right where it belongs, right up on the screen.

"F Man" is the story of a boy who wanted to be a G-man. He couldn't quite make the grade. Everything that his actual and screen predecessors do and did with dramatic precision backfired on him. Naturally the reaction is comedy. Of course the F man is a hero in the end, made so by circumstances and a parade of incidents in which his part is always hilariously funny.

The story is an original by Richard Connell with screen play by Eddie Welch. Eddie Cline is directing.

Jack Haley is presented in the leading role. The supporting cast lists William Frawley, seen in "Ship Cafe;" Franklin Parker; Grace Bradley now in "Anything Goes;" Norman Willis and Adrienne Marden, a pair of newcomers; Edward McWade, also in "Anything Goes;" Robert Middlemass and Onslow Stevens.

In applying comedy verve to the established drama of G-man activities, sponsors of the feature suggest that its exploitation make use of ideas based upon that atmosphere but presented with a comedy twist. Incidents in the story are many on which such stunts and gags can be premised.

Sutter's Gold

(Universal)

Biography

In the estimation of Universal and Edmund Grainger, the producer, "Sutter's Gold" is destined to be one of the year's important pictures. Essentially, with adaptation by Gene Fowler and screen play by Jack Kirkland and Walter Woods, it is the romantic and dramatic biography of John Sutter, upon whose lands gold was discovered in California. Its secondary quality is a graphic picturization of one of the most vivid chapters of that state's history.

For motivation the story is an authentic tracing of Sutter's personal career. Teeming with a spirit of adventure it takes him from his Austrian home, carries him to New York, where he made the acquaintance of Peter Perkin, to a Hudson Bay trading post in Vancouver. Follows a journey to the Sandwich islands in which some of the production's most colorful events occur and then aboard a slave ship bound for California on which Sutter first demonstrates his dominant personality. Then to California and the founding of the vast New Helvetia country, his dealing with the Russians and Spaniards, in which he added to his holdings. A pause is made to relate Sutter's romantic love adventures and then gold is discovered. Still sticking to fact, it pictures how Sutter never profited and tells of his fight to have the United States government recognize his claims, then his temporary victory and to his death.

Directed by James Cruze, Edward Arnold will be seen as Sutter, Lee Tracy as Perkin and Binnie Barnes as Countess Zarreti, with Montagu Love as captain of the slave ship. Other principals are John Miljan, Mitchell Lewis, Frank Reicher and Harry Cording. The supporting cast, numbering into the hundreds, contains many familiar screen names.

As one of the first pictures dealing strictly with personalities and events that are typically American history in character, it should quickly lend itself to exhibitor and audience attention. As a story of a great adventure, brimming over with many thrilling incidents, all against authentic backgrounds, the significance of the first phase becomes more striking.

Men on Her Mind

(Warner)

Comedy Mystery Drama

Notwithstanding the rather irrelevant title tone, plus the fact that the leading feminine player is more quickly remembered for her more sophisticated dramatic romance characterizations, the fact is that this is a mystery detective story, embellishing that element with comedy, romance and drama. Announcements that it is a story by Dashiell Hammett, the man who wrote "Thin Man," and that it features Warren William, one of the leading portrayers of detective roles on the screen, should readily convince theatre goers of its true character.

Basically it's a story of a detective suffering from woman trouble. He becomes involved in a case that gives him plenty of opportunity to exercise his sleuthing talents as well as those which, even though he mixes them up with business, he ordinarily reserves for less exciting times. As he, the girl and the supporting players are led through an amazing series of experiences, in all of which tense drama is being blended with laugh provoking comedy, he solves the case, escapes the wiles of one woman, only to fall into the arms of another.

Warren William is remembered for his appearances in similar stories, such as "The Case Of" series and the Van Dine yarns. The principal woman in the case is Bette Davis, currently in "Dangerous." Other women who engage William's attention are Marie Wilson, Winifred Shaw and Barbara Blane. In a more professional and less romantic way, Alison Skipworth as a crook mistress also gives William much to think about. Other players included are Arthur Treacher, now in "Remember Last Night" and "I Live My Life," Maynard Holmes, Porter Hall, Olin Howard and Charles Wilson.

The screen play is by Brown Holes, direction by William Dieterle, maker of "The Story Of Louis Pasteur" and "Doctor Socrates."

Snowed Under

(Warner)

Romantic Comedy

Here is a comedy of mixed up romantic affairs in which the title is just as much of factual as it is of literal significance. It is the opinion of the producers that it is made up of entertainment and exploitation ingredients of more than casual audience and exhibitor interest.

A writer is cooped up in a snowbound New England farmhouse. A generous producer sends his divorced first wife to assist him and provide an inspiration for a missing third act. Comfortably ensconsed, in comes his second divorced wife, accompanied by a youthful attorney and sheriff, intent on collecting a healthy amount of back alimony. Possibilities for funny happenings being easily evident, the potentialities are heightened by the invasion of a love struck coed. In the end, but not before much to do has happened, the writer is reunited with his first wife; the alimony grabber, besides getting her back money, falls for the sheriff, and the school girl becomes convinced that the young lawyer is her dream man.

The story is adapted from a published book of the same title by Lawrence Saunders. The screen play is by Mary McAll, Jr. Direction is in the hands of Ray Enright, who has accounted for many Warner comedy successes.

George Brent, currently appearing in "In Person," will be seen as the author. The three women who make life exciting for him are Genevieve Tobin as his first wife, Glenda Farrell as the alimony collector and Patricia Ellis as the coed. The role of the producer is played by Henry O'Neill. Frank McHugh is the country sheriff and John Eldredge the lawyer.

In combining the worths of hilarious incidents and situations with subtle, fast-breaking dialogue, the production idea is to direct appeal primarily at the masses. While doing this, the makers believe that the inclusion of the several wellknown screen personages will have sufficient strength to intrigue the curiosity of those whose main lure to screen entertainment is the power of names.

Two Composers Join Paramount

Two famous composers have been signed by Paramount Studio and will join the large staff immediately, it was announced by Boris Morros, general director of the music department. The composers are Gerard Carbonara and Victor Young, radio orchestra conductor and composer. Mr. Carbonara was a pupil of Respighi, famous Italian modernist.

Hawkins to Goldwyn

William W. Hawkins, Jr., formerly assistant to Katherine Brown, eastern story editor of Selznick International Pictures, has been named eastern story editor for Samuel Goldwyn. He succeeds William Fadiman, who joined Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as fiction editor, succeeding Mrs. Nina Lewton.

Complete First of New Season

Chesterfield and Invincible have each completed their first picture of the 1935-36 season. The 18 announced by these two companies for the last season have also been completed. The new pictures finished are, "Ring Around The Moon," Chesterfield; and "Tango," Invincible.

Jefferys Acquire Perrins

Mark and Jane Jeffery have acquired six Jack Perrin features from Atlantic Pictures for release by New England Film Exchange of Boston.

WPA STAGE PROJECTS SEEK MASS AUDIENCE, STARTING THIS MONTH

Several Units Make Public Appearances Shortly; 15 Projects Launched in New York; 6,000 on National Program

A-borning midst the wranglings and bickerings of the last six months, the Government's widely heralded plan to sponsor theatrical production will show tangible results by the end of this month, it is promised, when several units will be presented publicly in New York. Some 15 projects are in various stages of preparation or rehearsal in the metropolis.

Nationally, the Works Progress Administration theatre project also is making headway, Hallie Flanagan, national director, has reported to Actors' Equity Association. She is making her headquarters in New York until the local program gets underway.

While the WPA allocation of almost $7,000,000 provides for the project until next June, Miss Flanagan said it would not be permitted to die at that time but would be continued indefinitely with a view to (1) providing further employment for idle professional workers in the theatre field, and (2) perpetuating some of the projects on a self-sustaining basis. She did not indicate whether additional funds would be forthcoming.

About 6,000 persons are now enrolled in the program, Miss Flanagan told 450 members of Equity in New York late last week. She asked for patience, and pleaded that judgment should not be passed until the project actually begins.

Actors Raise Wage Question

While the actors went on record as endorsing the "spirit" of the project, they raised some questions, including that of the prevailing wage. Miss Flanagan explained there was nothing she or the Government or anyone else could do as it was part of the WPA regulations and she intimated that to continue to harp on the subject would be "obstructionist tactics." Equity members themselves have failed to agree whether the prevailing union wage for actors should be demanded in place of the WPA's $130.40 a month.

The assembly urged Miss Flanagan to use her good offices to collect back pay due many of the project workers which allegedly has been held up by the regulations. A committee will be formed to confer on project problems as they arise.

Meanwhile the elaborate publicity department of the federal project's New York region continues to grind out release after release promising an early start of the program in the metropolitan area.

Rice Explains Program

"It is an ambitious and a varied program," explained Elmer Rice, New York regional director, in Sunday's New York Times. "It attempts to represent the theatre in all its aspects, but more particularly to emphasize the value of the theatre as an art-form, as an instrument of culture and as a factor in the social development of the community. By means of low prices (the prevailing prices of tickets will be 25 and 50 cents) it is hoped to attract to the theatre the huge potential audience which does not go now, simply because it cannot afford to. A special appeal will be made, by means of a publicity and speakers' bureau, to high school and college students, to working people, to people of small means generally, who would find pleasure and stimulation in the theatre if it could be made available to them.

"I confess that I face the working-out of this program with considerable trepidation," went on Mr. Rice. "It looks good on paper, it is in the hands of able people, but the difficulties in the way of its achievement are not to be minimized. Our production budget is a meager one. . . . Worse than that, we are hemmed in, on all sides, by arbitrary and inflexible regulations, which are based on the assumption that you can run a theatre in the same way that you can build a bridge or pave a street—or, too often, I am afraid, are based on no assumption at all.

"Authority and power are divided; work is bungled or neglected; mean little personal squabbles result in the injection of monkey-wrenches into the machinery. We are obliged to deal with chair-warmers, with petty bureaucrats, jealous of their brief authority, with those in relatively high places who are perhaps more interested in the future of the Democratic party than in the future of the theatre.

"In spite of all the delays and irritations, however, I think, we shall get some things done. Some undoubtedly will be abortive, some bad, some mediocre. But I am hopeful that many will be good, and that at least a few will capture the public attention."

3,350 on Payroll in New York

The project in New York on December 28 had a payroll of 3,350 workers, said Mr. Rice. By the end of January he predicted an increase to 4,500. About 60 per cent are actors, 10 to 15 per cent stage hands and technicians, 5 to 10 per cent newspaper men and playwrights. Mr. Rice pointed out that the overwhelming majority of these are members of trade unions or other professional organizations. The other 20 per cent comprise service workers. About 2,000 more are to be added in New York, half of them actors.

Mr. Rice gave the following resume of the planned activities:

THE LIVING NEWSPAPER. This project, sponsored by the New York Newspaper Guild, will present dramatizations of news stories. The first, dealing with the Italo-Ethiopian situation, opens tentatively January 22 at the Biltmore theatre, at 25 cents admission.

Original Plays

POPULAR PRICE THEATRE, to present original plays by young or unproduced authors. Four plays have been selected and three are in rehearsal. "American Holiday" is to open at the Manhattan theatre February 7, with 50 or 75 cents top admission.

EXPERIMENTAL THEATRE, also to produce new and original manuscripts and to experiment with production methods. It probably will be housed in Daly's 63rd Street theatre, opening February 14th. Two plays are in rehearsal.

TRYOUT THEATRE, sponsored by the League of New York Theatres, for Broadway managers to see how plays look on a stage before they commit themselves to a regular production. Four plays are in rehearsal, and Mr. Rice hopes two will open simultaneously early in February. Alexandra Carlisle will play the lead in "A Woman of Destiny," Samuel Warshawsky drama, at the Willis theatre in the Bronx and sponsored by Lee Shubert. "In Heaven and Earth," sponsored by Louis B. Cline, is to open at the Shubert-Teller in Brooklyn. S. M. Chartock and James Ullman are other producers sponsoring plays.

NEGRO THEATRE. This unit plans to present its first production, "Walk Together, Chillun," at the Lafayette theatre in Harlem January 24. It will be followed by "Macbeth," with all-Negro cast. Third probably will come "St. Louis Woman."

Director Elmer Rice Sees Progress Despite "Personal Squabbles, Chair Warmers and Jealous Petty Bureaucrats"

In addition to these five large units, there will be 12 or 15 smaller producing companies to play "spot bookings" in schools, settlement houses, clubs, churches.

These smaller units include: The Negro Youth Theatre; a one-act play unit; a German unit, presenting classics in the German language; the Anglo-Jewish Theatre; a classical repertory unit; the poetic drama unit; a Yiddish vaudeville unit; a children's theatre, and a Continental repertory unit, presenting 19th and 20th century European plays.

Other units which may be organized include an Irish repertory unit, Russian repertory, modern English classics, and two or three dance units.

Already in operation are a circus, a company presenting Gilbert and Sullivan and other light musicals, several vaudeville units, many marionette groups and a minstrel show.

A delegation from the Affiliated AFL Theatrical Unions Council for Federal Theatre Projects has protested to Victor Ridder, WPA administrator for New York City, against red tape tying up the paying of workers.

Dr. Hugo Lieber Dies; President of Sonotone

Doctor Hugo Lieber, president of the Sonotone Corporation, died last week in New York after an illness of two months. Born in Germany 68 years ago, Dr. Lieber came here in 1891 and started a chemical firm. A close association with the gaslight industry led him to establish a trade paper, "Light," in 1901. He founded a scientific research laboratory and was treasurer of the Radium Institute.

During the war Dr. Lieber spent two years in his native Germany aiding the starving populace. In 1922 he became interested in hearing aids for the deaf which led to his inventing the sonotone, his most important invention, which was made public in 1932, two years after he had founded the Sonotone Corporation.

Brulatour, Jr., With May

Jules Brulatour, Jr., son of Jules Brulatour, Eastman Kodak distributor, has joined Mitchell May, Jr., Company, Inc., of New York, insurance firm handling considerable motion picture business, as vice-president. Mr. Brulatour attended Georgetown Prep and Catholic University and then spent considerable time in the banking business.

HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Completion of 12 Features and Launching of Nine Others Gives Studios a Busy Week; Producers Experimenting With New Plan to Reduce Costs of Scenario Work

12 Completed

With 1936 getting up steam, pictures rolled off the production line in wholesale style last week. Twelve features were transferred to the editorial departments to make one of the biggest cleanup weeks Hollywood has seen in many moons. Nine features went into work as the vanguard of more than 50 productions due to hit the stage this month.

With the turning of the calendar year, the number of completed pictures on the seasonal program nears the half-way mark. During the coming seven months, however, there is ample evidence that under the spur of new independent producers, the old line major and independent companies will step up their total number of pictures as new stories are chosen.

Paramount Finishes Three

With three pictures in the cans, Paramount is in the forefront of completed product. Probably the most important of the Paramount trio from an exhibitor and patron view is "Give Us This Night." Jan Kiepura, star of "Be Mine Tonight," is featured with Gladys Swarthout, Alexander Hall directing. The supporting cast lists Phillip Merivale, Benny Baker, Michelette Burani, William Collier, Sr., Sidney Toler, Charles Judels, Maurice Cass, Alan Mowbray and Billy Gilbert.

"Timothy Quest" will present Eleanore Whitney, Tom Keane, Dickie Moore, Virginia Weidler, Elizabeth Patterson, Samuel Hinds, Esther Dale, J. M Kerrigan, Irene Franklin, Jack Clifford, Ralph Remley, Raymond Hatton and Tempe Piggott. Charles Barton directed. "Preview" has Reginald Denny, Frances Drake, Gail Patrick, George Barbier, Rod La Roque, Ian Keith and Conway Tearle.

Two pictures were completed by MGM, "The Voice of Bugle Anne" will present Lionel Barrymore, Maureen O'Sullivan, Eric Linden, Spring Byington, Charles Grapewin, Henry Wadsworth, Dudley Digges, Claude Gillingwater and Jonathon Hale. Richard Thorpe directed. In "Exclusive Story," directed by George B. Seitz, Franchot Tone, Madge Evans and Stuart Erwin are featured.

Republic also completed two. They are "Dancing Feet" and "Oregon Trail." The first presents Ben Lyon, Joan Marsh, Isabel Jewell, Edward Nugent, Nick Condos, Vince Barnett, Harry Bradley, Herbert Rawlinson, Purnell Pratt, Sonny Lamont and Frank Melton. Joseph Santley directed. John Wayne is the lead in "Oregon Trail."

Shirley Temple Film Finished

A pair also were delivered by 20th Century-Fox. "Captain January" stars Shirley Temple with Guy Kibbee, Buddy Ebson, Slim Summerville, June Lang, Jane Darwell, Sara Haden, Mary Carr, Jerry Tucke, Nella Walker and George Irvin. David Butler directed. The cast for "Black Gang" includes Paul Kelly, Arline Judge, Mona Barrie, Gregory Ratoff.

At Universal "Next Time We Love" was finished. In this Margaret Sullavan, James Stewart, Ray Milland, Anna De Mattrio, Robert McWade, Grant Mitchell, Ronnie Cosby and Christian Rub will be seen. E. H. Griffith directed.

"Strike Me Pink" was completed by Goldwyn. The Eddie Cantor annual, he will be seen with Ethel Merman, Sally Eilers, Parkyakarkus, Helen Lowell and Brian Donlevy.

The twelfth completed picture is Warner's "Men on Her Mind." It features Warren William and Bette Davis.

MGM Starts Three

Three pictures were started by MGM. All are in the important class, but of the trio "Romeo and Juliette," Shakespeare's immortal love story, looks to be the one that will arouse most comment. The nature of the story will rouse plenty of talk, as also will the return of Norma Shearer to portray the part of Juliet. Romeo will be interpreted by Leslie Howard. Currently listed among the supporting cast, with many to be added, are John Barrymore, Edna Mae Oliver, G. Aubrey Smith, Reginald Denny, Basil Rathbone, Henry Kolker, Violet Kemble Cooper, Conway Tearle, Robert Warwick and Virginia Hammond. An Irving Thalberg production, it is being directed by George Cukor. The second picture to go, "Small Town Girl," will present Janet Gaynor, Robert Taylor, Lewis Stone, Andy Devine, Ethel Wales, Douglas Fowley, Ivan Simpson, Buster Phelps and James Stewart. William Wellman is directing. The cast for the third, "Elegance," presently lists Joan Crawford, Clifton Webb and Franchot Tone, with Jack Conway directing.

Republic likewise started two pictures. In "The Leathernecks Have Landed" will be seen Lew Ayres, Isabel Jewell, Jimmy Ellison, Ward Bond, James Burke, J. Carrol Naish, Clay Clement, Maynard Holmes and Joseph Sawyer. Howard Bretherton is directing. For "The Return of Jimmy Valentine" Roger Pryor, Charlotte Henry, James Burke, James Burtis, George Cheseboro, Dewey Robinson and Lois Wilson have been selected for principal parts. Lewis D. Collins is directing.

On Location

Twentieth Century-Fox put "Under Two Flags" into work on location. The incomplete cast lists Ronald Colman, Victor McLaglen, Simone Simon, Rosalind Russell, Marc Lawrence and Louis Mercier. Frank Lloyd is directing.

"Farmer in the Dell" started at Radio. It will present Fred Stone and Jean Parker.

Darmour Productions started "Shadows of the Orient." The cast includes Regis Toomey, Esther Ralston, Sidney Blackmer, Oscar Apfel and J. Farrell MacDonald. Burt Lynwood is directing.

"Palm Spring," a Walter Wanger production for Paramount, started with Frances Langford, Guy Standing and Smith Bellew.

Trimming Costs

Preliminary preparation costs, the unseen bugaboo that adds so much to overhead and consequent high film rental, are in for a decided downward trimming if avowed production intentions are made workable. In several studios an experiment is under way to cut down top-heavy scenario departments and buy only finished scripts, just as Broadway stage producers purchased only complete plays.
his own responsibility.

If a writer succeeded in selling a producer a story, or if the producer engaged him to prepare a script from a story he directly owned, an optional agreement would be made calling for a finished scenario. The price agreed upon might be a little higher than is now offered writers for the usual preliminary versions, but it would carry the rider—"no accepted script, no sale."

Good Cheer

Leo Peterson, general manager of Black Hills Amusement Company, operating a group of theatres in the northern Rocky Mountain territory, is in Hollywood for his regular visit. One of the many visiting exhibitors who find their way into this office, he had an interesting tale to tell.

Probably more familiar with the whys and whats of Hollywood than most of the vast exhibitor army, his reply to our first query practically floored us. Asked how business was he said, "Swell! Our houses run by pretty good showmen, haven't had such a tough time as most of the boys around the country. As a matter of fact all through the depression we didn't have to buy much red ink."

Hollywood producers in general are doing a pretty good job, Mr. Peterson said, but like countless other smaller town operators, he's doubtful that Hollywood will ever get around to a through understanding of what small town operators and patrons need most.

Good pictures eventually will eliminate chance games and the like, he said, but felt that it's going to cost the producers, whom he held directly responsible, plenty of money to bring this about.

Organizing

The first definite indication of a planned 100 per cent closed shop on the Coast enveloping all screen crafts is seen with the announcement by Bert Offord, heading the wardrobe men's group, that they are organized 100 per cent in Universal, Warners, RKO, Paramount, Columbia, Republic and Selznick International. This group now has 98 per cent representation in 20th Century-Fox Westwood and Hollywood Studios and United Artists. Mr. Offord has been working quietly for 12 weeks to achieve this result. . . . Douglas Fairbanks will hop into production immediately upon arriving on the Coast. He will produce "Marco Polo," . . . Pat Casey is back in town from an eastern holiday and is huddling with George Browne and IATSE officials on several jurisdictional problems. . . . Paramount had newsreel cameramen, spots and all the customary premiere equipment for their preview of "Anything Goes" at the Fox Village theatre. . . . Harry D'Arrast will not direct "One Rainy Afternoon" for the Pickford-Lasky Company, as scheduled. Rowland V. Lee will handle it, with D'Arrast slated for another picture later. . . . Leo Spitz, RKO president, quelled current reports that B. P. Schulberg and Manny Cohen would become unit producers at that studio. Pandro Berman will remain with the company, Mr. Spitz said.

INDUSTRY EYING CONGRESS AND TEN NEW STATE LEGISLATURES

Increase of $2,500,000 in Admission Tax Returns Estimated by Treasury; Pettengill Bill Hearing Awaited

The perennial problems of the motion picture industry concerning legislative attacks return this week with the opening of the Congressional session and the convening of legislatures in ten states: Arizona, Kentucky, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Mississippi, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, South Carolina and Virginia. With the resumption of the law-making sessions there came much private speculation over the potential effects, direct and indirect, on the film business. Other states' legislatures will be called in special sessions.

New general taxes from which to pay to farmers the benefits promised under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, designed to be financed from processing taxes, loomed in Washington as a result of the supreme court's decision Monday that the act was invalid. The processing taxes were held to be class legislation, outlawed by the Constitution.

The court's decision was rendered almost simultaneously with the reading in Congress of the President's annual budget message, in which he reiterated the promise given in his message of January 3d that no additional taxes would be needed on the basis of existing laws.

AAA Decision Problem

However, the President said in discussing the budget, "if the Congress enacts legislation at the coming session which will impose additional charges upon the Treasury for which provision is not already made in this budget, I strongly urge that additional taxes be provided to cover such charges.

Just how the Administration will meet the situation created by the supreme court decision, which may necessitate the return of approximately $1,000,000,000 already paid into the Treasury in processing taxes, has not yet been determined. Although the broad decision caused expressions of opinion that substitute legislation cannot be enacted any more than could a substitute for the NRA be found, Administration officials said the Government was committed to agricultural aid and therefore would have to continue, probably obtaining the money from which to pay benefits from new general tax levies.

Theatre men this week joined with farmers in many places in speculating over the effects of the supreme court's decision which voided the AAA. Farmers in the agricultural and cattle belts, it was thought, might forego theatre attendance if they did not get their corn and hog checks.

The budget as submitted evidenced the Treasury's belief that the amusement industry was due for continued and rapid improvement. The estimate of admission tax collections for the fiscal year which begins July 1, 1936, was $19,500,000 against an estimate of $17,000,000 for the current fiscal year and actual collections during the 1935 year, which ended June 30th last, of $15,379,397.

Few Items Concern Films

Only a few items affecting motion pictures were carried in the budget, and little change appeared contemplated in such activities during the coming year. The fund for the specialties and motion picture division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce was increased from $28,141 to $28,451, and the appropriation for the Office of Education of the Interior Department for the acquisition of motion picture films and other necessities and for travel expenses was increased from $15,000 to $20,000.

The regular appropriations of $85,000 for purchase and rental of films by the Navy Department and $79,000 for the motion picture activities of the Department of Agriculture also were provided for in the budget. The breakdown of the Agriculture appropriation called for expenditure of $70,360 in production and $8,640 in distribution.

The fact that the President did not touch upon such matters as the now defunct NRA was hailed in Washington as an indication that no new moves against business are contemplated for the immediate future, although undoubtedly bills to regulate industry will be pressed in Congress where, however, they cannot succeed without the approval of the Administration.

Nevertheless, there is a general belief in Washington that new regulatory measures will be sought before the end of the session, although it is expected they will be tempered by the approach of the presidential campaign.

Alien Talent Bill Introduced

As the session of Congress opened only one measure directly affecting the motion picture industry was ready for introduction. Under a resolution introduced by Representative Dickstein of New York and referred to his own immigration committee, the entry into this country of alien musicians and actors not of outstanding talent or engaged for positions requiring distinctive ability would be rigidly restricted. Under the embracing term "musicians" would be included instrumental and vocal artists as well as orchestra conductors.

Before embarking for this country, such aliens would be required to fortify themselves with the permission of the Secretary of Labor to be admitted. Further, a quota or reciprocity arrangement would be adopted, under which the number of such persons admitted to this country within any fiscal year would be limited to the number of American citizens admitted during the same period by the foreign country.

Pettengill Bill Hearing Expected

Probably the outstanding piece of anticipated motion picture legislation is the Pettengill anti-block booking bill, which is due this session for a hearing before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives. It is being watched with interest by the motion picture's own legislative authorities.

Allied States Association has already undertaken a resumption of its fight for passage of the Pettengill measure, and has for weeks been attempting to line up support outside of the industry.

Display of the American flag in theatres is demanded in a bill filed in Massachusetts by Representatives Barry, of East Boston, and McHugh, of Jamaica Plain.

Talent Exchange Plan in Operation

Closer working arrangements between the motion picture industries of America and Great Britain—internationalization of the talent supplies and finished product—is considered inevitable by Major Roger Marchetti, Hollywood film attorney, who arrived in New York last week from conferences in London.

Before leaving for the West Coast last weekend, Major Marchetti said he had perfected plans for interchange of studio talent between the two countries, and has been authorized by British producers to negotiate for distribution in the United States through major company outlets.

Among producers at the Elstree studios he said he will represent are Herbert Wilcox, Monty Banks, Julius Hagen, Maurice Elvey, Garrett and Klement, Robert Kain, Walter Mycroft of British International Pictures, Percy Raphael, Helgal Films, Max Schack of Capitol Films, and C. M. Woolf of British Films Distribution, Ltd.

"The British producers, knowing that pictures like 'Private Life of Henry the Eighth,' 'The Thirty-Nine Steps,' 'The Scarlet Pimpernel' have met with success in America, have a number of pictures in production wholly with an eye toward American consumption," Major Marchetti said.

"The English producers need our talent more than we need theirs," he continued. "There are only a few actors—Robert Donat and John Gielgud among others—who are acceptable here. But that the British cinema favorite can also click here has been demonstrated. Jessie Matthews, for instance. And actors such as Ronald Colman and Leslie Howard give our pictures eclat."

Major Marchetti has opened overseas headquarters at Artists' Managers, Ltd., in London, with J. M. Strode in charge.

"British producers want big American names," he reported, "and they are willing to pay for their services. But the price the American talent demands is exorbitant."

He said he had found a way by which American theatre folk may obviate the income tax over there, which is approximately 25 per cent, and that he had completed arrangements with three firms of London accountants formerly in the government tax service to handle such matters for visiting Americans. The plan, he said, entirely complies with the legal and accounting provisions of the British income tax law.

While in London Major Marchetti closed a contract for Alice White to play the lead in a Gaumont British picture to be directed by William Beaudine, and opened negotiations for British picture engagements for Edward G. Robinson, Elissa Landi, Charles Boyer and others.

He also placed under contract Diana Ward, a young American musical comedy actress, who has the lead in the London company of "Anything Goes," and Lady Queensberry, artist and costume designer.

Major Marchetti has signed Laurence Olivier for American stage and screen appearances.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

The evolution of "giveaways" may be traced from the drawing for a smoked ham on family "Country Store" nights at a ten-cent down-at-the-heels neighborhood movie, to the giving of dishpans, crockery, dinner sets and silverware. Next, as better theatres are forced by the cheaper competition to engage in the practice, it was extended to embrace vacuum cleaners, electric refrigerators, washing machines and radios; then, at the de luxe runs, to furniture, houses, real estate and large sums of cash; and now the idea has been picked up by Broadway, where the night clubs have given away automobiles with regularity. Next, predicts Press-Agent Marc Lachmann, what with the war fever and armaments race, somebody'll start rafflin' off torpedo boats with full crews. Or large chunks of unconquered Africa—Abyssinia, for instance.

Buried the other day in a room of Radio Pictures publicity appeared the bare mention that Florence Lawrence has been given a small role in "Mother Lode," the new RKO picture starring Richard Dix.

Miss Lawrence's now-faded career in motion pictures dates back some 26 years when she was nationally known as "The Biograph Girl." Unwittingly, in 1910, she figured prominently in the great film war that raged, with history-making consequences, between Carl Laemmle, leading some independent distributors, and the powerful Motion Picture Patents Company. The battle really began when "Uncle Carl" sensed that "Biograph Girl" Florence Lawrence was the outstanding and visible figure of the patents trust product. So, soon after the formation of Laemmle's Independent Motion Picture Company, the famous "IMP," Miss Lawrence vanished—mysteriously "kidnaped"—from the Biograph studios in New York.

Some weeks had passed when a story reached the newspapers from out in St. Louis that she had been mysteriously slain.

Then, on April 2, 1910, a due and proper sequel to any such yarn, Miss Lawrence appeared publicly under Laemmle auspices, whole and sound and in person to let the world know that "The Biograph Girl" was no longer the Biograph girl, but was now an "IMP."

This move was the beginning of the star system. Up to that time the conservative-minded chiefs of the Patents group were distinctly opposed to publicity for individual players. They had observed the salaries that the stage had to pay for stars who caught the public's favor, and they did not want a parallel experience for the motion picture. They did not want "stars!"

The St. Louis exploit is also pointed out by Motion Picture Historian Terry Ramsaye as the first "publicity stunt" in behalf of a motion picture player—the story of her slaying appearing in the press one day and her personal film appearance coming on the morrow. This was the beginning of the old school system of exploitation.

Then there is the story of the American motion picture executive who as a guest at a London public dinner began to smoke before the royal toast had been given.

PROBLEMS OF THE GREAT

Haile Selassie may have his troubles trying to dent Mussolini's big chin. And evidently Jean Harlow's road to the screen has not been an easy one since Joe Breen took charge of what is and is not. Franklin Roosevelt's brow, too, has been wrinkled a bit by the lambasting of the anti-New Dealers. But for sheer heart-touching calamity we cite the weighty troubles of Hollywood's own exponent of the golden bathtub, Cecil Blount DeMille. It develops that DeMille has 104 suits of clothes, and is moaning that he would have more if Mrs. De wasn't always giving them away!

Merian C. Cooper, bald-headed pipe smoker, produced "She" for Radio Pictures. When his effort in this connection reached Manila in the Philippine Islands, the Metropolitan Theatre Company was struck with amazement to find the following notice in the Philippine Collegian, a magazine published by the University of the Philippines:

Merian Cooper, otherwise the enchantress, really excites the imagination in her next picture, entitled SHE. She displays her versatility in depicting the wisdom of the angels and the evils of Satan.

The manager of a theatre in Budapest, Hungary, had the misfortune to screen a film that was without the standard "kiss-and-make-up" ending. He found his audience hungry for such a finis and they refused to leave the building unless it was forthcoming.

In desperation he cut off the last few feet of an old film lying handy, tacked it onto the current feature and again projected the last reel.

Then night fell happily on Budapest.

The very modest Doctor John Condon, the "Jafsie" of Lindbergh kidnap fame, is offering himself, in trade paper advertisements, to motion picture theatres for personal appearances—at so much cash per appearance. He admits, shyly—in boldface type—that he played the E. M. Loew circuit in Lynn, Mass., to TERRIFIC GROSSES! (The caps are the good Doctor's.) His commercialization of his personally injected participation in the case comes the while Bruno Hauptmann agonizes in the Jersey death cell awaiting the sizzling electric current that will race death into his weakening body.

Motion picture companies have variously been the targets of freak legal suits of all kinds and description, but few have been as freakish as the action filed against four of them over a house that had been sawed in two.

Last September the Oklahoma City home of Mrs. Fern Chadwick, widow of a chiropodist, was cut in two in a controversy between Mrs. Chadwick and the local building and loan association. The house stood on two lots and the building and loan company wanted their lot back, or something. When they bisected the structure Mrs. Chadwick moved her household goods to the side standing on her lot.

While she and her two children were visiting in another state, her petition charged, newsreel cameramen went to the place, stacked furniture in the yard, re-enacted the motion of sawing the house in twain "and left the general impression that we had been thrown out of the house." Other children were used in place of her own "to register dejection," receiving $1 each for it.

Now she wants $25,000, for libeling her, from Universal, Warners, Standard Theatres and Midwest Enterprises.

Towering Jim Loughborough, who has been flying back and forth between Washington and New York on matters pertaining to the Federal Housing Administration, indited the following "nanny-goat" to bulging Ed McNamee, of National Screen:

"Arrived at Washington last midnight and Friend Wife met me at the airport," wrote Jim. "I had to ride in one of those trick planes with extra narrow seats—once you sit in a seat you can't get up until the blamed plane crashes. Two beautiful Southern gals were on board, bound for their native Noo Awleans. They were very frisky from the start. Then one got airsick and went blah. A Southern gent with them asked if anybody knew a cure for 'airsickness,' and I said, 'Sure, the same old cure you give for too much booze—bicarbonate of soda.' Right there he challenged me to a duel. Said I had insulted the lady, and demanded a strong apology. It looked pretty serious until the lady intervened and told the Southern gentleman, 'He's right, and, furthermore, I drank too damn much booze before boarding the plane in the first place.'"

If one or another of the newsreels had diverted just a little of the time spent trying to figure out where the next baby parade or ski-jumping contest is coming from it would have been on hand the other day at the raising from the bottom of the south's Yazoo River, of a federal gunboat that was sunk there in 1862. The timbers of the gunboat were in a fine state of preservation after soaking in the muddy waters for these 73 years.

The vessel was one of two Union gunboats that attacked Yazoo City during the Civil War between the states. The boat was raised by a Government snag boat which is clearing the river. Some machinery and tools were brought up in her hold. And hundreds of old-fashioned wrought iron nails were retrieved from the timbers which were hewn for the fight that changed the course of a nation. History is somewhat vague regarding the gunboat, but it is traditionally reported that the boat was captured by Confederates. The no'theners refuse to believe it.

RADIO AND HOTELS JOIN ASCAP IN DEFYING WARNER IN MUSIC FIGHT

Columbia Broadcasting Will Continue to Use Numbers Claimed by Warner; Hotels Disregard Repeated Warning

With exhibitors still awaiting official word from Warner Brothers on its policy regarding the licensing of music for performance in theatres, the large radio networks and hotel interests this week defied the motion picture company. And Wednesday it was learned that Music Publishers Corporation, Warner subsidiary, will file intringement suits in federal court very soon against NBC, CBS, hotels, independent radio stations in New York City, including WOR, Mutual circuit key, WMCA and WHN, owned by Loew's, Inc.

Two of the three businesses which the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in the past has referred to as "the unholy three" thus align themselves on the side of the Society—otherwise their bitter "enemy"; while the third, the theatre owners, likewise are preparing to resist any moves by Warner to levy a dual music tax.

Events were moving to a legal showdown to determine the Warner-ASCAP fight over disputed copyrights. Thus:

1. Columbia Broadcasting System, unlicensed by Warner, announced its determination to broadcast certain numbers claimed by Warner.

2. On advice of counsel, hotels nationally were playing Warner music and disregarded the warning against copyright infringement.

3. The Department of Justice was studying complaints of independent broadcasters against alleged royalty discrimination by ASCAP in favor of the networks.

4. ASCAP attorneys were working overtime to rush the Society's stipulations to completion so the Government's antitrust suit could be expedited.

5. General manager E. C. Mills said ASCAP will not file suits, but NBC and CBS are understood to be preparing actions.

Attorneys for the National Broadcasting Company were noncommittal on reports that they were planning a test case to decide judicially the control of copyrights.

CBS Legal Text Prepared

A legal test is, however, being prepared by Columbia Broadcasting System, officials of that network affirmed this week, but when it will be filed has not been determined.

This gained significance in view of the following statement which Columbia issued Monday night:

"Columbia Broadcasting System announced that all questions as to the right of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to license the performing rights of the musical numbers in the current 'Scandals' written by Ray Henderson and Jack Yellin, in Billy Rose's 'Jumbo' written by Rodgers and Hart, and in the RKO motion picture 'I Dream Too Much' written by Jerome Kern, had been removed.

"This means that the foregoing numbers which are published by the Warner Brothers' group will again be heard in network broadcasts.

"Examination of the Victor Herbert music indicates that the great majority of the works of this composer are not controlled by the Warner Brothers' group but by the American Society, and these works will also shortly be freed for broadcast performance."

Warner on Tuesday released photostatic copies of letters exchanged with the National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System which disclosed a sharp conflict over the rights to use the disputed compositions. The correspondence contained reference to impending suits.

To the networks' claim that they have the right to use Warner music because they contracted with ASCAP at the time Warner was a member, Warner replied that they knew it had given notice of withdrawal from ASCAP at the end of the year. The networks in the letters charged that Warner had refused to furnish a list of its copyrighted works so that they may proceed in legal manner. Warner replied it was under no obligation to supply such a list but that all such copyrights are on file in the Copyright Office and imprinted on the compositions.

Columbia informed Warner that it regarded Warner's failure to supply the requested information as "calculated to entrap us into copyright violations, and we put you on notice that we will raise such defense in any action which you may bring against us."

Warner informed the networks that ASCAP has acknowledged its withdrawal from membership and also the withdrawal of Warner's works from ASCAP's repertoire.

Contracts Sent Hotels

Meanwhile Warner this week submitted to hotels, through the American Hotel Association of the United States and Canada, a license agreement calling for payment of 40 per cent of what they now pay ASCAP.

However, Frank A. K. Boland of New York, counsel for the association—which has stood shoulder-to-shoulder with exhibitor organizations in music tax battles—advised members that the resignation of the Warner music companies from ASCAP membership "does not affect the rights of music users" under existing license agreements with ASCAP.

Mr. Boland based his opinion on these points:

1. The standard form of agreement between hotels and ASCAP provides that the Society reserves the right, at any time to withdraw from its repertoire any musical work, and upon any such withdrawal the licensee may immediately cancel the agreement. "It should be noted," added Mr. Boland, "that the Society and not the members thereof reserve such right of withdrawal and, therefore, only the Society and not the members may exercise such right."

2. The licensing agreement further provides that it shall be extended and renewed from year to year, but cancellable by either party on 30 days' notice prior to the termination of any year.

Identical clauses are part of the ASCAP agreement with theatres.

Mr. Boland gave it as his opinion that all composers, authors and publishers, including the Warner group, who were members of the Society at the time when ASCAP made its agreement with each respective licensee, are bound by such agreement, and that each agreement is enforceable not only for the original term designated but also any extension or renewal.

Doubts Hotels' Acceptance

"At this time," Mr. Boland advised, "we do not consider it advisable for any hotels to take the initiative and cancel any of their existing contracts with ASCAP. Such existing contracts may be the only basis upon which the hotels may claim the right to use any of the music of the withdrawing publishers."

He said it was extremely doubtful that the hotels would accept the license agreement submitted by Warner, which is for a term of three months, the same as offered to broadcasters. "As counsel for the hotels, I do not think that Warner can give us any more commodity than we already have under the ASCAP agreement," he commented.

Mr. Boland thought it probable that the hotels would become involved in the expected legal entanglements.

Several prominent hotels recently have

WITHDRAWAL FELT ON BIG CHAINS

"The effect of the withdrawal of the music published by these (Warner) firms has already become noticeable in radio programs from the big chains and from stations not included among the 170 which have already accepted the new contract submitted by the Warner companies," said a statement by the parent company Tuesday.

"Old tunes are being played again and again. Formerly a restriction existed against the use of any given tune more than once in three hours. This restriction has apparently been abandoned as a result of the shortage of music created by the refusal of the chains and certain stations to meet the requirements of the new Warner contract."

been sued by ASCAP for non-payment of the music tax, which the hotels contend is arbitrary, no precise scale for that type of licensee having been adopted. The fee is predicated on the extent of the use of music, ranging as high as $1,500 a year. In addition, where there is radio reception in the rooms, ASCAP claims $1 a year for each receiver.

U. S. Would Speed Case

In Washington the Department of Justice reiterated officially that the Government's suit seeking to declare ASCAP an illegal monopoly has not been abandoned, but will be resumed in the federal district court in New York when stipulations are completed. It was said that the Government was seeking the viewpoints of both broadcasters and ASCAP, looking to an agreement on statements of facts that will expedite the case.

The Society's attitude favors an early trial since it has been beclouded by the accusation of illegality for many years, and its attorneys are confident that a court hearing will vindicate its practices. A staff of attorneys and research workers under the direction of Nathan Burkan, ASCAP counsel, is preparing the case and the mass of stipulations, which will be the first comprehensive compilation of data concerning the music industry.

Delay in completing the agreement of facts has been partially due to ASCAP's rejection of certain stipulations wanted by the Government which might have prejudiced the case and led to a consent decree.

Broadcasters Complain

ASCAP's troubles were increased this week by complaints of broadcasters to the Department of Justice against royalty preferentials in favor of the large networks and against independent operators.

Department officials, it is understood, were studying these complaints. General opinion was that no incorporation of such material is possible, since the Government in its original bill of complaint outlined the points on which it based the prosecution. There is a possibility, though, that the material can be used in connection with charges already brought if they involve the royalty structure.

Among the complaints is one filed by Powell Crosley, radio manufacturer and independent radio station operator in Cincinnati. They are based on the favored rate computations granted by ASCAP to the networks and newspaper-controlled stations and the probable necessity that broadcasters take licenses also from Warner. The net effect would be that the average station would find its music cost increased considerably.

Can't Regulate Prices

It was pointed out that the Government has no authority to regulate the prices charged by a private business for its products or to require that the same price shall be charged to all customers.

The independent stations contend that the five per cent commission on advertising revenue that they pay to ASCAP as music tax would be less if the networks paid the full fee. Theoretically, the chains pay the same commission, but ASCAP makes certain exemptions for promotional work, line costs and other expenses inherent in the networks' operations.

Stations operated by newspapers pay ASCAP only per program use of music on commercial broadcasts and no fee for sustaining programs.

Reflecting the high percentage of popular compositions in the Warner catalogue, exploitation of musical films on the air has been materially reduced since last Tuesday midnight when more than 30,000 Warner songs were ruled off the networks. Typically, Bing Crosby has been prevented from crooning Cole Porter's tunes from "Anything Goes," a Paramount picture, because the music is controlled by Harms, Inc., a Warner affiliate. Al Jolson, in his broadcasts, cannot sing some of the numbers identified with his work in Warner films.

Theme Song Discarded

Public domain music has been brought out of the files, and new arrangements of old compositions have been rushed. Paul Whiteman last Sunday night was forced to discard his theme song, George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," because it is owned by Warner's New World Music Company. He substituted a new number titled "Margo."

The situation is causing song writers in film studios in Hollywood to protest, since the lack of "plugging" on the air reduces their ASCAP royalties. It also affects sales of their sheet music.

Meanwhile, the small music publishing companies are seizing advantage of the scarcity of available unrestricted numbers to speed new compositions off the presses, and are augmenting their staffs of "pluggers."

Celebrated Opens Studio

Celebrated Pictures, Inc., have opened headquarters at the Hotel Edison in New York and will produce all the Theodore Allen Lloyd productions in their studios in the hotel. The company is shooting a series of one-reelers, "New York Uncensored," at present.

Gans To Leff-Meyers

Lou Gans will return to the Leff-Meyers circuit as manager of the Freeman, Bronx, N. Y., starting New Year's Day. He will replace Murray Pearl, resigned. Gus Birnbaum has been transferred from the Lido to the De Luxe and Mort Allen switches with Mr. Birnbaum.

Meltzer Joins Celebrated

Jack Meltzer, formerly associated with Lou Brock in production of short features, is joining Celebrated Pictures as associate producer with his own producing unit making a new one-reel series, "Sky-Way Tourist," starting February 1st.

ROMBERG LEAVES WARNER FOLD

One of the typical upshots of the Warner-ASCAP feud appeared in a statement of the National Broadcasting Company on Tuesday that Sigmund Romberg, one of America's ace song composers, is leaving the Warner music fold for a publisher affiliated with ASCAP.

Forbidden to play most of his own hits from such shows as "Blossom Time," "The Student Prince," "The Desert Song" and "The New Moon," which are controlled by Warner, on his Tuesday night broadcast on the NBC networks because of the restrictions, Mr. Romberg is composing new songs.

"From time to time," said the announcement, "he will write new songs which will be presented on his own program and published through one of the music publishing houses associated with ASCAP. The new Romberg songs will then be available on the major networks."

Officers installed at the recent meeting are George Dumont, Loew's Jersey City, president; Morris Hatoff, State, Jersey City, first vice president; Solly Posner, Orient, Jersey City, secretary, and M. Yarbo of the Capitol, Union City, treasurer.

The organization will meet every two weeks and plans for a big event in March are being made ready. Managers outside Hudson county will be admitted as non resident members.

Ohio Exchange Expanding

The Gus Sun Booking Exchange, Springfield, Ohio, will open an office in Buffalo, N. Y., about January 15, and another in a location not yet definitely decided upon, according to Bob Shaw, general manager. The Springfield office now is booking unit shows through Ohio, Pennsylvania and Kentucky sections. Another office of the company is maintained in Detroit.

ST. LOUIS TRUST TRIAL RESUMED WHEN DISMISSAL PLEA IS REFUSED

Court Also Overrules Warner Request to Include Special Defense of Alleged Monopoly by F & M and Koplar

The Government's second attempt to strike at Warner, RKO and Paramount and their corporate executives on charges of allegedly conspiring to withhold product from Fanchon and Marco-Harry C. Arthur theatres in St. Louis scored an important preliminary victory in the federal district court there on Tuesday when Judge Joseph West Molyneaux of Minneapolis rejected the defense pleas for dismissal.

Adjournment was taken until Thursday morning to permit Frederick H. Wood of New York, of defense counsel, to appear in court. Mr. Wood has been ill. It was understood that Spyros Skouras, operating head of National Theatres Company, would be the Government's first major witness.

The hearing in the equity case got underway on Monday, the Department of Justice seeking a temporary injunction to compel the defendants to supply first run films to the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres.

The Government scored another point on Tuesday when the court overruled Warner's request to amend its original return to include the special defense of an asserted monopoly fostered by Fanchon & Marco, Harry Koplar and associates to control the first-run situation in St. Louis.

After making these rulings, the court continued the hearing until Thursday morning when it will proceed to try the case on its merits without issuing a temporary injunction.

Sees New Issues Injected

In rejecting the Warner request, the court said that to permit it would inject new issues that might lead to intervention by other parties and that the court would confine itself to determining whether the defendants had conspired to violate the Sherman anti-trust laws.

Judge Molyneaux said, however, that every fact and circumstance tending to throw light on that situation would be gone into fully, indicating that he may permit testimony to show why Warner did certain things including the leasing of the Orpheum and Shubert Rialto theatres as an outlet for their pictures in St. Louis.

In overruling the companies' pleas of res adjudicata for dismissal, the court accepted the opinion of the United States supreme court in Stone vs. United States that an acquittal in a criminal case does not bar the Government from proceeding with a civil suit based on the same facts and against the same parties. In the case in question, the high court held that an acquittal in a criminal action is not an affirmative finding of innocence but merely that the prosecution failed to prove the defendants guilty beyond any reasonable doubt.

Argue Dismissal Motions

The opening day of the trial was consumed in involved legal arguments on defense motions for dismissal of the equity proceedings in which the Government seeks to prevent the film companies from continued refusal to do business with the theatres involved.

Precedents established in the federal courts and the United States supreme court were cited by defense attorneys, headed by former Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, in their contention that the issues had been disposed of when a jury last November 11 acquitted the defendants of criminal conspiracy charges involving the same issues.

The Government's rebuttal, led by Walter B. Rice, sought to prove that a jury verdict had no bearing on a court of equity and no influence on the present proceedings. The criminal case, he asserted, charged the Government with the "higher burden" of proving "beyond a reasonable doubt" that the defendants had been guilty. The issues in the two cases were different, he contended, and the alleged conspiracy had been extended an additional 12 months from January 11, 1935, when the indictments were handed down by a federal grand jury.

Mr. Rice pointed out that an appeal in a case of this type can be taken only to the United States supreme court, with no intermediary steps through the circuit court of appeals. While it is generally doubted that this case will require the six weeks taken by the trial of the criminal charge, Government counsel came to St. Louis prepared for a long siege.

Efforts by Mr. Reed to obtain postponement until Thursday or early next week because of the illness in New York of Frederick H. Wood, an important defense attorney, were opposed by Russell Hardy, Government counsel, on the ground the case had been unduly delayed already, that the defense was well supplied with counsel, and that Fanchon and Marco were suffering "losses in the thousands each week." He told the court that a postponement would cost the Government $3,000 to return its 30-odd witnesses to St. Louis.

Spirited Argument

The case proceeded, and the court announced it would hear several motions earlier mentioned by Mr. Reed. One was the right to amend the original petition as it concerned the product deal between RKO and Warner in conformance with developments which had occurred since the indictments were returned. That deal, Mr. Reed said, had been altered by RKO selling its product on a month-to-month basis.

The second move by the defense was the dismissal motion which was marked by spirited argument. Mr. Reed then attempted to shift the burden of conspiracy from the defendants to Fanchon and Marco and their associates who, he charged, had sought a complete monopoly of the first run situation in St. Louis. He said they demanded five of the city's six first runs, the exception being Loew's State.

A United States supreme court decision in the case of Coffey vs. United States was cited by Mr. Reed to prove his contention that defendants acquitted of a criminal charge cannot be tried in a civil action on the same charges, and that the conspiracy involved cannot be extended beyond the indictment.

Among other citations by Mr. Reed were United States vs. Swift, Stone vs. United States, Murphy vs. United States, Waterloo Distilling Corporation vs. United States and Local 167 vs. United States. George S. Leisure and Jacob M. Lashly, counsel for RKO, and William R. Gentry for Paramount submitted additional legal support.

The cases cited by the defense were contested

Department of Justice Seeks Temporary Injunction to Force Supply of First-Run Pictures to Theatres

every inch of the way by Mr. Rice, who dwelt at length on the Local 167 case in which he had been of Government counsel. In that action, involving the poultry "racket" in New York City, the Government contended in the equity case that there was a continuation of the conspiracy following acquittal of a number of the defendants in the criminal action.

Denies New Conspiracy Involved

In rebuttal, Mr. Leisure replied that the equity proceedings involved no new conspiracy, and that if Fanchon and Marco needed relief, the courts were open to them for action independently of the Government.

The Government's own maneuver, by Assistant Attorney General Hardy, in offering to submit the testimony of the criminal trial as testimony in the civil proceedings was cited by Mr. Lashly in further support of the contention that the issues in both instances were identical and recognized as such by the Government.

Judge Molyneaux refused to admit Mr. Lashly's evidence, but indicated he would take full judicial notice of the complete proceedings in the criminal case.

The speed with which Judge Molyneaux disposed of the motions to dismiss and Warner's request to amend its answer is an indication that he intends to rush the case, according to attorneys at the trial. At the same time, he assured the defense he would permit introduction of every fact having any bearing on defense efforts to disprove the Government's charge.

An indication of the willingness of attorneys for opposing sides to cooperate, which was markedly absent during the criminal trial case, came when Mr. Reed and Mr. Hardy on Tuesday reached agreement in regard to various documentary evidence each is seeking from the opposition.

Says Case Does Not Apply

However, Mr. Hardy rejected Mr. Reed's suggestion that they submit the case to the court on the basis of the testimony in the criminal action. Mr. Reed said this could be done by submitting a transcript of the previous trial. When Mr. Hardy objected, Judge Molyneaux remarked, "Well, that disposes of that."

The heads of the opposing legal staffs informed the court they would do everything possible to facilitate the trial.

When court convened Tuesday morning, Mr. Leisure of RKO counsel asked Judge Molyneaux if the defense could present briefs in support of Monday's arguments on the dismissal motions. The court said this would be unnecessary as he had already made up his mind.

Judge Molyneaux said that both sides were agreed that in order for the doctrine of res adjudicata to apply, the parties to the litigation must be the same and the issues must have been fully determined in the previous litigation. He held that the case of Coffey vs. United States, on which the defense depended, did not apply to the present action, saying that unlike that proceeding the present equity suit is not one to recover property or impose a penalty, but for relief from alleged existing conditions. He then announced that the verdict of not guilty in the criminal case was not binding in the equity proceeding.

In arguing for amendment of the Warner reply, Mr. Reed contended the defendants were faced with the alternative of either submitting to dictation of Fanchon & Marco or of quitting St. Louis entirely. If the court should find for the Government, the business of the General Theatrical Enterprises, operators of the Orpheum and Shubert Rialto, would be destroyed, Mr. Reed continued. He cited supreme court decisions to sustain the contention the court should take cognizance of the monopoly it would thus foster and its possible detrimental effect on the public generally.

Mr. Reed contended that the leasing of the Orpheum and Shubert Rialto by Warner interests had created healthy competition in the local first run situation.

Opposing the plea, Mr. Hardy said it was not properly in the case and had no bearing on the issues. He charged the motion was an effort by the defense to promulgate the "pernicious principle that these parties should be permitted to take the law in their own hands." He said that the highest courts have repeatedly held that good intentions could have no effect in an anti-trust case—and stressed that this was not a private litigation between the victims and perpetrators of the alleged conspiracy but an effort on the part of the Government to see if it could do something to stop certain practices in the motion picture industry nationally.

"It so happens that this is one of the instances in which that sort of thing happened," he added.

Mr. Hardy, as in the criminal case, attempted to draw a picture of the defendants as "big business," pointing out they represented $660,000,000 in aggregate wealth and control 50 per cent of the feature films, while F. and M. probably represent less than $500,000 in assets and have only 25 per cent of the available pictures in St. Louis.

"Yet they are frightened by this puny, little monopoly they are starving to death," he said.

Mr. Hardy charged this issue was injected in the hope of confusing the court, just as the defense had succeeded in confusing the jury in the criminal case.

Mr. Leisure made it clear RKO was not advancing this special defense, saying that it would take the position that in choosing to sell pictures to the General Theatrical Enterprises, instead of to F. and M., his company exercised its legal right to select its customers.

Abel Cary Thomas, general counsel and secretary of Warner, was in court on Tuesday, not yet fully recovered from the illness which prevented him from attending the criminal trial last fall. It was recalled that the Government last October presented medical testimony to support its contention that Mr. Thomas could never be brought to St. Louis.

The Government has subpoenaed 36 motion picture and theatre men as witnesses, and the defense about a dozen. Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner Theatres; Harold S. Bareford, Warner attorney, and E. K. Hessberg, an assistant secretary of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., have been excused permanently from testifying as a result of an understanding that Warner counsel will admit the authenticity of documents to be introduced by the Government.

Neil F. Agnew, vice-president and general sales manager of Paramount, is also among those excused, under an agreement that documentary evidence will be identified by other Paramount witnesses.

A new line of attack is indicated in the Government's calling of George W. Trendle, Paramount theatre partner in Detroit; Y. Frank Freeman, Paramount theatre operating head, and Mike Marco of F. and M., in charge of West Coast activities of the complaining company.

Subpoenas Issued

Subpoenas have also been issued for John E. Otterson, Paramount president; Leo Spitz, president of RKO; Ralph Kohn, former Paramount home office executive, now a production partner with B. P. Schulberg; Spyros Skouras, E. L. Alperson, Sam Dembow, Jules Levy, Clarence M. Turley, Austin C. Keough, Thomas N. Dysart of St. Louis, David Levinson, Frederick Kreismann, Jacob Chassnoff, Joseph Grand, John S. Leahy, J. M. Ulmer, B. D. Gordon; Harry C. and Milton B. Arthur, F. & M. executives; Cresson E. Smith, Irving Lesser, Jack Partington, and the following St. Louis branch managers: Joseph Garrison, Universal; Ben Reingold, Twentieth Century-Fox; Clayton Lynch, MGM; William Feldstein, United Artists; Maurice Schweitzer, Paramount; Hall Walsh, Warner; Richard Taylor, RKO; Clarence Hill, Columbia.

The jury trial on indictment charges took six and a half weeks during which many witnesses spent considerable time in the court room without being called.

Wider Latitude of Time

In the criminal trial, the period covered was three years to Jan. 11, 1935. The equity case takes in those three years and to the present, and gives the Government additional latitude for introduction of new evidence.

The Government bolstered its counsel with Mr. Rice, who opposed Frederick H. Wood, of present defense counsel, in the Schechter poultry case which nullified the NRA, and two other staff men to assist Mr. Hardy. Harold Schilz, John S. Claggett and District Attorney Harry C. Blanton complete the Government's battery.

Assisting Mr. Reed as chief Warner counsel are Robert W. Perkins, Sam B. Jeffries, Ralston R. Irvine and I. Levinson.

Harry Arthur, chief witness for the Government in the criminal prosecution, again was expected to be a leading witness for the prosecution.

Samuel W. Fordyce, Paramount attorney in St. Louis, who was to participate in the defense, is convalescing from pneumonia.

It is said that there are 6,000 bondholders of the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central financially interested in the outcome of the case. In event the Government is denied a temporary injunction, it is held the F. and M. group will drop the theatres. In this event, the rentals will cease unless a new operator takes over the properties.

Judge Molyneaux is 73 years old, a native of Kentucky and a graduate of the University of Cincinnati law school. He served for 12 years, until 1925, as a district court judge in Minneapolis, where he had practiced law since 1884. In 1925 he was named to the United States district court in Minneapolis.

In Buffalo, Federal Judge John Knight handed down a split decision in a move to amend the bill of complaint in a case involving the Reliance Theatre, Inc., Lockport, N. Y., against Schine Theatres, Inc., Gloversville, and most of the principal distributing companies. The suit is for $300,000 damages, allegedly sustained from a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the anti-trust laws.

Defendants Win Point

Judge Knight granted the plea of defendants to strike out reference in the bills of complaint attacking the defendants as violators of the NRA code and the charge that the defendants tried to deprive the Reliance Theatre of leased property by conspiring with lessees. The court rejected a plea to delete the rest of the complaint, dealing with conspiracy, but set no date for a hearing.

Beside Schine Theatres, Inc., the complete list of defendants includes Dominion Operating Company; Schine Theatrical Company, Inc.; J. Myer Schine, Louis W. Schine, Vitagraph, Inc.; First National Pictures Distributing Corporation; MGM Distributing Corporation; Fox Film Corporation, Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, United Artists Corporation, Columbia Pictures Corporation, Universal Film Exchange, Inc., and RKO Corporation.

In Milwaukee, Federal Judge F. A. Geiger has dismissed the action charging conspiracy and collusion filed by Atanasoff Brothers, operators of the World Theatre, against principal film distributing companies. The dismissal followed the plaintiff's failure to amend the original complaint charging unlawful restraint of trade to which the defendants had entered a demurrer.

Demurrers have been filed in federal district court at Lincoln, Neb., by major distributors and circuit defendants, in a damage suit brought by the state and by independent theatres. The demurrers contend that the plaintiffs' competition showed no cause of action.

DALE SEES PROPAGANDA INVADING THEATRES

Dr. Edgar Dale of Ohio State University this week charged that propaganda was creeping into motion picture theatres.

"We may expect," Dr. Dale said in an address before the National Council of Teachers of English, "to see more use of the news reels in political campaigns with consequent fakery."

Alleging that war propaganda found its way to the screen, he continued, "In 1931-32 there were twelve shots dealing with war, as compared with one dealing with peace in two different news reels. In 1931 the proportion was seven war items to one peace item."

Weiss Has Boy Scout Serial

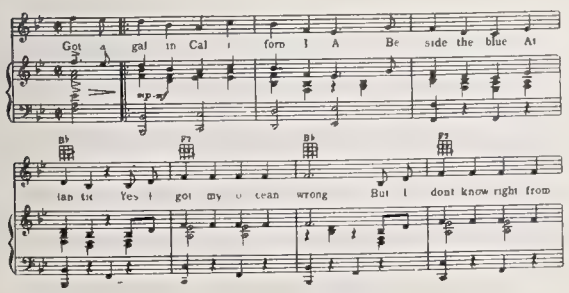
Louis Weiss, production executive for Weiss Productions, has announced that he will produce a 15-episode Boy Scout serial this season. Preparation on the story has already been started. The serial, yet untitled, will be distributed through state rights exchanges by Stage and Screen Productions.

Venture in Uncharted Music Field In Swarthout Film Is Commended

Called More Intelligent Grouping of Elements, Though Far from Solution

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

NOW that many of the noted stars of the lyric stage have proved that operatic voices and operatic arias register very nicely on film, there is evidence that the makers of what are commercially known as "musicals" are on the verge of a great discovery—that demontrating the obvious to the public is less important than developing a new and better form of movie-musical entertainment.



In "Rose of the Rancho" Paramount has ventured into an uncharted field in an attempt to provide Gladys Swarthout and John Boles with a vehicle that bears no resemblance to the type of star-singer films so prevalent since the screen became opera-singer conscious.

"Rose of the Rancho" had success both as a stage production and as a silent picture. The original play, written by Richard Walton Tully and David Belasco, was first produced on Broadway in 1912. Two years later Cecil De Mille made the play into a motion picture, with Bessie Barriscale and J. W. Johnstone as its stars. Jeanie Macpherson, who is still a member of Paramount's writing staff, wrote the screen version.

It is not on record that music played any important part in the stage production; while the silent film version, of course, had the usual musical setting accompanying the inarticulate screen. However, the romantic, adventurous period of the story, the locale and picturesque background, combine to make this production peculiarly adaptable to musical treatment.

In weaving an entirely original score into the texture of this hectic story of California of the 1850's, when some of our original "rugged individualists" in the form of land-grabbers began plundering the Spanish ranches and filing claims on them under American laws, the producers have supplied eleven songs, four Spanish dances, and a wealth of descriptive and interpretive music composed by Ralph Rainger with lyrics by Leo Robin. Five of the songs are assigned to Miss Swarthout, three to John Boles, and two to Willie Howard. Miss Swarthout and John Boles also sing a duet.

WHERE IS MY LOVE?

The producers have attempted to devise a new technique in screen musicals—one that permits the presenting of songs that tie in directly with the dialogue and situation without slowing up the action. They have also utilized the method of intensifying action and dramatic tension with underscored music, and in giving tonal interpretation to such colorful scenes as the fiesta with its characteristic danzons. In doing this, they have appropriated the technique of the stage operetta to some extent and have combined with it many of the devices of the scoring accorded to the musical settings of the silent film days.

While the venture can be definitely appraised as pointing the way to a more intelligent combination of the elements of the audible screen, the results in this instance are far from a solution of the problem. As an experiment, it is commendable. As a medium for the talents of Miss Swarthout and as entertainment, it does not register convincingly.

When Miss Swarthout as the mysterious Don Carlos, leader of a vigilante band who are at war with the land-grabbers, makes her first appearance on a white horse at the camp of the vigilantes and sings, she reveals a voice of luscious quality and a pulchritude that should win her the immediate favor of picture fans. This scene introduces a touch of the romanticism of the type of operetta which has long been absent from the stage.

The most colorful and authentic of the musical sequences are those of the fiesta in old Monterey, where after singing the romantic number, "Where Is My Love?" Miss Swarthout performs the Sombrero Dance. It seems that it is the custom for the young men to toss their hats into the dancing arena, and the dancer signifies her preference for that suitor whose sombrero she steps on in the dance. Here the song, the dance and the action fit into the picture and motivate the romantic theme admirably.

While the score is keyed to the operetta technique and most of the songs are strictly operetta mode, two of those allotted to Miss Swarthout are frankly "popular" numbers, "Thunder Over Paradise" and "Don't Tell a Secret to a Rose." They are a concession to the typical movie fan but not attuned to the period of the story.

An eccentric traveler into Monterey, yclept Pancho Spiegelgass (Willie Howard), who describes himself as a "Latin from Arabia with a Spanish accent," provides much comic relief to the melodramatic romance, and gargles a lilting chanson.

In appraising the musical treatment of "Rose of the Rancho," it is interesting to note composer Rainger's quoted ideas on the subject.

"To begin with," said Rainger, "we couldn't devote ourselves entirely to operatic technique, because opera audiences are specialized and film audiences are world-wide. For another thing, we have all heard the best opera numbers from childhood, we are 'sold' on them, and our sole interest in them is to hear how some particular artist renders them.

"But Miss Swarthout's songs in 'Rose of the Rancho' must not only meet the dignity of a great artist and a great voice but must captivate the audiences the first time they are sung.

"Songs which have instantaneous appeal likewise lack depth, in most cases, and for that very reason we had to be careful not to sacrifice her vocal qualities on a melody that is merely pretty."

'MORE SPACE TO RADIO THAN FILMS'

—EARLE M. HOLDEN, Capitol Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

FINDS RADIO CLAWING AT THEATRE'S DOOR

To the Editor of the Herald:

I read with a great deal of interest an article in Motion Picture Herald covering the opening by NBC of a new studio in Hollywood.

Judging by the tone of this article, it appears that at last the motion picture industry is being reminded that radio has suddenly turned into the "big bad wolf" and barks and claws at the door of every motion picture theatre in our land.

Yes, the Herald has reminded the motion picture industry of this new opposition, but what is the motion picture industry going to do about it?

Well the press of the nation has seen fit to do something about radio. If present extension of radio news in the daily press increases, it won't be long before radio and the programs offered secure as much space as the sports do on the sports pages.

Right here in Atlanta, for instance, the Hearst paper has just added a staff man to write radio news every day and at the present time that paper is devoting four columns a day to radio news, listing the programs, and placing into these columns bits of news about the radio stars. No, this paper does not run a daily column of movie news. You see we have to pay for advertising space in this and other publications and possibly paying advertisers do not need publicity even though the readers might be as much interested in their stars of the screen as they are their stars of the air.

Then we have another paper here in Atlanta that devotes at least three columns a day to radio. Still another paper has not as yet seen fit to go beyond the daily listing of programs.

The situation as it now exists in Atlanta is merely a reminder of what is occurring elsewhere. The press of the nation are giving considerable thought to radio news to the extent that they are giving more space to radio than to motion pictures.

• And where will all this end? They say that television is just around the corner. Is all this sudden build-up by the press in their increase in free radio publicity just another step to be prepared when television finally arrives?

We still pay amusement rates for our advertising. Some of the exhibitors of the country have seen fit to go after this and have secured some relief. Others have not been so fortunate. We still pay double rates for our newspaper advertising, because possibly on Sundays we secure free publicity in the papers. Of course all those passes that we have to send to the papers each week are just a courtesy. No, sir, passes do not purchase free publicity space for theatres. Or do they?

But radio buys no space in the papers. Radio offers no free passes each week. Radio pays no double rates. As a matter of fact, radio receives, free of charge, daily program listings and now columns of free publicity, about the radio stars, their habits, their scandals, etc.

We thus enter a New Year with fear in our hearts, as we glance at the radio publicity on the radio pages of the press. Possibly we enter every New Year with fear in our hearts, looking forward with keen interest to the "big bad wolf" which will raise his head and tell us that we are poor exhibitors, trying to make a living, trying to offer the people of the nation rest and mental relaxation, trying to do our part to bring back prosperity, that we are downtrodden, that we have no right to complain when our life's wages are at stake. Possibly not, but what is the motion picture business going to do about it? What have they done about anything that has proved harmful to this industry? Absolutely nothing.

Yet some high-salaried publicity men for the movie studios gloat with pride when they manage to secure a radio tieup with some big corporation, whereby the studio they represent will gladly allow their stars to appear on the broadcast. And how many persons stay away from the theatres of the country when those stars do broadcast?

Well, in 1936 radio will make steady progress. More radio, more entertaining programs. More stars of the screen to broadcast. More free radio publicity by the press. More people staying away from the theatres.—Earle M. Holden, Capitol Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

URGES MORE FILM REPORTS

To the Editor of the Herald:

Just another small town exhibitor joining your ranks and with a world of praise for the one and only Herald.

I, like all others, read and gain a world of help from its columns, and, like Miss Simmons of Jefferson, Texas, says, I could hardly get along without it.

It is rather amusing to note as each week goes by the same faithful He or She contributing her bit to this "Cause" ("What the Picture Did for Me"), and being somewhat lax on this myself, I do want to say, where in this big United States of ours are all of you big shots and your contributions who show or rather play these features so to speak "red hot?"

You know after all we small town folks do respect your wisdom on your say so on this problem, so let's all get together and see if we can do a whole lot better toward furthering this, for him or her and you and I.

As for pictures to comment on, those played here are what you exhibitors have played except a new Fox release played December 14 and 15, "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo," which did a nice business for us in spite of everyone saving their nickels for Christmas and all. Colman does a nice bit of acting and pleased all who saw it.

In signing off, pardon my typing as like the picture business this is new to me. I have a method of doing this all my own that I call the "Columbus Method," you discover one and jump on it.

Here's a good old-fashioned "Merry Xmas" and a bright and prosperous "New Year" to all.

Again thanking you for your "Service" through the Herald and always looking for Monday as that is Herald Day.—W. Anderson, Sioux Theatre, Anthon, Iowa.

RAW PRESS MATERIAL AN EXHIBITOR PROBLEM

To the Editor of the Herald:

One of the best and most timely articles I have had the pleasure of reading appeared in your valued publication on December 28th, "Films Are Publicized to Death," over the signature of Mr. D. S. Lawler.

Mr. Lawler's opinion certainly weighs correct with opinions of other exhibitors in this country. Raw press material is gradually making inroads in box office receipts, because the movie patron knows more about the pictures than the exhibitor, before it reaches his theatre screen. Studio executives, quick to realize an opportunity to make money, should consider how much more their pictures would earn if patrons bought tickets instead of screen magazines, how to be beautiful booklets prepared by any movie actress, etc.

I think Mr. Lawler has prepared a constructive criticism which Hollywood executives should give their careful consideration. It warrants immediate attention or movie box office receipts eventually will be as low as a snail's apron string.—Carl Niesse, General Manager, Central City Amusement Company, Indianapolis, Ind.

Poole Retains Theatres

In an item in the Herald issue of November 16th it was incorrectly stated that Harry Poole had turned over his three houses in Klamath Falls, Ore., to George Mann. Mr. Poole is continuing operation of the three theatres.

Sturdivant Adds Theatre

E. B. Sturdivant, operator and general manager of Silver Crest Theatres in Arizona and California, has taken over the Glendale, Ariz., theatre, reopened with O. Wise as manager. Mr. Sturdivant operates houses in Flagstaff, Yuma, Somerton and San Diego. He also owns the Calipatria and Yuma's radio station KUMA.

Hershon, Assistant to Diamond

Robert Hershon has been made production assistant to Dave Diamond at Universal with an assignment to a series of five pictures. In 1928, Mr. Hershon was the youngest member of the New York stock exchange. During 1930 he sold film for Universal in New York, Cleveland and Pittsburgh. At the studio, he worked for a year in the cutting room and then was assigned to the Carl Laemmle, Jr., pictures. His first assignment with Mr. Diamond is "Tomorrow Is a Better Day."

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 5: (Answers copied from the Bluebook will not be considered. Put the answers in your own words.) (A) What is vitally necessary in making a film splice of maximum strength? (B) Should transformer temperature be checked occasionally? (C) What light beam focus is necessary to reproduce 9,000 cycle sound? (D) Describe the common carbon-type microphone, and its action.

Answer to Question No. 290

Bluebook School Question No. 290, which appeared in the November 30 issue, was: (A) Will you tell us what the effect of increased illumination of the film sound track is. It is claimed such increase raises the level of such ground noise as there may be, and brings in new noises. (B) It is claimed by sound men that theatre patrons can differentiate between sound coming from a loud speaker immediately beside the screen and from one back of it. I wish therefore to ask the engineers whether this matter has been thoroughly tested.

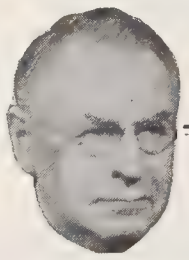
The following projectionists made answers considered correct to section B of this question: C. Rau and S. Evans; G. E. Doe; B. DeVietti; A. L. Cooper; H. Edwards; T. Van Vaulkenburg; J. Wentworth; C. Umphrey; R. and K. Wells; P. and L. Felt; T. L. and G. Daniels; T. Thomas; K. N. Kirkpatrick; D. D. Lally and F. Ferguson; B. L. Bransome; D. L. and M. Rice; J. Jensen, D. L. Lode and B. H. Sanders; F. Simms and O. L. Daris; M. and J. Devoy; W. Burns and T. R. Fanning; E. Samuels; T. H. E. Richman; R. Thompson and O. D. Lantry; N. Prane and B. R. Mills; M. Spencer and D. Allen; T. H. Morton, F. H. and L. Klar; N. Saddler; J. McGuire; R. and K. Wells; I. B. Bancroft; R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing; M. D. Fitsimmons; L. A. Dodson and H. T. Todd; G. Tomlinson; D. Allen and M. Spencer; J. L. Samuels; T. L. Bradbury and H. J. Adams; R. G. Squires and L. Tody; W. T. Murphy; N. Savlor and F. L. Savlor; K. H. Hartley; S. E. Gay; B. L. White; T. Danielson; L. Denis and L. L. Samuels; D. Emerson; J. D. O'Brien; T. L. Bortman; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; L. N. Haynes and A. Richardson; H. W. Bower; G. Lathrope and N. L. Tomlinson; G. L. Thomas and J. Branscombe; T. S. Davidson; L. and R. T. Jackson; G. Thomas; T. T. Davidson and R. G. Crews; E. W. Ford; H. M. Bradley, T. G. Henderson, W. Maxwell and R. Davis; H. T. Hall and L. V. Scott; D. L. Corbin and L. U. Corbin; D. Hopkins; M. N. Higgins; A. E. Hartmann and B. Henry; A. Moss; R. D. Macafee and G. L. Green; B. Ross and C. M. Sharpe; E. Morris; L. D. Kesler; G. W. Scott and B. L. Garlock, L. D. Coates; F. K. King and C. Rosso; A. L. Snow, B. Smith and K. D. Pittman; E. Larose; J. G. Jones and M. H. Hirdt; H. Nadell; J. Levinson; S. S. Peters; H. Hill and R. L. Long; G. K. Claughton; N. L. Nichols.

Barney DeVietti answers section A as follows: "Increased sound track illumination will cause an increase in the output level of the PE cell, the output of which is directly proportional to the light reaching its active element. W. E. equipment using an 8.5 volt, 4 amp. exciter lamp will have an increase or decrease in output level of about 1 decibel for each 0.1 amp. variation in the current through the exciter lamps. Equipment using the TA 201 exciter lamp will have an increase or decrease of about 2 db (decibels) for each 0.1 amp. variation, hence it is evident that when sound track illumination is increased the PE cell output also is increased proportionally. It also is evident that there will be a proportional ground noise level increase, provided of course there be any such noise present. I believe also that some new noise will be brought in because of the PE cell increased activity, which noise will be in the form of a hiss."

Messrs. Evans and Rau answer thus: "Increased illumination of the sound track certainly will raise the level of any noise there may be; also it will perhaps raise other noises to the point of audibility that with less light would not be perceptible."

R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing say: "Assuming no change in the equipment (fader, etc.), increased illumination of the sound track will increase the action of the PE cell and therefore the volume of sound. Under some conditions it might also increase sound quality. The main effect, however, is that increase in sound track illumination will increase ground noise pickup in proportion to the amount of such increased illumination."



(B) This question places me in a peculiar position. I have repeatedly taken the position that save in a relatively small percentage of our theatres, perforated screens were wholly unnecessary. As things were in the early days of sound, I do not now retreat one inch from that position. However, I must admit that this question is now considerably complicated by the fact that, due to the necessity for bringing out all the various frequencies and thus hugely improving sound, the size of the apparatus has become so great that it is today impractical to place it either at the top or at the bottom of the screen, and you will note that I have never advocated placing it at the sides. I shall, therefore, give the engineers the floor without further comment. The engineers say:

"Mr. Ballinger's question has reference to the binatural capabilities of the human ear, which means its ability to accurately locate sources of sound. Answering it specifically, the problem presented has been the subject of many and very detailed experiments, the results of which may be summarized briefly by saying that the ability of the ear to locate sounds in a horizontal direction is far greater than its ability to locate them in a vertical direction. This is so true that a slight movement horizontally can be detected much more readily than can a much greater one vertically.

"The reason for this becomes apparent when we consider the fact that our ears are separated horizontally, but occupy the same position vertically. Put in another way, they are level with each other, but separated horizontally by several inches. If this condition were reversed, with one ear on the forehead and the other on the chin, the condition would reverse the results and we would be able to judge vertical positions better than we could horizontal ones. This probably explains the reason for birds and animals (especially dogs) cocking their heads to one side. It improves their ability to locate sounds.

"While it is difficult to detect movements of say 25 degrees vertically (Remember, I advocated locating the loud speaker not at the sides, but above or below the screen.—F. H. R.), it is a fact that movements of as little as five to ten degrees become quite apparent to those of normal hearing in both ears when the movement is in a horizontal direction.

"It should be noted that our binatural ability ordinarily is much more accurate in open air than in a closed space, such as a theatre auditorium. One of the important reasons for this is the interference set up by sound waves reflected by the walls and ceiling of the enclosure. Depending upon location of the listener, these reflections may in some cases aid him in locating sound sources, whereas if he moves only a few feet the reflections may be such as will serve only to confuse him."

Outdoor Musical

Combining western action elements with musical comedy and introducing the Metropolitan Opera star, Gladys Swarthout, to screen audiences, the result is an outdoor musical romance. The setting is in California during the time of that state's admission into the Union and concerns the landgrabbers and the Spanish settlers who sought to retain their lands, often without filing the necessary legal claim. In retaliation against the landgrabbers the settlers formed a band of Vigilantes under the inspiration of a Don Carlos, to recover the lands.

Based on the play by Richard Walton Tully and David Belasco, and presented successfully on the stage some years ago, the picture has many exploitation possibilities besides the name of Miss Swarthout, though otherwise the production sags in production values. Coupled with Miss Swarthout, who is widely known through her radio work and also by the enormous advance publicity she received on the picture, is John Boles, a star in his own right. In addition there is comedy from Willie Howard and Herb Williams. Howard is both a wellknown radio and stage performer and Williams, a star of the stage. The supporting cast includes Charles Bickford, Grace Bradley, H. B. Warner, Pedro de Cordoba and Russell Hopton.

There is plenty of action—and horses—in the picture to appease the western film inveterate and an abundance of music, which includes the songs "Where Is My Love?" "Got a Gal in Californ-I-A" and "If I Should Lose You," a current "hit."

The production suffers, however, in being loosely knit. The sequences skip from action to music to comedy and reverse without, seemingly, a great deal of credulity. In tune with the theme the production is lavishly produced and the photography is a feature of the picture.

The story opens with a meeting of the Vigilantes under the leadership of Miss Swarthout, who masquerades under the name of Don Carlos. A messenger brings news that a band of desperadoes is headed for the home of a settler. Don Carlos and the Vigilantes drive off the outlaws. Later the leader of the band is captured and is about to be hanged when John Boles arrives on the scene, as a government agent sent to capture Don Carlos, and saves the life of the bandit. Boles meets Miss Swarthout and during fiesta time falls in love with her.

Boles joins the outlaw band as the best means of obtaining information leading to the capture of Don Carlos. Learning Boles' identity, the outlaw leader sets a trap. Boles follows Don Carlos to her hiding place, and seeing Miss Swarthout when he enters he concludes she is the bandit's lover. Boles is captured by the Vigilantes but Miss Swarthout sets him free. Later Boles discovers that Miss Swarthout is Don Carlos and joins her and her Vigilante band in driving off the desperadoes from her father's hacienda. The outlaw band had set the trap for Boles and the Vigilantes, being engaged in Boles' capture, had attacked the house in vigorous combat.—MOONEY, New York.

Comedy

The title suggests something tensely dramatic. The show is just the opposite, a comedy that should provide a good time for average audiences, as it gayly kids and laughably derides glorified G-men and wise guy big shot newspaper reporters while it heroizes a trio of country folk. It makes no pretense at being anything but amusing entertainment.

Preceded by sequences that establish the romantic and comedy motivation, teacher Jane and country weekly reporter Hank are about to shake the dust of their native heath forever. A desperado, Kingman, breaks jail. Flocks of G-men, headed by Mel Purdue and a bunch of hot shot correspondents, descend upon the town to which he is supposed to be headed. Skip and Starrett, reporters, give their rural rival the works, but Jane who falls for Kingman's sympathetic pleadings, shelters him. Two wild goose chases which Hank sets off are muffed by the G-men and correspondents, and he is made to look like a rube.

While the mice are away, Kingman, Silk and Blackie decide they'll do a little playing by robbing the local bank. Jane and Hank, wise to their plan, can't do anything to convince Purdue that their information is authentic. To save their friends and neighbors they start a run on the bank. When the mobsters arrive to loot it, there isn't a nickel in the vaults. Meantime some trickle of common sense has seeped through Purdue's head, and just after Hoggins has shot the tires off the bandit car, he and his men arrive to machine gun Silk and Blackie and nab Kingman. The ace reporters, joy riding around, dash up to find that yokel Hank has scooped them and is the recipient of flocks of offers to join the forces of the big wire services and metropolitan journals. He prefers to stay home, however, marry Jane and be the editor of the weekly.

As hokum is liberally splashed all over every element, romantic love interest being the only factor to escape its satirical sting, the picture provides small town exhibitors a choice opportunity to indulge in a little novel showmanship to whet the curiosity of their patronage, with a little more than the usual effort to ballyhoo an attraction.

Previewed in Warner's Beverly Theatre, a class neighborhood house. A rather sophisticated audience laughed both with and at the picture, but the few youngsters present didn't hesitate to make known their appreciation.

Magnificent Obsession

(Universal)

Drama

Poignant human drama from the best selling novel by Lloyd C. Douglas and brought to life on the screen by the skillful direction of John M. Stahl, noted for his many human interest pictures, this production strikes a responsive chord by the fineness of its portrayals and the humanness of its drama. A young wastrel, though unwittingly, causes the death of a humane and beloved doctor. He is responsible, also, for an accident which results in blindness for the doctor's young wife. His obsession, then, is the devoting of his life to repairing the damage his overt acts have caused. To this end he becomes a doctor and a famous brain surgeon. He performs a miraculous operation, restoring the sight of the young widow, whom he loves.

Timed to present day tempo and localed in New York and Paris, the picture supplements its dramatic sequences with adequate comedy. The late doctor practiced a theory of doing good of which the wastrel hears through a stone cutter, a former patient of the doctor. It consists of doing kind deeds for others but keeping secret one's participation in the benefactions. When folks tried to repay the doctor his answer was that the money already had been used, which translated into the thought that the charity already had paid in dividends for his spiritual wellbeing.

Hearty comedy plays an important part of the production, the brunt of it being carried ably by Charles Butterworth. Irene Dunne gives a superb performance as the blind girl and Robert Taylor as the reformed ne'er-do-well is convincing in his role. Among others in the cast are Betty Furness, Ralph Morgan, Henry Armetta. The cast contains good exploitation names.

Robert Taylor, a frequent inmate of Doctor Hudson's hospital, after a night of revelry jumps into a lake and requires a pulmotor to save his life. The pulmotor saves him but while he is being revived Doctor Hudson has a heart attack and for lack of the pulmotor he dies. The doctor's young wife, Irene Dunne, returns from Europe on the day of her husband's death and, like the devoted hospital staff, blames Taylor for his death. Taylor meets Miss Dunne and falls in love with her. By a ruse he takes her for a drive in his car. When Miss Dunne attempts to leave the car she is struck down by a passing car. She suffers a concussion of the head and is blinded.

Taylor, under the name of "Doctor Robert," works his way into Miss Dunne's confidence and puts up the money for a visit to Paris and brain specialists. He follows her there, reveals his identity and asks her to marry him. Miss Dunne disappears, and Taylor is unable to find her. He studies and in six years becomes a famous brain surgeon, winning the Noble prize. Returning to New York he discovers where Miss Dunne is and goes to her. She is in a precarious condition and only an operation will save her. Taylor performs the operation, restoring her sight. Miss Dunne reveals her love for Taylor.—MOONEY, New York.

Captain Blood

(First National-Cosmopolitan)

Melodrama

A rollicking, action-packed, romantic picture that abounds in entertainment values, here is a production for showmen and worthy of real showmanship, and made on a generous scale. The picture relates the story of Peter Blood, a young doctor in England who, while treating a wounded rebel during Monmouth's uprising against King James the Second of England, is thrown into prison by the King's men. Tried and convicted, Blood is sold into slavery on an island of the West Indies. He escapes and thereafter follows the sea and as a buccaneer becomes the scourge of the Caribbean, and its most widely known pirate.

Adapted for the screen from the novel by Rafael Sabatini, referred to occasionally as the Dumas of modern times, the picture is excellently acted by the entire cast. It serves to introduce to American audiences an accomplished actor who it would appear is headed for definite popularity. He is Errol Flynn and while comparatively unknown at present he is being built up by an exploitation campaign. Flynn's performance is of the best. The scene of the destroying of two Spanish fighting ships by Blood and his pirate crew is realistic and impressive, equally interesting is the scene of the duel between Blood and Levasseur, another pirate captain.

Supporting Flynn is Olivia de Havilland, who currently is gaining recognition by her performance in a "Midsummer Night's Dream," one of the most delectable of recent feminine players to enliven the screen. Basil Rathbone as the rascally Captain Levasseur, Lionel Atwill as Blood's bitterest foe and father of Miss de Havilland, Ross Alexander, Guy Kibbee, Henry Stephenson, E. E. Clive and others give noteworthy performances. The picture was directed by Michael Curtiz.

Peter Blood, after six years of wandering and warfare, has settled down to peace and the practice of medicine. During Monmouth's rebellion he is jailed for treating an injured rebel. Kept in prison for three months he is insolent to the judge when finally brought to trial. For contempt of court he is sentenced to hang as if he were one of the rebels. By a whim of James the Second the prisoners are sent to the West Indies to be sold as slaves.

The governor of the island where the prisoners are sold is afflicted with the gout. Learning of Blood's profession the governor appoints Blood as his doctor. Free to roam the island Blood plans his escape. A Spanish party invades the island and while they are looting the town Blood and the other prisoners escape and capture the almost deserted Spanish ship. Now known as Captain Blood and dreaded by all, he sails the Caribbean, its supreme figure. During a week of revelry on a island of ill repute Blood meets Captain Levasseur and forms a partnership with him and immediately regrets it.

When Levasseur captures Arabella Bishop and holds her for ransom Blood berates Levasseur and in a duel kills him. Returning Arabella to the island and her father, Blood learns from a courier that England is at war with Spain and that a new king reigns over England. Two Spanish ships are bombarding the island when Blood's ship arrives.

The romance of Arabella Bishop and Captain Blood, which is interwoven throughout the picture, ends happily.—MOONEY, New York.

The Leavenworth Case

(Republic)

Murder Mystery

In this picture, a murder mystery embellished with comedy and romance and with drama building suspense, the motive for murder and the mystery of how it is done are made evident in the first few sequences. Thus it differs materially from the usual manner in which mystery drama features are presented. Whether the procedure will work to arouse a different kind of audience interest remains to be seen. Exhibitors are given the opportunity to tell their patrons that they will know pretty nearly all that is going to happen and exactly how, a departure which should make possible adaptation of not altogether common approach lines.

As the story runs, Doctor Harwell and Gloria conspire to get rid of her elderly husband, Silas Leavenworth. Harwell owns a monkey which he has trained to climb upon a gas jet when he whistles a tune and turn on the gas. Silas is killed in this manner, but circumstances are so contrived that the death appears accidental or suicidal.

Detective Bob and his comedy stooge, O'Malley, suspect criminal intent. Much of the sustaining action of the story takes on the character of an "everybody is suspect" idea, contrasted by comedy involving Aunt Phoebe and O'Malley and a bit of drama concerning Clavering, together with a growing romance for Bob and Elenore. However, with Bob sure that Harwell and Gloria are criminally implicated, but not sure of how Leavenworth's death was effected, interest is centered on how he is going to get his man.

That is brought about when Phoebe, supposedly deaf, eavesdrops on Harwell and Gloria and hears them accuse each other. With Phoebe as the guinea pig an experiment is tried. The reason to have her removed from the picture is made evident to Harwell. He sends the monkey into her room to turn on the gas. Everything works perfectly, but Bob has had the forsight to shut off the gas mains. Trapped, Harwell and Gloria confess, preliminary to the romantic finish concerning Bob and Elenore.

As the cast provides name values of more than ordinary worth, character of story and manner of presentation likewise give the showman something out of the ordinary to engage the exploitation activities. The motive and method of killing being explained, the way in which it prevented further destruction is the peg on which potential showmanship can be hung. While this is known, there are many incidents and situations in the picture that can be readily transposed into tricky and provocative showmanship stunts.

Previewed at Stadium Theatre, Los Angeles, neighborhood family audience house. Skeptic at first because it knew practically what was going to happen and how, the preview folk found much to hold interest.

Warner Studios Complete Big Expansion Program

The expansion program begun at the Warner Brothers-First National studios, In Burbank Cal., early in 1935 was completed recently when the finishing touches were put on the last of the nine new sound stages. The building program, which was the most extensive in the history of the company, was necessitated by the production activities on the Burbank lot. Several of the new sets are being used for the large number of sets required for the shooting of "Green Pastures."

The studios began the New Year with 10 features completed and awaiting release, 8 shooting and 12 being prepared for early production. Features completed are: "The Petrified Forest," "Man Hunt," "Backfire," "Ceiling Zero," "Prison Farm," "Freshman Love," "The Widow From Monte Carlo," "The Story of Louis Pasteur," and "The Murder of Dr. Harrigan."

Dixon Opening Model Theatre

J. M. (Dick) Dixon of Ger-Bar, Inc., of Indianapolis, Ind., is opening a model theatre in Flora, Ind. It will be a small type house seating approximately 275 persons and will be in the modern trend. The entire idea is to demonstrate what can be done in the way of putting in an outstanding theatre at comparatively low cost.

Kirk Massachusetts Censor

Paul G. Kirk has been named head of motion picture and vaudeville censorship in Massachusetts. His appointment as Commissioner of the State Department of Public Safety by Governor Curley was confirmed by the executive council.

Conn In Control

Maurice Conn has bought Sig Neufeld's half interest in Ambassador Pictures, leaving him sole owner. Production already has started on the Peter B. Kyne story, "Black Gold," with Russell Hopton directing. The cast includes Frankie Darro, Roy Mason, Berton Churchill.

Lenauer Acquires Film

Lenauer International Films, Inc., has acquired distribution rights to "Counsel's Opinion" from the Pallas Film Company and the picture, which was made in London by Alan Dwan, will be ready for release in America shortly.

New Agfa Representative

Motion Picture Service Company, San Francisco trailer-manufacturer and laboratory, operated by Gerald Karski, has been named northern California headquarters for Agfa-Ansco raw film.

Sack Signs Universal Deal

Sack Amusement Enterprises, San Antonio exchange, has closed a deal with Universal Pictures whereby they will handle all first-run Universal Spanish pictures in the southwest.

George Sher will leave the RKO publicity department within a fortnight for a new post in Miami.

Course on Projection In Education Program

An evening course on "Motion Picture Projection" has been added to the adult education program of the University Extension Division of the Masachusetts State Department of Education, and will open in February at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The course, which is the first of its kind to be offered in New England, will be given by Lewis Frey, projection expert, on eight Tuesday nights beginning February 4. The course has been planned, according to Extension Director James A. Moyer, to aid those who have some knowledge of motion picture work and who wish to secure an operator's license.

Northwest Film Club Elects

Al Rosenberg of Hamrick-Evergreen Theatres has been elected president of the Northwest Film Club at Portland, Ore. L. J. McGinley, retiring president, was named vice-president, and E. A. Radio Commentators Signed For "United States" Shorts

Eleven wellknown radio announcers and commentators, three of whom are past winners of the radio diction medal awarded by the American Academy of Arts and Letters, have been signed as off screen narrators for a series of one reel Vitaphone shorts, dealing with innumerable phases of contemporary American life, it was announced by Sam Sax, production chief of the company's Brooklyn studios.

The shorts in which their voices will be heard are the one reel "Our Own United States" series, edited and photographed under the supervision of E. M. Newman, noted lecturer, traveler and author. Those who have been signed include Milton J. Cross, David Ross and James Wallington, the Academy medal winners, Kenneth Roberts, Gabriel Heatter, H. V. Kaltenborn, Howard Planey, Harry von Kell, Paul Douglas, Harlan Reed and John S. Young.

Close Projector Deal

Walter O. Gutlohn, Inc., producers and distributors of 16mm. films, have closed a deal with the RCA Manufacturing Company to sell projectors to churches and other institutions on a dual contract. Contracts will include the booking of 10 16mm. subjects for non-theatrical presentation. Mr. Gutlohn, president of the company bearing his name, said that he has the exclusive 16mm. rights to the product of various companies including Pathe, Monogram, Master Arts and Mascot serials. At the present time over one hundred pictures are ready for distribution, he added.

Improvement in New England

A definite proof of the improvement of the motion picture business is revealed by the fact, established by examination of the Boston Film Board's record, that about four per cent more theatres are in active operation now in the Boston territory than there were a year ago this time. Martha W. Ferris, Film Board secretary for the New England States, is at present compiling actual mathematical statistics on this encouraging situation.

Finish Industrial Film

Sponsored by the Edison Electric Institute, a four-reel sound picture, "The Courage of Kay," has been produced in Hollywood by Mason Wadsworth, in association with Pat Dowling and Hobart Brownell of Metropolitan Industrial Pictures. The film is to be shown in cooperation with the Federal Housing Administration for the purpose of stimulating the national home modernization program.

More Shakespearean Films

Ethel Borden has been assigned to prepare a screen continuity of William Shakespeare's "As You Like it," which may be placed in production early this year by MGM, which now is making "Romeo and Juliet."

Fadiman Joins MGM

William Fadiman, his contract as eastern story editor for Samuel Goldwyn having expired, will join Metro-Goldyn-Mayer as fiction editor, succeeding Mrs. Nina Lewton, a veteran, who is retiring from active work.

24 Sound Patents, Says Hammond

John Hays Hammond, Jr., son of the famous mining engineer, said this week, that 24 patents have already been awarded on his new dynamic multiplier sound system and seven or eight more are anticipated. The sale to Atlas of Radio Corporation of America holdings in Radio-Keith-Orpheum may change plans for marketing the device in the motion picture industry. Mr. Hammond is a director of RCA, which leased the device for use in the new D22 type phonograph. Ownership and other rights remain with Mr. Hammond.

The sound system, on which Mr. Hammond has been working for the past eight years, incorporates automatic variation of amplification in parallel with the sound itself, in contrast to the present linear type of amplification which remains at a constant degree, although the subject matter may vary from pianissimo to fortissimo. A second important factor claimed is exclusion of parasitical noises which form scratchy sounds as a background.

Furber Explains Trans-Lux Application Filed with SEC

Percy N. Furber, president of Trans-Lux Daylight Picture Screen Corporation, denied this week that his company had filed application with the Securities and Exchange commission to register a new block of shares, as was previously reported. Mr. Furber also said that Leslie E. Thompson, president of the Trans-Lux Movies Corporation, does not participate in the profits of the company, as reported. The statement follows:

"Under the name of Rowe and Co., Archie M. Andrews had deposited in the Central Hanover Bank and Trust Co., 168,852 shares and these were purchased in February of this year—68,000 shares being purchased by our company and the balance by private individuals," he declares. "Owing to the uncertainty of what the new regulations created by the SEC meant, our board at first decided to cancel the 68,000 shares purchased and so notified the Curb Exchange, but at a later date when the SEC regulations were made a little clearer our board decided to merely put the stock back into the treasury. Before doing this, however, we had to request the Curb Exchange to re-register the 68,000 shares and the SEC had to approve of the registration, which was done. Your statement mentions 60,000 shares and that they are in addition to the 785,160 shares already registered, whereas it is 68,000 shares and only a part of the 785,160."

TAX HELD INSPIRATION OF STRIKE IN MEXICO

And Other Rumor-Peddlers Say Independents Are Keeping Majors, Government Apart

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

A mixed up matter like the Mexican cinematographic situation at this writing couldn't miss being the source of strange rumors. Two of these reports are both outstanding and persistent, though they are explosively denied by the parties they directly concern. One is to the effect that the American distributors involved in the strike of employees that has obtained since September 27 brought about the tieup in a manner much different from that which was supposed. Ostensibly, the rumorists say, the strike resulted because the Americans stood pat on their decision not to allow the help their demands for wage increases of from 10 to 25 per cent.

The real cause of the strike, assert the report peddlers, was that the distributors decided to convince the national government, with its heavy tax program, that Mexico would be like a lost babe, entertainmently speaking, without high grade product from the United States, and so made an arrangement with key men in unions and cooked up the strike. As the story goes, a prompt and drastic tieup was considered the only way instantly to shut off supplies of stellar American product, as in that way not a worthwhile Yankee picture could be shown anywhere in Mexico, as unions confederated with the strikers could at a moment's notice close up any exhibitor who dared display any film which the involved distributors handled. Merely quitting distribution would not do the work, it was said, for exhibitors would be left with plenty of pictures which they could play for an indefinite period.

The distributors vigorously deny these charges and brand them absurd.

The other whisper is that some interests importing independent American pictures and European productions are exerting efforts toward keeping the major American distributors and the government far from reaching a settlement of their differences for obvious reasons—these are comparative heydays for those who have pictures to sell, and if the tangle were straightened out their spurt of prosperity would collapse of its own weight. These stories also are discounted by those they directly concern.

And the tieup goes on.

Demand Good Product

The present paucity of good American pictures clearly demonstrates that the Mexican public demands good product from the United States, that European films have as much chance of driving first grade Americans from this market as I have of convincing MOTION PICTURE HERALD to publish my ode to the French can-can dancers. European films are distributed down here by persons who have to buy them outright before they can handle them; the great majority of Mexicans prefer American products. Furthermore, American sales systems, with their branch offices staffed by salaried workers, assure much wider distribution.

Mexican producers have asked the government to hasten settlement of the strike, asserting that Mexicans will not go to the cinemas merely to see Mexican films and that the native industry must follow the lead of the American, for it is still very young and, while steadily improving, is not strong enough to find its way about. Appeal to patriotism has failed to move those many Mexicans who know the difference between a high grade picture, the fruit of long experience, and one that is still in its experimental stages.

60 to 80 Mexican Features

Mexican production in 1936 will be from 60 to 80 features, and some 36 shorts, as compared with about 40 features and 22 shorts this year. Cinematografica Latino Americano, S. A. (Clasa), newest and most enterprising native producer, is to account for ten of next season's features and 24 of its shorts, as well as a semi-monthly Mexican newsreel with an English lecture. The shorts, mostly travelogues, scenics and folklore featuring native music, dances and songs, are to have English, French, German and Italian narrative and are slanted for world distribution.

Clasa is finishing its first feature, "Vamonos Con Pancho Villa" ("Let's Go with Pancho Villa"), a new version of the Villa saga, depicting the tragic tale of six altruistic boys who joined Villa's armies and died for the cause. This will be the most pretentious all-Mexican picture. Eighty principals and 1,200 extras are being used on the locale about 30 miles out of Mexico City that Metro employed for its Villa picture. Fernando de Fuentes, former Mexico City Paramount executive, is directing. When the picture is finished, in February, de Fuentes goes to Spain to direct a picture for C.E.F. He will return in the spring to direct further for Clasa.

Theatre Hit by Fever Ban

The American theatre, Roundup, Montana has been closed due to a scarlet fever epidemic of over 100 cases. The closing was ordered by the Montana State Public Health Authorities. The same ban was placed on all public dances, and even in surrounding counties, all Roundup people were barred from entertainment.

The ban, however, has taken on a comic trend inasmuch as business and working men from quarantined families are allowed to live at home and go to and from their daily tasks and Sunday Schools have been allowed to remain open.

JAPANESE CENSORSHIP ON EXPORT OF NEWSREELS GOES INTO EFFECT

Subjects in News and Scenics Considered Derogatory to the Royal Family or to National Prestige Are Barred

by CHIKUSHI TANI
Tokyo Correspondent

Censorship regulations on Japanese pictures to be exported abroad became effective this month. Though they are generally known as regulations with regard to the censorship on all export pictures, they rather should be termed censorship regulations of export newsreels and scenic pictures, inasmuch as there is as yet no feature length photoplay being exported from this country.

The provisions as finally invoked incorporate proposals by our Military offices and the Japanese League of Newsreel and Scenic Pictures, who filed petitions and protested against original drafts of the regulations. The full text of the regulations consist of 16 articles.

Outstanding provisions are as follows:

Any motion picture considered derogatory to the royal family or inimical to national prestige cannot be exported.

Motion pictures for public exhibition shall not be admitted to export unless they are proved qualified under the standards of censorship provided in these regulations.

Motion pictures of current events for public exhibition must be submitted for censorship under supervision of the local authorities (commissioner of the Metropolitan Police Board), in the case of the Tokyo Prefecture in instances where it is impossible to submit them to censorship at the Home Office.

Legal sanctions are provided against violation of the regulations.

In the case of imported product including features, officials of the censor bureau are disturbed because of the complaints that have been arriving at their office from the public. Some of the complaints say the pictures are being ruined by excessive deletion of scenes and a like number urge the censorship rules be made stricter, saying those whose duty it is to see the pictures and pass on them are too lax.

As evidence of their good faith in the performance of their duties, however, the censors point to some 16 tons of film they have taken from pictures during the past ten years. Of this enormous footage of censored film, American pictures lead by some 60,000 feet for the past year alone.

Assertive nationalism on the part of the Japanese government that has been so prominent in home administration and diplomacy in the past is now branching out to take in all forms of the country's industries, if present indications are to be taken as criterions. Several months ago the government indicated the course of its future action by the establishment of national control, or "restrictive plan," towards foreign automobile and oil companies. Of course, such a move, about which the less said the better, is thought to be aimed at the protection, as well as encouragement, of home industry. The motion picture industry seems to be the next in which the government will take an active interest and more importance is being attached to that industry than ever before. In consequence there looms a probability of concrete regulations being established by the government to protect Japanese made pictures from foreign competition.

This step was discussed in the Tokyo Nichi-Nichi, which gave four columns of front page space to the subject, stating "Tokyo is to be kept clear of theatres exhibiting foreign pictures only." The article further stated that since Japan is found to be the only country where theatres have programs of "exclusively foreign films, the Metropolitan Police Board is making preparations to promulgate a new ordinance that will require the showing of a large percentage of Japanese produced pictures along with foreign ones, or programs entirely made up of home product. This new ordinance indicates the board is taking the first step in the plan to gain control of the industry by the government.

The purpose of the move is said to be in order to allow Japanese audiences to improve their cultural knowledge by the showing of native classics, along with foreign ones, but in most circles the objective is called protection of home industry, and that alone.

To make the plan successful, the board is organizing a Tokyo Federal Association composed of all classes of men connected with stage and screen in Tokyo. Among them are members of the executive staffs of Shochiku and Toho theatre circuits, leading actors, novelists and playwrights. Government officials will be in charge of the association, and are announcing policies that they claim will improve theatre conditions in Tokyo.

With the announcement of the formation of the federation, foreign distributors were amazed at the enormity of the problem they were apt to be forced to face, but are now playing a waiting game, confident that the quality of their product will keep their customers and enable them to dominate the Japanese screenings as they have in the past.

The "Tokuryo"

The industry in Japan is rapidly heading toward a serious dispute over the "tokuryo" or extra rental charged by producer-distributors for productions above the general level. With theatre receipts low and production costs high, exhibitors are looking for a substitute arrangement of some kind. At the same time, handlers of foreign product are quite willing to let the present system continue, for the system does not necessarily apply to foreign pictures. In fact, the "tokuryo" has been a factor in the recent improvement of position of the foreign-made films.

Government Spreading Control Over Industry; Fight Over "Tokuryo" or Extra Rental Brings Move for Compromise

The "tokuryo" usually has been fixed on the basis of cost of production of a picture. But to this have been added the following ostensible justifications for the extra charge: exploitation expenditure, good returns at premieres; stars; preferential runs.

If the pictures are of such high box office standard as to justify the considerable expenses required and the special advantages with which they are accredited, then no complaint or objection will be raised to this particular system. But when the reverse is the case, exhibitors often are disappointed to find themselves actually earning little profit or being unable to make both ends meet in their playings of pictures for which "tokuryo" is charged.

To crown all, almost every Japanese theatre has had far fewer pictures available than last year, due to the poor output of producing companies. Under these circumstances it is natural that exhibitors are not satisfied with such arrangement, and strive to relieve themselves of the difficult position, or to establish some better system whereby profit can be had by both parties. These theatres, if showing Japanese pictures only, cannot expect good business, and will tend to prefer foreign product to the Japanese, as the playing of foreign pictures is not necessarily bound to "tokuryo" arrangement. Herein lies the reason for the rapid advancement of popularity of foreign product. Additional to the fact of improved foreign made pictures.

In order to solve this problem, Kokusai-Eiga-Shimbun, trade review publishing company at Tokyo, has been discussing the subject in its periodical. Encouraged or surprised by the keen arguments advanced, the exhibitors and producing companies are making a study of the issue, but apparently a long time will be required to work out a satisfactory settlement. A number of conferences have been held. It seems that settlement hangs on whether both parties agree to replace "tokuryo" with a compromise arrangement, such as an extra charge arranged on a percentage basis according to box-office earnings.

of theatres is now taking a quick turn toward big theatre construction. His plan of building a 4,000-seat house at Asakusa became a sensational topic in our motion picture world, and spurred activity toward establishing big theatres everywhere in this country. Besides the Teikoku-Kan theatre of Schochiku Company, a large house under annexation at Asakusa, among big houses to be completed or to open by the end of this year, the below enumerated are typical.

Takarazuka Gekijo, at Kyoto (under Toho's management); the Daitokyo (for Shinko releases) at Tokyo; the Chukyo Gekijo at Nagoya; the Kotobuki-Za at Kyushu; Takarazuka Gekijo at Nagoya (under Toho's control); Hoei-Za at Sapporo; Azuma-Za at Hamamatsu; Odeon-Za at Yokohama; Bunka Cinema at Sendai; Shinsekai-Kan at Formosa, and the Teikoku-Kan at Kumamoto.

"Noh" Play Filmed

Under the auspices of the Board of Tourist Industry of the Department of Railways, a "Noh" play is being filmed at the Kinuta sound studio of P.C.L. with a view to being exported to meet the taste of audiences abroad, says the Japan Times. An elaborate setting has been erected in the studio, a realistic reproduction of the architecture of the "Noh" stage. Kintaro Sakurana, head of the Komparu school of "Noh," patronized by Viscount Hosokawa and his company, are presiding "Aoinouye." Two cameramen are being used.

This is a most courageous attempt to present the "Noh" drama to the world, and Kintaro Sakurama is probably the best interpreter of the demon of jealousy role among the "Noh" actors of Japan.

Depending on movement rather than words, the cameras are trained on each change in the gestures or action of the chief character while the microphone picks up the chanting of the chorus and the centuries-old rhythm of drums and shrilling of the flute.

The craft of the cinema has centered almost exclusively on realistic productions. Search has been made throughout the world for details of cottages or castles. Hollywood has spent millions on representing Mexico or Ireland, Egyptian sands or a Chinese village. Now comes the filming of an art that is not photographic and so simple as to be disconcerting. It is abstract, impersonal, completely at variance with all the accurate architecture and ornate interiors to which film audiences for so long have been accustomed. In "Aoinouye" there is but one property. A dignified assistant walks in solemnly and unfolds a kimono and spreads it out on the stage. It represents the bed of a woman who is ill because of the jealousy and spite of her rival.

Those who believe in realism as the only doctrine of the theatre will be obliged to exercise their imaginations and will find that there are regions of the abstract that they have never entered before in their lives. Harder still to believe will be the abstract spirit of the jealous woman. Although she is supposed to be invisible yet the priest knows she is present and exercises the evil spirit. The horned golden mask with its diabolical expression is the concentration of the theme of the play.

For a thorough appreciation of the intangible and idealistic qualities of "Aoi-nouye," a cultivated taste is necessary.

When the filming of this ancient "Noh" play is accomplished, a still greater problem presents itself, how to make an adequate interpretation in English that will not spoil the original artistry of the piece.

16 mm. Sound Films

Every film producing company of this country now is turning out sound films, with the result, however, that each company has been under heavier burden of cost of production, while its production efficiency has been dropping. Viewed from this point, the Japanese sound film industry appears still to leave pretty much to be desired.

In addition, there is the problem of the forthcoming development of 16 mm. equipment and sound film manufacture, which threatens to be rather more serious to our producers than the foreign picture.

2,000-Foot Reel Favored

Distributors of American motion pictures here have given careful consideration to the proposed 2,000-foot reel standard proposed by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

United Artists, Japan, sent out 300 questionnaires to Japanese theatres touching upon the following subjects:

(1) Convenience or inconvenience of changeover of reels, (2) Advantage or disadvantage and convenience or inconvenience in actual transportation and shipment of such reels, (3) What effect on the show in the theatre by reducing the number of reels, (4) Partial remodeling of projector's mechanism.

The first 30 or so of replies showed that approximately 80 per cent favored the 2,000-foot standard.

Herman Zohbel, Of Radio, Dead

Death came unexpectedly this week to Herman Zohbel, manager of the RKO Radio Studios in Hollywood. He died Saturday afternoon in Queen of the Angels hospital, Los Angeles, of peritonitis following an emergency operation for appendicitis.

Mr. Zohbel, who was 45 years of age, left the United States Leather Company in 1927 to assume the treasurership of RKO, holding that post until 18 months ago, when he went to Hollywood to become general manager of the studio.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Adele Zohbel. There are no children. He leaves two brothers, Henry and Theodore, who is manager of the RKO 81st Street Theatre. Mr. Zohbel's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Zohbel, live at Woodhaven, Long Island. Mr. Zohbel's body will arrive in New York Sunday for burial.

14 Pictures from Pommer-Korda

Erich Pommer, in New York for conferences with United Artists officials, announced Wednesday that his new association with Alexander Korda and London Films will result in 14 productions in 1936-1937. Three will be released through United as Erich Pommer Productions; 11 will be on the regular schedule of Alexander Korda.

Mr. Pommer's first as an independent will be "Elizabeth of England," which starts in March. The second is "Knight Without Armor," by James Hilton, and will star Robert Donat and Merle Oberon. It starts in May.

In addition to acting as an independent, Mr. Pommer will be associated with Mr. Korda in making two or three films, included in the 1936-37 schedule of London Films.

The London Films program has "Things to Come" and "The Man Who Could Work Miracles," the H. G. Wells screen plays already completed, and "Cyrano De Bergerac," "Claudius" and "Randlords," the first two starring Charles Laughton; "Lord Nelson," starring Robert Donat; "Lawrence of Arabia"; Robert Flaherty's production of "Elephant Boy"; a new film starring Marlene Dietrich; "Forget Me Not," with Beniamino Gigli, and a film on the life of Verdi.

Mr. Pommer also said Mr. Korda has contracted for Harry D'Arrast, King Vidor and William K. Howard to direct for London Films.

Mr. Korda also has become associated with a new producing organization in Budapest, with Nicholas Horthy, Jr.

ESSANESS DENIES CHICAGO RKO TIEUP

Silverman Says Circuit Will Not Manage RKO Houses; Publicists Elect Ted Weber

by BILL CROUCH
Chicago Correspondent

In no uncertain terms did Eddie Silverman of Essaness theatres declare that neither he nor his associates would be connected with the RKO theatres or Radio Pictures in an official capacity.

"We have no intention of going with RKO theatres," said Silverman. "We will not participate in the running of RKO theatres nor take part in picture production. These stories of our taking over the management of RKO houses is nothing short of ridiculous."

The close association in the past weeks of Silverman and Emil Stern of Essaness with Leo Spitz, president of RKO, brought about the rumors and they had not been definitely denied.

Prospects for this year are the best in a long time, Silverman said.

the Industry

Only those representing theatres that are 100% independent may participate.

¶ "Theatre Receipts" is a tabulation of grosses of individual pictures in key cities, representing 8,000 bookings in 157 key theatres.

¶ Each is a definite guide to the nation-wide trade value of the finished product. Hence both are followed by every branch of the industry—exhibition, distribution and production alike—by showmen, by actor and director as well.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

Yes, sir, we were home to spend the holidays. We had spent so few of them at home in recent years that we have just about forgotten to hang up our stockings.

You boys who don't have a "shelterbelt" in your neighborhood are out of luck. We have one in the northwest part of this county that is a dandy, and the Government has 57 ablebodied men working on it at 35 cents an hour. Some live here in Neligh and they drive up there of mornings in autos and come back in the evenings, a distance of 35 miles.

Since the snow came and stopped the planting of twigs, the army has been set to killing jackrabbits. They annihilated 51 in one day. They have a net which they stretch around about forty acres and the net has a pocket similar to a pike net and into this pocket they drive the rabbits and then the army advances with clubs and the carnage begins. They are sending a truck load of live rabbits down to an experimental farm near Grand Island, Nebraska, where the "experts" are going to poison the trees to see if it will kill the rabbits when they eat the bark.

There was no sense in the Government going to the expense of buying that net. What the "Brain Trust" should have done was to have detailed some of the boys to put salt on the rabbits' tail so that when they stopped to lick it off the balance of the army could advance and knock 'em in the head with clubs.

When we think of this waste of money in nets we are reminded of what Walt said to Phyllis in "Gasoline Alley" when he was trying to untangle some Christmas tree decorations and he said, "Say, Phyllis, a man just can't enjoy good health when he's thinkin' the thoughts I'm thinkin' and can't get rid of 'em."

Ben Hecht says that Hollywood is either drunk or crazy. Ben ought to be ashamed for making such a statement, for 'taint so, not all of 'em anyway, and besides that it's a slam on Hollywood, and Hollywood gets enough slams already.

"Choice" Stuff

We have just received a letter from a liquor house advising us that they are offering a few cases of their "choice" liquor at the extremely low price of $65 a case. We have just written the company and thanked them for remembering us with their unusual offer but, unfortunately, we wouldn't know what to do with choice liquor if we had it. However, their price is so low, compared with the price of sowbelly we have to get to cook with our beans, that as soon as the Government pays us for the hogs we didn't raise, we might order a case.

We hope that those of you who didn't receive holiday greetings from us won't feel slighted, for to have remembered all of you would have required the services of two secretaries. As it was, we helped Jim Farley's office out with $3.30 to try and help it out of the red. You all have our kindest regards nevertheless.

Dr. Townsend's old age pension plan seems to have attracted considerable attention from men who think. Unfortunately, our gourd is so hollow that we can't quite savvy what it is all about, but, as we see it, it looks to us like another case of "Jones, he pays the freight."

We have just received a check from A. F. Botsford of the Royal theatre at Ainsworth, Nebraska, and a letter asking us to have his subscription to the Herald renewed for another two years. Thanks, A. F., we're glad to do it, and your check is now on its way to the Herald. We were sorry not to have met you when we were in Ainsworth a few weeks ago.

A few nights ago we saw Edward Everett Horton, and some other folks in "Your Uncle Dudley," a picture that was well worth while seeing. Edward Everett gives a particular kind of comedy that but few can equal. The nearest one to it is Charley Ruggles. Neither of them resorts to "slapstick" to get a laugh; that's why we like Horton and Ruggles. Keep it up, boys.

A Warning

Radio companies have a habit of dedicating jazz orchestra numbers to various people. This reminds us very much of signs we see along highways entering small towns which read "Speed Limit 15 Miles Per Hour; Keep Cutout Closed." If they ever dedicate one of those numbers to us, and we find it out, we will sue them for damage, darned if we don't.

Radio and press are full of cabled stories about Colonel Charles Lindbergh and family, who went to England to escape receiving threatening letters from kidnapers. We are in the habit of pointing to China as the home of banditry, but we guess we better stop that.

They killed an Austrian prince and the whole world was plunged into war. We sent hundreds of thousands of our boys across the water to help make the world "Safe for Democracy" but we seem to be unable to make the United States safe for respectable citizens.

If we had our say about it (which we don't have) we'd appoint Smedley Butler at the head of the law enforcement department and have him call out the marines to patrol the country and have him give them orders that when they found a bandit to shoot him first and make inquiries afterwards. The marines don't have much to do except to appear on dress parade and draw their pay.

When a bandit is dead, shyster lawyers and buttermilk courts are not able to get him a continuance of his trial. Shyster lawyers, buttermilk courts and sob sisters are largely responsible for crime running rampant in this country. What we ought to do is to start learning the Chinese language.

Politicians yell themselves hoarse about "Liberty and Justice". They wave the flag until their arms are almost paralyzed. We go to the polls and vote and pat ourselves on the back for having performed a sacred duty. When the election is over, they go down to Washington and forget all about the folks back home. The American people are a bunch of suckers, and we are the biggest sucker in the school. We have been fed bologna and horseradish until we have about lost our taste for huckleberry pie. These are our sentiments regardless of what anybody else on earth thinks about it.

We went into a cafe the other evening to get dinner and they had the radio turned on and we heard a jazz orchestra imitating a bunch of Missouri hounds trailing a skunk, and an artist from the livery-stable was crooning a love song, so we called the waiter over to us and said, "Say, girlie, this soup is just terrible. Please take it back to the kitchen and tell the chef to put in another dish rag."

It is also our earnest wish that the year 1936 will bring much more of happiness and prosperity to you than the years agone. And now, while Ernest Rovelstad is taking up the collection, let's all arise and sing—

"Jingle bells, jingle bells, jingle all the way,
Oh what fun it is to ride in a one-horse open sleigh."

Korda's New Studio Nearing Completion

Alexander Korda's large new studio at Denham, near London, is expected to be ready for occupancy early in March as the permanent home of London Films. Jack Okey, Hollywood authority on studio construction, has been busy with the project for eight months.

The studio will be especially prepared for color as well as sound film production. The buildings will cover 28 acres of the 165 on the tract. Each building will be airconditioned. The first four stages will be ready within a month. There will be seven altogether.

Three daily shifts of 1,100 men are speeding the work.

Hurwitz Releasing Two Reel Subject

David L. Hurwitz, Baltimore attorney, is releasing "The Trial of the Century" in the Baltimore territory. Subject is a two reeler based on the Hauptmann case.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Commodore

WESTERN JUSTICE: Bob Steele—Good western. —Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

First National

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Pat O'Brien—Fine.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

GOOSE AND THE GANDER, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent—Not big but very satisfactory. Patrons seemed to enjoy it and pulled above average. —E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

GOOSE AND THE GANDER, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent—This is high speed, semi-sophistication that went over with a bang with the smart crowd. Business somewhat off, however.—Leonard Branscome, Stuart-Hillsville Theatres, Stuart and Hillsville, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

I FOUND STELLA PARISH: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter—Miss Francis certainly fitted the role of Stella Parish. Well liked by everyone. Running time, 84 minutes. Played December 1-2.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

I FOUND STELLA PARISH: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter, Paul Lukas—One of Kay Francis' best. Should please the average audience. Did good business for one day run. Played December 25.—C. J. Hubley, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Tallulah, La. Rural and small town patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Excellent show. People came out raving about it. Frank McHugh stole picture according to comments. Business little above average for two day run. Played December 22-23.—C. J. Hubley, Cameo Theatre, Tallulah, La. Small town and rural patronage.

PAYOFF, THE: James Dunn, Claire Dodd—Very good. Interesting story, good cast, good acting and good audience reaction. Wish we could have more of Frankie Darro's excellent acting. Running time, 64 minutes. Played November 30-December 1.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Poewll, Ruby Keeler—One of Powell's best. You can promise your customers full value for their money. Played December 8-9.—L. H. Mills, Dixie Theatre, Olive Hill, Ky. Small town and rural patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell —Just about the tops in entertainment. We ran it on Christmas Eve and Christmas Day when everybody had some place else to go and coupled with the coldest weather we've experienced, it took a nose dive at the box office and it's a shame to waste such grand entertainment on a small crowd. I want to bring it back when everything's normal. Running time, 109 minutes. Played December 24-25.—B. A. McConell, Emerson Theatre. Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler —Superb entertainment that sent them all out complimenting the show. Music, pathos, humor, action and romance. Give this all you've got; it's worth it. Business bad due to snow and unusually cold weather.—Leonard Branscome, Stuart-Hillsville Theatres, Stuart and Hillsville, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

Liberty

CHEATERS: Bill Boyd, June Collyer, Dorothy Mackaill—It hardly seems possible that three stars of the silent days could appear so poorly as they do in this film. Aside from bad acting, the picture has crude production, poor photography and unoriginal writing. Our patrons cared very little for it but tolerated it because it was the minor feature on a double bill.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS: Paul Kelly, Anne Shirley, Sidney Fox—If all independent pictures could maintain an entertainment average on a par with this and more recent M. H. Hoffman productions, exhibitors would not assume so cautious an attitude when dealing with independent exchangemen. This picture is in no way pretentious film fare, yet it is at all times convincing and entertaining. Anne Shirley has only a brief role and is not at her best. Since her success in "Anne of Green Gables" she is being sold as the star of the Liberty picture and her photograph has been inserted at the head of the cast while the more important players are merely listed. The title of the picture sold it for us and we had a profitable attendance and a well satisfied patronage. —J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Mascot

BEHIND THE GREEN LIGHTS: Norman Foster, Judith Allen—Played on double bill. Good program picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

HARMONY LANE: Douglass Montgomery, Evelyn Venable—Fine picture. Not quite as good as expected, but expected too much, perhaps. Picture is plenty good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March —We just about grossed film rental on this Garbo and wouldn't have done that had it not been on Bank Night. Running time, 95 minutes.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—A screamingly funny program picture that pleased every patron.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Eleanor Powell, Jack Benny—Any audience that is not pleased with this production does not want a show. Eleanor Powell is wonderful. She does about the classiest dancing ever filmed. Jack Benny is good; in fact, there is not a poor star in the entire cast. Not so good at the box office because it had been shown north, south, east and west of here. However, it is a wonderful show. Running time, 103 minutes. Played December 6-8.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

ESCAPADE: Luise Rainer, William Powell—Went over O. K. Business off.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—One of this popular team's best pictures, with all the glamour of the circus as a background. The highlight is the elephant and tiger act. One of Leo's best productions. Running time, 88 minutes. Played December 14-15.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PERFECT GENTLEMAN, THE: Frank Morgan —Should be entitled "The Perfect Ass." Patrons came to see Morgan and the only thing that kept them through the picture was the Bank Night drawing. This is not hearsay as they told me that as they came out. If you have to play it, better make a one night's stand as you and the operator will be the only ones there the second night and I doubt if you'll be there. Running time, 73 minutes. Played December 26.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—For real down-to-earth entertainment, this can't be beat and it seemed most everyone that came had seen the picture a couple of times before. It's a pleasure to run this kind of entertainment. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 22-23.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Old but good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Paramount

CORONADO: Jack Haley, Johnny Downs—This one comes close to a big rating. It almost does, but while it makes fair entertainment it is not box office. It is cast with a lot of old players that know show business, and a lot of newer ones that know the show business, but somehow it fails to register.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell, Sir Guy Standing —We booked this one on the strength of its four star rating and various reports to the effect that it was a "He-Man's" picture. We can assume, therefore, from the sprinkling of "boohs" which arose at the close of the picture that, well, use your own judgment! The consensus, however, was that it was a very good production, that Cooper's acting was superb, but that Tone stole the show. Running time, 105 minutes. Played December 28.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE: Sylvia Sidney, Melvyn Douglass—A very entertaining picture which pleased all. Douglass was extra good. Story similar to "Ladies of the Big House," with the same star, but with very little prison setting. Should do extra business as it did for me and played it right after Christmas. Played December 29-31.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

PETER IBBETSON: Gary Cooper, Ann Harding— Better not promise very much on this one. It may be what England wants, but not Americans, whom we cater to. Very droll affair.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

VIRGINIA JUDGE, THE: Walter C. Kelly, Marsha Hunt—Some half baked critics panned this and I fell down on advertising it strongly, but it's good, real down to earth material such as we need a lot of. It's worth four "Peter Ibbetsons." Why do reviewers study artistry and acting ability alone? What exhibitors desire to learn of pictures is are they entertainment and is the story well done? Is the continuity good? There's a thousand different opinions of a show maybe, but why can't a reviewer let it be known if a picture is real entertainment or do they know entertainment when they see it?— H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

Republic

CRIME OF DOCTOR CRESPI, THE: Erich von Stroheim, Harriet Russell—This picture's title was an attraction but the story failed to please. It is far below the high standard set by Republic in their first releases of the season. The advertising material does not carry the Republic trademark.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RACING LUCK: William Boyd—Satisfactory for Saturday dates but not well enough produced for preferred playing time. Not as good as some of the other Republic releases. Fair audience response.— J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SAGEBRUSH TROUBADOUR: Gene Autry, Barbara Pepper—Good, but not nearly so good as previous Autry films. The picture suffers from too much padding with musical numbers, contributed by Smiley Burnette in order to round it out to feature length. It has hardly more than thirty minutes of real action in it.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

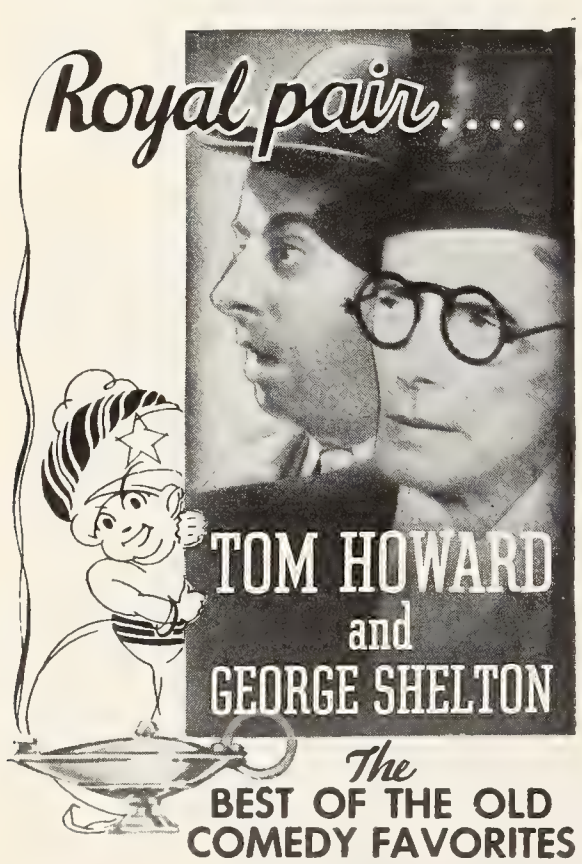
RKO Radio

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn—Comes closer to following the story than any picture I have ever seen (except the picture has a happy ending). Comments on this were somewhat divided, a few couldn't stand it, but these were more than offset by those that praised it highly. Will probably win a rating as one of the finest of 1935.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.



ANOTHER FACE: Wallace Ford, Phyllis Brooks—This was a pleasant surprise. Crook, detective, Hollywood buildup, with comedy interspersed. Don't be afraid to advertise it. Running time, 70 minutes. —H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

HI GAUCHO: Steffi Duna, John Carroll—Just didn't jell. Stars quite unknown and biz way below weekend average.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

JALNA: Kay Johnson, Ian Hunter—I used this for my Christmas show as it has more than a reel of it devoted to that occasion. I got this tip from these columns some two months ago and immediately set it for Christmas. A rather unusual picture which I thoroughly enjoyed, but the kind of production that doesn't bring out much comment either way. A picture that you won't have to worry about, as it should please nearly everyone.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Not so funny as some of the earlier pictures of these comedians, but the children were well satisified with the show. Just fair entertainment. Played December 21.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—This picture failed to create much enthusiasm and we have no regrets for playing it only one day. Wheeler and Woolsey have made much better comedies.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Business fair and sure pleased Wheeler and Woolsey fans. —Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Ginger Rogers, Francis Lederer—Old but we are more than happy that we played it for it is an appealing little drama of life in the big city. A large crowd was thoroughly entertained.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE: Gene Raymond, Margaret Callahan—I think it better than the silent version I used years ago. Comedy and thrills balance it nicely. Everybody well pleased with it.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—Would like to tell you I had a wonderful business on this one, but there are a number of reasons why it did not do big business. Opened Sunday night before Christmas and ran through to Christmas night with a blizzard like we have never had before, and recorded less than average business. The production is high class in every way and should do big business whenever shown.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Margot Grahame, Walter Abel—A good picture with a weak cast. However, it pleased those who saw it. "Doug" Fairbanks still away in front with his d'Artagnan of years ago. I wonder what Metro would have done with this story.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Not generally liked in this town. Too long and too much sameness. Played December 15-16.—L. H. Mills, Dixie Theatre, Olive Hill, Ky. Small town and rural patronage.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD: Edward Arnold, Karen Morley, Frankie Thomas—I played this in preference to a much newer RKO 1934-35 and was not sorry I made the substitution as I consider this an unusually fine picture. This is a "problem" picture, featuring the big star of "Diamond Jim."—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

WE'RE ONLY HUMAN: Preston Foster, Jane Wyatt—A darn good G Man picture. It will please all that see it. Running time, 75 minutes.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple—As I hadn't played this before, I thought I'd chance it in spite of its age as I'd never play it any newer. Used the week-end before Christmas, always a bad time, and with somewhat unfavorable weather conditions this gave me my tenth highest gross of 1935. Not bad for an old show at this time of the year?—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

BLACK SHEEP: Edmund Lowe, Claire Trevor—Started out slowly, but gradually developed into a very interesting story that held the attention of our patrons right up to the end. Good action and some comedy. Played December 14.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN EGYPT: Warner Oland, Pat Paterson—About like all the other Chan chillers. Properly thrilling but not too blood curdling for the kiddies. Our patrons enjoy these mysteries and prefer Warner Oland to any other actor identified with detective roles on the screen.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

DANTE'S INFERNO: Spencer Tracy, Claire Trevor—The reports on this film, relative to its advertising accessories, led us to sell it as a modern story and we are more than glad that we did for this extra effort on our part and the theatre artists resulted in above average business. Good audience reaction. —J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—Age makes no difference on these westerns and although this didn't draw the usual western business (too close to Christmas I guess) I would rate this as the best western show to come out in 1935. A good story, well acted and saturated with comedy that brings out big honest laughs.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—A story of the Erie Canal, with Janet Gaynor at her best and very able supporting cast makes this a picture that I class among the best of the year. The historic scenes certainly pleased the older generation, while there was enough excitement and romance to make it interesting for the young people as well. Just an all-around good picture that pleased my audience. Running time, 91 minutes. Played December 11-12.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—Never have I played a picture that drew so many comments both for and against. The first time I viewed this I was not at all pleased with the show, but after watching it through the second time I was forced to change my opinion. Until the last reel the thing moves pretty slowly, and is a picture that is certainly not going to please 100% in any audience.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—We were more than pleased at the generous response this feature received at the box office, considering the fact that Gaynor is slipping as a drawing card. It is an all-around good production with clever characterizations by a well chosen cast. Henry Fonda made a very decided and favorable impression and our patrons are looking forward to his latest films.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

GAY DECEPTION, THE: Francis Lederer, Frances Dee—Lederer is taking Maurice Chevalier's place and is several points ahead of him right now. The better class of people just raved about this. The most difficult to please came out praising this show. Drew more fine comments than any show for a long time and not a single squawk. Although Lederer is pretty much the whole show he is nicely supported by Frances Dee.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT FORTY: Will Rogers—The same applies to this as to my report on "Little Colonel" only more so, as this gave me my second highest all time gross. Having played all around me I didn't think there would be anyone left to come, but the ticket sales told a different story.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore—This had played all around me in every competitive situation a long time ago, but in spite of that I did the third biggest gross in the 10 years I have been exhibiting films. This Temple is positively B. O. magic. Not as good as "Bright Eyes" but certainly grand entertainment.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

METROPOLITAN: Lawrence Tibbett, Virginia Bruce, Alice Brady—Twenty members of the "Morning Musical" pronounced it okay. My audience does not understand Italian and he might just as well have sung in Greek; it would have been all the same. I mean Tibbett. We lost a lot of varnish from the seats with all the squirming that those that suffered through it did. Most, I think, waited to see if something was going to happen along towards the end to save it. This I know, that most of those that go in for grand opera do it because it is the swanky thing to do and not because they enjoy it. One like this was too many. My audience are not that type; they are out for entertainment.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MUSIC IS MAGIC: Alice Faye, Ray Walker, Bebe Daniels—This may be interesting to those engaged in making movies but the guys that lay down two bits to see it don't get their money's worth. Ten cents admission would be about right.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

MUSIC IS MAGIC: Alice Faye, Ray Walker—Fox did it again; another failure in a musical. Their directors and authors don't seem to have what it takes when this type comes up. They plugged "Music Is Magic" five separate and distinct times in this one and if that did not bore the audience to tears, then I'm wrong. A no good picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY: Rochelle Hudson, Bruce Cabot, Cesar Romero—Timely kidnaping picture. Well played. Comments good. Get the large heralds from exchanges and it will do business in small towns. Played December 29-30.—L. H. Mills, Dixie Theatre, Olive Hill, Ky. Small town and rural patronage.

SILK HAT KID: Lew Ayres, Mae Clarke—Another program picture that is entertaining but nameless. Lew Ayres means very little as a box office attraction at our theatres. Patrons well satisfied.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers, Anne Shirley—Another excellent show from Will Rogers. I would not class this as his best show, but it is plenty good for any theatre. Struck three nights of zero weather, which cutdown on the box office, but it certainly pleased my patrons. Irvin S. Cobb is perfect as the steamboat river captain. In fact, the entire cast is good. The highlight is the race between the Claremore Queen and the Pride of Paducah. Beautiful scenery and good photography. Just an unusually good production. Played December 24-26.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

THUNDER IN THE NIGHT: Edmund Lowe, Karen Morley—The excellent acting of Edmund Lowe and Karen Morley, with a very good supporting cast, could not put this one over. Do not know whether it was the title, the foreign setting or tax paying time, but the fact remains it flopped badly at the box office. Running time, 67 minutes. Played December 18-19.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda—Very good but another class A from Fox that was a flop at the gate.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

WELCOME HOME: James Dunn, Arline Judge—A very good production that, for some reason, did not make expenses. Pleased those who came, but very few came. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 4-5.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WELCOME HOME: James Dunn, Arline Judge—A very light program picture that received a nice response from our patronage and was average as a box office attraction.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Universal

AFFAIR OF SUSAN, THE: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell—Zasu Pitts will soon regain her lost followers if she continues to appear in comedies as clever as this. I consider it one of the best she has ever made. Much of the picture's effectiveness is due to the strikingly original musical score composed by Franz Waxman which is continuous throughout the film. Many of our patrons who seldom notice production details commented on this unusual score.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

CHINATOWN SQUAD: Lyle Talbot, Valerie Hobson—Good program picture. Held the interest and attention of our patrons all the way through. Good enough for small towns, but nothing big. Played December 7.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold—A Jim Dandy show and you can be safe in doubling advertising space. Good old American theme, well done. Go after it. Running time, 93 minutes.—H. J. Langaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

EAST OF JAVA: Charles Bickford, Elizabeth Young—Fair. Some exciting scenes but in all did not seem to please a Saturday crowd. Played December 21.—L. H. Mills, Dixie Theatre, Olive Hill, Ky. Small town and rural patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady, Douglass Montgomery, Anita Louise—We would have greater trust in Santa Claus if all comedies could be as completely satisfying to box office and patrons as this gem which we played during the holidays. The thrill that comes so infrequently to showmen was ours when we heard the honest guffaws of a large crowd of contented patrons during the showing of this picture.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

REMEMBER LAST NIGHT?: Edward Arnold, Constance Cummings, Sally Eilers—A good detective picture, very well acted. Constance gives a good bit of acting here. Played December 19-20.—L. H. Mills, Dixie Theatre, Olive Hill, Ky. Small town and rural patronage.

SHE GETS HER MAN: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell—This is really one of the funniest pictures we have shown for many a week. Her best and funniest to date, in my opinion. Kept our patrons in an uproar all the way through. Played December 25.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

SHE GETS HER MAN: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell—This comedy seemed to please on a double program, although Zasu has starred in better films. Satisfactorily produced.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

STORM OVER THE ANDES: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—Excellent. Went over big here.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

STORMY: Noah Beery, Jr., Jean Rogers' Rex—I had the first run on this in the Northwest and advertised that way, but did not do but little above average midweek business. Different from the ordinary "run of the mill" westerns and will please the usual western fans as well as a few that don't usually attend that type of entertainment.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN: May Robson, Henry Armetta—A good program picture that pleased most of those that saw it. Did not seem to draw. Played December 12-13.—L. H. Mills, Dixie Theatre, Olive Hill, Ky. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner Bros.

DR. SOCRATES: Paul Muni, Ann Dvorak—Just fair; not up to "Bordertown," "Black Fury," or "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang." Muni always does the best he can with what they give him, but they did not gve him much in this one. It will do for a weekend picture if they don't expect too much.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

"For some time now the first section in MOTION PICTURE HERALD is the section "What the Picture Did for Me." I know this is contributed to by theatre managers everywhere and represents cooperation among us.

"I felt that I was not doing my part until I had sent in a few reports myself."

LEONARD BRANSCOME
Stuart-Hillsville Theatres
Stuart and Hillsville, Va.

I LIVE FOR LOVE: Everett Marshall, Dolores Del Rio—I wanted to hide myself for a week after playing this one. There's no excuse whatever for such stuff. Worst business for some time, as Everett Marshall's grimace-singing in the trailer forewarned the cash customers.—Leonard Branscome, Stuart-Hillsville Theatres, Stuart and Hillsville, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

I LIVE FOR LOVE: Dolores Del Rio, Everett Marshall—Very fair show but not for small town, my patrons not caring for this operatic type picture. Added attraction only draw. Running time, 65 minutes. Played December 6.—C. J. Hubley, Cameo Theatre, Tallulah, La. Small town and rural patronage.

I LIVE FOR LOVE: Dolores Del Rio, Everett Marshall—They need not have lived; they should have passed out and I and the audience would join the mourners and throw the last handful of sand on the grave. That is the kind of a picture it is. Should have been buried before releasing.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LITTLE BIG SHOT: Sybil Jason, Robert Armstrong—For a little picture, as Sybil Jason says, "It's terrific!" Played on Sunday and Monday to as big business as "Page Miss Glory." Put on unusually heavy advertising campaign, however.—Leonard Branscome, Stuart-Hillsville Theatres, Stuart and Hillsville, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran. Sheila Mannors—Good sound, good photography, good singing and plenty of action make this one of the best westerns we have played in a long time.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Just a great gob of nothing. Davies silly; Powell sissy. Business exceptional first day and poor successive two days.—Leonard Branscome, Stuart-Hillsville Theatres, Stuart and Hillsville, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien—A very disappointing production. Very good acting by both Powell and Davies, but the story is almost non-existent. Everyone enjoys Dick's singing and he has very little singing in this one. Poorest picture I ever exhibited with either of these stars. Running time, 92 minutes. Played November 27-28.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PERSONAL MAID'S SECRET: Margaret Lindsay, Warren Hull—I was surprised in this one, as I did not think it would be much, judging from the press sheet. It is a very good picture and pleased a lot better than some of the specials. Good story, good acting and good comments from the audience. Running time, 58 minutes. Played December 28-29.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SPECIAL AGENT: Bette Davis, George Brent—A grand little picture that drew slightly above average business. Warner's programmers are generally better than their specials, I have found.—Leonard Branscome, Stuart-Hillsville Theatres, Stuart and Hillsville, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, James Melton, Frank McHugh—Gave general satisfaction, although a few did not care for the opera, preferring to hear Melton sing popular numbers. McHugh's comedy as usual helped a lot.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

BRANDED A COWARD: Johnnie Mack Brown, Billie Seward—While this western is not up to major company standards it should please those action lovers who enjoy much gunplay, wild riding, and a hero with the strength of Popeye the Sailor. Our patrons seemed to enjoy it and few complained. The greatest fault of this film is its poor photography of the night scenes. About half of the picture is filmed at night.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

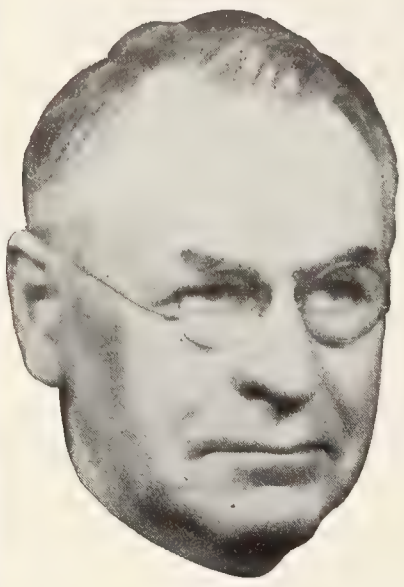
RIDDLE RANCH: Black King, David Worth, June Marlowe—This western is pitifully cheap and unintentionally funny. Black King has a very brief role although he is starred. Our patrons got a big kick out of the scene where the hero is supposedly starving for water on an uninhabitated mesa yet an automobile drives past in the distance, leaving a trail of dust.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Short Features

Educational

MOONLIGHT AND MELODY: Musical Comedies—My cowboys like to see the bare legged girls again and this went over pretty well. Running time, 25 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

WAY UP THAR: Young Romance—A small town weekend natural. About half the audience stayed to see it the second time. Running time, 22 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.



WAY UP THAR: Young Romance Series—About as bad as they come. It is getting so that when we have a comedy that there are some laughs to, the audience is too astonished to appreciate it. They are getting worse and worse and what the exhibitor is going to do for filler for his schedule I don't know. You can't give them all cartoons and the shorts such as the musicals that have merit are too few to fill all the bookings.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

HONEYLAND: Happy Harmonies—One of the most beautiful colored cartoons I have ever exhibited. Pleased adults as much as kiddies. Advertise this one big. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

LITTLE PAPA: Our Gang—An "Our Gang" that is a wow, featuring the most adorable baby that ever crashed Hollywood. In fact, she is so dear we hated to see her left to the tender (?) mercies of "Our Gang." Running time, 2 reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: (Trailer)—A maximum of critics' raves and the minimum of the Marx Bros. is Metro's idea on how to get the public in to see the picture.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

NURSE TO YOU: Charley Chase—The usual fine performance of Charley makes this grand entertainment for those looking for topnotch comedy. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

PUBLIC GHOST NO. 1: Charley Chase—A good Chase comedy for a change. Ghost comedies always seem to draw the laughs.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

SLIGHTLY STATIC: Todd-Kelly—Very good Todd-Kelly comedy. This team gets the laughs. How we will miss Thelma. Running time, 2 reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

STARLIT DAYS AT LIDO: Oddities—Two reels of the best entertainment you can buy. Stars, beautiful colors, music, comedy. More entertainment in this than a lot of the features. Running time, 2 reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

MAGIC OF MUSIC, THE: Richard Himber and His Orchestra—Nothing out of the ordinary, unless it was the unknown blonde who somehow managed to push her unusual film personality to the front whenever a closeup was taken. We are confident that this was her first, last, and only picture! Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Universal

MONKEY WRETCHES: Oswald Cartoons—This cartoon deserves a report. It's a honey. Running time, nine minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

MONKEY WRETCHES: Oswald Cartoons—By all means get this one. Running time, one reel.—L. H. Mills, Dixie Theatre, Olive Hill, Ky. Small town and rural patronage.

Vitaphone

ALL-AMERICAN DRAWBACK: Edgar Bergen—I don't know what I have ever done to deserve two such shorts as this and "The Officer's Mess" wished off on me at one and the same time. If you have to run these, don't book them at the same time. No good. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

ALL AMERICAN DRAWBACK: Edgar Bergen—One of the best shorts we've had in quite a while. Mr. Bergen is certainly good as a ventriloquist. Running time, one reel.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

KEYSTONE HOTEL: Old Timers—Good slapstick comedy. Above the average a whole lot. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

NUTVILLE: Radio Ramblers—Very good single reel with some good dancing and singing. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

NUTVILLE: Pepper Pot—Rightly named. It's nuts. —E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

OFFICER'S MESS, THE: Shemp Howard—M-E-S-S is right. This is absolutely the worst short I ever run. Not a laugh in the entire two reels. Here's hoping Warner's junk this one. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

ROOFTOPS OF MANHATTAN: Broadway Brevities—Don't fail to set this one in as it's got everything in the way of entertainment. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

TICKETS PLEASE: Georgie Price—A good two-reeler from Warner Bros. Some very good dancing, and plenty of comedy. Pleased. Running time, 2 reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE IN TOYLAND: Gus Edwards' Stars of the Future—Excellent. These kiddies can sure dish out the entertainment. Running time, 2 reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre. Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

PATTERN FOR OTHER CIRCUITS

Theatremen interested in the progress of the managers' sharing plan now in the second year of operation by Famous Players Canadian are informed that the idea stands up. Backed by the endorsement of the men to whom it applies, the plan has sufficient strength to serve as a pattern to be followed profitably by other circuits at all concerned.

The plan is sound and simple, depends not upon drives or period contest, is based purely upon increase in grosses over a stretch of 52 weeks. In brief, here it is:

Selecting the grosses of 1934 as a fair barometer, Messrs. Nathanson and Fitzgibbons ascertained what proportion, on a percentage basis, each manager's salary amounted to in relation to admissions in each theatre for the 12 months preceding September 1, 1934.

It was then agreed to pay each manager as additional remuneration, the same percentage of the amount by which admissions were increased during the next 12 months over the total admissions for the previous year.

To do away with any misunderstandings, the budget control system was abandoned but the home office continues to check and compare cost of all miscellaneous and controllable expenditures. And at the end of each monthly period, managers receive a statement showing increase or decrease of controllable expenditures and increase or decrease in grosses.

That's all there is to it, and glory be, it works. The monthly statement shows the theatreman just where he stands. If his grosses increase, then he digs in to push 'em higher. If they go down, then he fights his ears off to get back up in the dividend-paying black. Thus, business is steadily improving, managers are satisfied, executives are pleased, and joy resounds in the land.

There is every reason to believe that this Canadian plan will flourish just as well in American soil, especially in those spots where theatre "crops" are still scanty.

NO RAREST OF VIRTUES

The speed with which able managers move in emergencies is a constant source of pure amazement to executives in more conventional businesses. For called upon to handle and with the same celerity any one of a score of sudden situations thrust upon the theatreman in the routine of operation, your average merchandiser would consider himself the very devil of a fellow should his endeavors come off half as well.

The comparison is not made to extol the superior qualities of the showman so much as it is to indicate how he goes about it when he has to go. As an instance is cited C. J. Russell, smooth functioning manager of the Opera House, in Bangor, Maine. The details of his adventure in speed on an overnight booking of locally awaited "Top Hat" are set forth on a following page.

While the ability of the theatreman to agitate his brain cells at top tempo on a split second's notice is not regarded in the trade as the rarest of virtues, it is recognized nevertheless and happily as a major talent that distinguishes the equipment of the smart showman.

"It is my firm conviction that aggressive, resourceful, unflagging showmanship will do more to advance the motion picture from a financial angle than any other single factor with the possible exception of quality in production. Even this is futile unless exhibitors get solidly back of fine product with intelligent and consistent showmanship."—H. M. Addison, Division Manager, Loew's Theatres Northeastern Division.

MENTAL HAZARD

Not as watertight as it used to be, but still able to navigate is the old fallacy that after the exploitation juice is squeezed out of the first-runs little tieup nourishment is left for the subsequents. Ample evidence to the contrary is of course plentiful. Theatremen in the subsequents have by their accomplishments effectually riddled this hackneyed alibi still being used and mostly without foundation by others in similar spots.

In this issue is an excellent window arranged by publicist Martin Glazer for the third run of "Crusades" at the Boston Scollay Square. From all appearances the display might well serve as an exploitation for the first and road-show run and as far as the merchant and theatre's patronage were concerned the effect no doubt was the same.

First and subsequent runs are meaningful terms in the machinery of distribution. But managers who allow the latter classification to check their activities are creating for themselves a mental hazard most harmful to the grosses.

Guest of honor at a civic banquet held by managers of the downtown theatres, Honorable Charles Stanton (right), Mayor of Rochester, N. Y., invited the entire party to the Executive Chambers where the formal presentation of the Quigley Silver for November was made to Les Pollock (left) manager, Loew's Rochester, for his winning entry on M-G-M's "Mutiny on the Bounty." Botwick Cooperates On Portland Book Week Executives of the Portland, Me., public library desiring a theatre tiein to help put over local observance of National Book Week, Manager Harry Botwick came to the fore and offered to put on special Saturday morning ten-cent matinee to include feature and cartoons. As the attraction had to be an adaptation of some famous and worthwhile book, "Treasure Island" was selected and presented with great success.

Letters on the showing were sent to every school teacher, who was requested to speak of it to all classes and at assemblies. This was authorized by the Superintendent of Schools. Sunday schools were covered in the same fashion, announcement cards planted and book marks distributed in schools and libraries. The event also was publicized two weeks ahead on the regular library radio program, and churches, college clubs and P.T.A.'s endorsed the project.

Newspapers tied in with lots of publicity and ran a coloring contest, using a two-column scene cut from the picture, prize offered being an autographed copy of the book and signatures of Cooper, Beery and Stone. At the theatre, local high school band was obtained by Botwick to play before the screen show.

Harry reports this as a first-time tiein with the library, the results of which have now made it possible for him to distribute study guides and imprinted book-marks through the librarians.

Fifty dollars was offered for the most "dangerous" smile, truck traveling business arteries in the metropolitan area.

Hookins were made with two stations, one a girl on local amateur hour planted to give impersonation of Bette Davis, girl mentioning picture. On another station's early morning broadcast, tickets were given for prize slogans and telegrams.

Five Santa Clauses visited department stores, hotels, railroad stations, etc., giving as Christmas gifts star photos with theatre copy on reverse. Different windows were planted with female stars in sporting costume and other ensembles and Fifth Avenue store planted beauty shop display ads showing Bette Davis coiffure.

Florists in many spots used large window poster showing Davis posing with flowers for floral plug and also used was the screen atop Broadway building upon which slides were flashed. Reported to have built up interest during run was questioning of patrons on their opinion of the star's performance.

Six-Hour Advance Drive Sells "Hat"

"It sometimes happens and when it does just what would you do to sell your show overnight?" Thus asks Harry Browning, M. & P. Theatres ad chief, in reporting the fast and effective campaign put on by C. J. Russell, Opera House, Bangor, Me., when that manager was notified at five o'clock on a Thursday that he was to play "Top Hat," starting the next day.

At five-thirty Russell had arranged for radio announcements the rest of the evening and continued his campaign to spread the word as rapidly as possible. As a nearby town was slated to show the picture the same night when he received note of the sudden change, Russell centered his immediate drive on getting the information to local folks who were arranging to drive over, so they could spare themselves the trip.

Besides the radio, announcements were made from the stage, slides run at the other two local houses of the circuit, one-sheet cards prepared for the three lobbies. Cashier kept calling phone numbers and head usher was sent to every possible gathering spot where there might be a crowd. Special half-sheets printed locally were posted the next morning.

The entire advance was put across on six hours' notice with gratifying results. The job, said Russell, was not in selling the attraction, as folks knew all about it, but to inform them of the date.

Suggests Stamp Collection For President's Birthday

To the various slants used last year in the celebration of President Roosevelt's birthday on Jan. 30, Dean Hyskell of Fox West Coast suggests theatres gather collection of stamps between now and that date for the benefit of the Warm Springs Foundation, in Georgia.

As the President is a stamp collector, Hyskell's idea is to have patrons bring to the theatre an uncancelled stamp of any denomination from one cent to one dollar. Attendant pastes them in special album. Uncancelled stamps are cashable and Dean suggests a letter to Mr. Roosevelt with the album, saying the cashed-in value of the stamps are local patrons' contribution to the Fund.

HART AND CALDWELL FIRST IN DECEMBER

Reade Theatres Manager Voted Quigley Silver; Bronze Plaque Awarded to Toledo Loew-man

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Thundering up in a blazing finish down the stretch, the 1936 Quigley Awards wound up with the hottest kind of a battle for honors as Ed Hart, of the Strand Theatre, Plainfield, N. J., snapped the tape in the bell lap of this year's Competition just a scant whisker ahead of the field to take down the Quigley December Silver, on MGM's "Mutiny."

And right on Hart's instep with a rush that could not be denied came Wally Caldwell, manager, Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio, to win the December Bronze with a fine and fancy entry on MGM's "Night at the Opera."

It was fast going, and though the two winners finished comfortably in front they finished all out to become the last two theatremen eligible for the 1935 Grand Awards. They fought gamely.

Hart, a 1934 plaque winner, was never in the honors column in 1935 until his December entry brought him home. Caldwell's campaign was his fourth second-year attempt to pull down a plaque and his final effort was sure good enough to land him high honors. That his entries hitherto brought him "Mentions" did not discourage this Round Tabler in his fight for plaque listing.

First Mentions for December are awarded to two other hard-fighting seekers of the Big Prizes. Guy Martin, manager, Colfax, South Bend, Ind., taking his on Fox-20th Century's "Thanks a Million," and Bill Novak, manager, Gaiety, Winnipeg, Can., winning on a subsequent-run of "Broadway Melody."

First-Timers and Repeaters

Fourteen theatremen participated in the December Honorable Mention list awarded for 13 campaigns with Erle Wright, Loew's New England publicist splitting campaign credits with Harry Watts, manager, on the premiere of "Ah, Wilderness," at Loew's Poli, Worcester, Mass.

First-timers and repeaters share the honors and among the latter is an overseas showman, A. L. Caplan, of Fox Films, Hong Kong, China. Five "Honorables" are brand-new and the complete listing of all entitled to the Sheepskin Certificates are shown in column to right.

While preparations are going ahead to select the fortunate winners for the Grand Awards, campaigns already are in the making for entry in the January Competitions. With the Christmas and New Year excitement subsiding, theatremen are girding themselves for the 1936 prizes and the third year of the Quigley Awards promises plenty of action.

Now for the Grand Awards judging to be held some time this month, details of which will be announced shortly. As stated it is hoped to have everything in shape so that late in February or early in March the winners will be carried to Hollywood via TWA for that Big Party.

Here's wishing you all the best of good fortune.

First Mention

Guy Martin, Manager, Publix-Indiana, Colfax Theatre, South Bend, Ind. "Thanks a Million"

THIRD YEAR OF QUIGLEY AWARDS

EDWARD M. FAY
Fay Theatres
Providence, R. I.

Thanks for your invitation to again serve in the Quigley Awards. Count on me for anything I can do to aid this splendid project.

W. R. FERGUSON
Manager of Exploitation
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures

By all means you can count on me as one of the judges on the committee for 1936 for Quigley Awards. In the meantime call me if there is anything I can do to increase the value of this cooperative promotion.

ED FINNEY
Director of Adv. & Pub.
Republic Pictures

I should be very happy to serve as one of the judges on the committee for the Quigley Awards competitions in 1936. This sort of competition is invaluable in promoting both theatre grosses and the managers' personal prestige.

W. A. FINNEY
Western Division Manager
Loew's Theatres

I am in receipt of yours of December 19 and will be very pleased to act as judge on the committee for 1936. Was pleased that some of the managers in this division were listed among the 1935 winners and will encourage them to again participate this year.

JOHN J. FRIEDL
General Manager
Minnesota Amusement Co.

In answer to yours of the 19th, you may count upon me to continue to serve on your Judges' Committee of the Quigley Awards for 1936.

LIONEL H. KEENE
Southern Division Manager
Loew's Theatres

Acknowledging your esteemed inquiry of December 20, thanks lots for the honor and privilege of again serving as Judge on the 1936 Committee for the Quigley Awards Competition.

H. F. KINCEY
North Carolina Theatres
Charlotte, N. C.

You may be assured that I will be very glad indeed to accept your invitation to serve as a judge on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1936.

M. A. LIGHTMAN
Malco Theatres, Inc.
Memphis, Tenn.

Replying to yours of the 19th, if I can be of service to you while I am in New York, it will be a pleasure for me to accept the appointment of one of the judges on your 1936 Committee.

"PROMOTIONS MADE AS A DIRECT RESULT"

" . . . The men in this zone have been most active participants . . . and I have observed that every time a theatre made an entry, business on the attraction so exploited was well above normal. This in itself is the best possible recommendation for the Quigley Awards.

"You may be interested to learn that a number of promotions have been made in this zone as a direct result of the ability shown by some of our managers in the Quigley Competition."

HARRY M. KALMINE
Pittsburgh Zone Manager
Warner Theatres

ARTHUR L. MAYER
Rialto Theatre
New York City

You may indeed count upon me to serve in 1936 upon the Quigley Awards Committee. That these competitions are now in their third successful year of operation is proof enough that they have made a definite place for themselves.

SAMUEL RINZLER
Randforce Circuit
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Will indeed be pleased to serve for I believe that the Quigley Awards are an excellent medium not only to encourage better business but also to bring to the front showmanship of the individual manager.

GORDON S. WHITE
Director Adv. & Pub.
Educational Films Corp.

I have always considered the Quigley Awards to be highly desirable because of the fine way in which they give credit to the better theatre exploitation work, and I shall be glad to serve again on your Committee of Judges for 1936.

A. P. WAXMAN
Advertising Counsel
Gaumont British Pictures

Delighted and honored to serve on the 1936 Committee. The Quigley Awards for showmanship are a constant stimulus and inspiration to us all. It goes without saying that constructive work that reaches the public eye, must inevitably have a constructive effect upon the box office.

DAVID E. WESHNER
Philadelphia Zone Manager
Warner Bros. Theatres

I shall be glad to continue as a member of the Quigley Awards Competition Committee for the year 1936.

SAM BENDHEIM, JR.
Gen. Mgr. Neighborhood Theatres
Richmond, Va.

It seems to me that the competitive spirit of the Quigley Awards puts theatre and advertising managers on their toes to such a degree that they are inspired to create exploitation campaigns and new ideas that might otherwise escape them.

JOHN F. BURHORN
Manager, Gayety
Chicago, Ill.

I only contributed one entry during 1935. The results were very gratifying at the boxoffice. I personally value my sheepskin very highly. I not only was glad to get it, but I feel it was a great experience that should do some good in the future, not only for myself but for the house staff as well, they shared with me in the satisfaction of having done something that met with recognition. You will hear from us again in 1936.

WALTER F. DAVIS
Manager, Capitol
Regina, Sask., Can.

Competition is the life-blood of success. Any theatre manager than can win recognition of the Quigley Awards certainly wins recognition with his own organization. It is an achievement every manager should strive for.

HAL GRADY
Manager, Palace
Lubbock, Texas

I think that these contests are GREAT! There is no doubt in my mind but that these contests have done more to increase grosses than any other one factor.

As to whether or not the winning of one of the plaques increases the prestige of the winner; it unquestionably DOES . . . plenty! I feel sure that the organizations who have had managers who were winners will give these men first consideration when the better poositions are open.

BEST GENERAL IDEA PROFERRED IN 1936

"Quigley Competitions have our entire staff exploitation minded. Reaction is keenly felt by everyone from ushers up. They eagerly suggest new gags, stunts and ideas . . . effect of all this is certain to have a healthy box-office reaction and keeps the service staff alert.

It was the best general idea proffered in 1935 by a trade paper. By all means keep it up."

Wally Caldwell,
Manager, Loew's Valentine,
Toledo, Ohio.

P. D. EGAN
Manager, Palace

I think the Quigley Awards help to instil "punch and pep" into a manager. You know its a grand and glorious feeling even to get Honorable Mention. Intend keeping at it in 1936.

TED EMERSON
Manager, Omaha
Omaha, Neb.

No doubt about it being a great box office stimulant. Recognition of hard efforts anytime cannot but help spur that party on to even greater efforts. Far too often our meager achievements go unrewarded and unnoticed which naturally dampens our spirit. The Quigley Awards are helpful in bringing this recognition.

FRED L. FRECHETTE
Manager, Strand
Holyoke, Mass.

Practically all of us are creatures of incentive. The Quigley Award Competition is one and a good one. There should be more. Without a single doubt boxoffice grosses and exploitation efforts are stimulated thereby.

So far have received no advancement in position, nor in wages, but prestige is obviously greatly enhanced. More power to you in 1936.

ARNOLD N. GATES
Manager, Loew's Gates
Cleveland, Ohio

The Quigley Awards Competition is unquestionably a marvelous thing for the manager. The many promotions as a result of these Awards is ample proof of that fact. The effort on the part of all those participating affords the industry the kind of "push" that is needed to realize the highest possible results at the box office. I congratulate your publication on the Awards idea.

INCREASED PRESTIGE WITH EMPLOYERS

"Winning the Quigley Awards and Plaques have certainly increased my prestige with my employers. They have requested information of campaigns for other of their theatres. There is also increased prestige for making Plainfield more important theatrically, plus important contacts with the Governor and state and city officials for the plaque presentation which have proven of benefit."

E. M. Hart
City Manager, Reade Theatres
Plainfield, N. J.

"CANNOT FAIL TO ADD ZEST AND INSPIRATION"

" . . . It was gratifying to see how enthusiastically our managers and publicity men responded to the Quigley Competitions in 1935. While I feel that our Loew-men do their best at all times, your 'contests' cannot fail to add zest and inspiration to the campaigns. Your efforts to stimulate showmanship are very much worthwhile.

"Kind regards and may 1936 bring you many Awards and Rewards."

J. R. Vogel
General Theatre Executive
Loew's Theatres

MELVIN R. GOLD
Manager, Calumet
Hammond, Ind.

My "Honorable Mention" in September has certainly enhanced my prestige inasmuch as it is the first in our circuit.

MORT GOODMAN
Publicity Department
Warner Cleveland Zone

Being honored in your Quigley Awards has proved an inspiration to me. Prior to receiving mention, it seemed that I strived extra hard, always in anticipation of the possibility of gaining recognition through the pages of the Motion Picture Herald.

As we enter a New Year I look forward to only one thing—the highest honor—a Quigley Award.

S. S. HOLLAND
Gen. Mgr. Elco Theatres
Elkhart, Ind.

There can be no doubt in anyone's mind as to the value of the Quigley Awards toward boxoffice stimulation. The increased activity along advertising and exploitation lines coupled with the encouragement of theatre and advertising men by the leaders of circuit and individual operations should be sufficient evidence of the inestimable value of this effort to the industry as a whole.

HOMER H. HARMAN
Pub. Dir., Shubert-Rialto
St. Louis, Mo.

In my opinion, the Quigley Competition for awards on the most outstanding campaigns, is certainly a good medium for stimulating boxoffice grosses and the efforts of the exploitation men in the field. I have been fortunate enough to receive an Honorable Mention in these competitions, which I am indeed more than proud to display in my office.

EARLE M. HOLDEN
Manager, Capitol
Atlanta, Ga.

Competition in any field of endeavor reaps benefits in increased business, stimulates new ideas in promotion and the Quigley Awards competition is no exception to this rule.

G. I. HUNTER
Manager, Peoples
Chanute, Kan.

I think the Quigley Awards are fine, naturally all managers, especially those working for large organizations, want to advance themselves and the only way possible to do this is to prove that you have something on the ball. Personally I would prize a Quigley Plaque. Competition is always a stimulant, and it has been proven that we all get stale in our advertising and a stimulant is an absolute necessity.

R. E. KNIGHT
Manager Fairmount
Fairmount, West Va.

Quigley Awards are an incentive to any theatre manager. Do they help at the boxoffice? That's a funny question. How could it be otherwise?

SEYMOUR L. MORRIS
Manager, Schine's Colonia
Norwich, N. Y.

I conscientiously believe that the spirit of competition created by the Quigley Awards when it is earnestly felt by the men in the field, reflects advantageously upon the boxoffice grosses. It makes one exert just that much more effort to try and earn the signal honor of receiving the highest possible award. It is this type of competition that should pave the way for a manager's success.

CHARLES SCHLAIFER
Adv. Mgr. TriStates Theatres
Omaha, Neb.

Although winning a prize in the Quigley Competitions has not materially helped me. . . . I feel that the idea serves a definite purpose in the field of showmanship in advertising . . which is after all the lifeblood of the industry.

LEONARD C. WORLEY
City Manager, Great States
Peoria, Ill.

I feel that the Quigley Awards are certainly of great value to the theatre manager. The box office grosses are stimulated by the exploitation efforts put forth. The Quigley Mention which I received has given me a great deal of satisfaction and I am sure my superiors are glad to know that my efforts have been recognized.

Doc Invites Patrons To Count the Bees

The folks in Canton, Ohio, with quick eyes and a little time to spare were invited by Doc Elliott, of the Alhambra, to count the number of bees in a special beehive planted in prominent store window (see photo). Those turning in near guesses received guest tickets to "Keeper of the Bees."

As guessing blanks were obtainable only through the store's salesgirls with deposit box placed in rear of the store, merchant received a good break in return for the tie-in. Elliott reports nearly 2,000 entries turned in.

Typewriter Company Installs Girls and Machines in Lobby

For "The Last Outpost" engagement at the Capitol Theatre in Binghamton, N. Y., Fred Perry tied up local typewriter company which installed attractive girls wearing helmets at machines in lobby (see photo). Messages were typed out in new mimeograph process detailing highlights of picture and were distributed to patrons.

RANDFORCE CIRCUIT DOINGS

What Some of the Winners Did To Win Prizes in Pre-Holiday Contest; 12 Managers Honored

Results in the recently completed pre-Christmas Randforce Theatres drive for business are announced, twelve managers in the Brooklyn, N. Y., circuit taking down the prizes offered by Sam Rinzler and Louis Frisch, president and vice-president, respectively.

The contest, divided into two divisions, "results" and "efforts," started on Nov. 10 and finished Dec. 21, Herman Semel, Marlboro, landing top money in the "results" classification and Paul Binstock, Republic, awarded first prize in the "efforts" campaign.

Following Semel were Edward Sacks, Lefferts; Julius Pincus, Maspeth; Murray Reisner, Claridge, and Sam Handler of the Waldorf, finishing in the order named. And behind Binstock, listed similarly, were Don Williams, Commodore; Murray Alper, Alba; Charles Rind, Oasis; Harold Gabriel, Glenwood, and Sam Fried of the Parthenon.

Paramount consideration was given the percentage of expense of operation in each theatre and the prizes were shared 75 per cent by the manager and 25 per cent to the assistant. Campaigns were judged by Messrs. Rinzler and Frisch, Harold Rinzler, assistant to the general manager, and the division managers.

Winner Organizes Trade Board

There being no merchants' association in the area of the theatre, Manager Semel and assistant, Sidney Grill, organized a business Board of Trade for the occasion with a meeting held at the Marlboro to put on a merchandising campaign to stimulate general Christmas business. The Theatre men first promoted a special issue newspaper, front page carrying news, inside pages theatre publicity and back page to merchants' ads.

Other ideas used were a lucky number angle held one night each week during the drive and distribution of gift coupons at the theatre and also with purchases at the stores. No prize nor merchants' ad was displayed in the lobby, this being covered with trailer and lobby copy of a general nature on the new Board of Trade.

Heralds were planted house-to-house, post cards plugging special Christmas children's matinee used, with men in Santa Claus costumes hired by the association distributing all throwaway material. Placards and banners for windows and delivery trucks were posted liberally, all the above advertising carrying prominent mention of theatre, pictures and playdates.

Toys and candy contributed by participating merchants were given at the kids' special show and in addition Semmel worked out individual campaigns on his current pictures shown during the drive. Semmel also reports the Board of Trade receiving sufficient assistance from the stores to be continued for other neighborhood benefits during the new year.

Binstock's Activities Many

Listed in the entry of Manager Binstock, Republic Theatre, were some 67 activities, the results of which won him the first "efforts" prize. Among these was a six-foot microphone on "Big Broadcast" for lobby and also used as a street bally atop an auto. For "Dr. Socrates," Binstock had an atmospheric lobby with nurse in uniform attending.

Several hundred entries in an essay contest on "What My Father Means to Me" aided the showing on "Shipmates," school principals cooperating on this. For the same date, unit of Junior Cadets, special kid blotters and heralds were also found helpful.

Atmospheric lobby on "She Married Her Boss" was another topper in Binstocks drive, with local girl resembling Colbert at desk, with phone, typewriter, etc., added to carry out the general idea.

Other Winners' Highlights

Manager Ed Sachs, second prize winner in the "results" drive, topped his entry with a series of toy matinees when for eight weeks local merchant was promoted for the gifts. Animal crackers were obtained for children giveaways on "O'Shaughnessy's Boy" and stilt walker street bally used on same date.

On "Shipmates" Sachs paraded the local American Legion Junior Band, sold space on exchange heralds to put for all used during the period of the contest, gave away turkeys and put on a weekly gift night. Atmospheric displays and elaborate merchants' windows were included on various dates.

Cooperation of local library branch on essay contests, tiein with Junior Naval Militia on "Shipmates" and smash lobby on "Big Broadcast" were featured in Manager Pincus' campaigns at the Maspeth. While Manager Gabriel at the Glenwood paraded a 50-piece band on various dates and promoted many toys for a series of weekly matinees, and among Manager Rind's efforts at the Oasis were tieups made with local merchants, street stunts and lobbies.

The Randforce Amusement Corp. operates 44 theatres in Brooklyn and Queens with the Home Office in the Savoy Theatre building.

YOU ARE INVITED TO JOIN UP

HOWARD SUMNER HUNT
is the assistant manager of the Strand Theatre, Clinton, Ia., working for Harold D. Barnes who recommends him for membership. Howard has been in the business six years, and we hope that between him and Mr. Barnes we'll be hearing things from Clinton.

manages the Sooner and University Theatres out in Norman, Okla., a town which has been represented in our pages before and one which we hope shall be heard from more frequently now that Lewis is one of us. Can we depend on you? We'd like to know what you are doing, you know.

manages the Palace Theatre in Johnston City, Ill., and since we have no members corresponding with us from your town, it will remain for you to assume the burden for the rest of the folks there and let us have reports of your theatre activities. Can we depend on you, Ed?

THOMAS K. REEVES
assistant at the Cathaum-Nittany Theatre, State College, Pa., comes well recommended by his boss, J. H. Robertson. Tom worked a year as usher, doorman and then advanced to his present job. With the nice things we hear about you, you should be sending along interesting theatre reports.

manages the Keith Theatre up in Portland, Maine the first member we've had from that house, so on your broad shoulders rests the responsibility of a little competition between you and the other theatres in your city that are active contributors to our pages. Your moral obligation to the Club is such that you can't let us down, so let's hear from you.

H. W. BLACKSTONE
manages the Regent Theatre in Arlington, Mass. and is fairly new to showbusiness. The E. M. Loew Circuit is the only outfit he has been with having started with them as doorman at the National in Boston, and assistant manager under supervision of Louis Richmond. Harry was born in Boston and attended the Northeastern University and is a Sigma Kappa Psi and Sigma Omega Psi man.

managing the Roxy Theatre in De Graff, Ohio certainly ought to be showminded, he tells us his father, grandfather and great-grandfather were all "great showmen and it's in the blood." Louie started with Loew's at the State in Cleveland as usher and continued there rising gradually until he was advertising and publicity manager. He now operates his own theatre with his brother Victor, also a member, and says his only problem at present is that he can't handle the crowds due to limited seating capacity, and so are enlarging the house.

IT'S SANTY CLAUS. And in the person (of course you guessed it) of Louis Charninsky, the Dallas Dynamo, who unanimously was chosen to don the red velvet and whiskers at the annual Interstate Circuit Christmas celebration and party Louie put on for the kids at the Capitol Theatre.

DENNIS C. WALLS
is no stranger to these pages having contributed frequently and won an Honorable Mention in the Quigley Awards. Dennis is now general manager of the New Oxford Theatre in Manchester, England, he was also connected with Associated British Cinemas, Ltd. and his present connection, J. F. Emery Film Circuit, Ltd. Walls started as assistant manager of the Kings' Bristol in 1932 later promoted to manager there and then transferred to the Casino in Manchester.

Absolutely No Dues or Fees!

is managing the New Yorker Theatre, N. Y. C. for Max Cohen and Arthur J. Siegel. Previous experience was doorman at the Sam Harris Theatre here for three months, then being promoted to assistant and another three months found him managing that house. Cy was later switched to the Selwyn, then to the Prospect in the Bronx and remained there until his present assignment.

is at the Columbus Theatre, New York City managing that house for Consolidated Amusement Enterprises. Aaron is no stranger to us and we are hopeful that he will let us know how he puts his house over for there are plenty of members who would be interested in reading about it.

is out in Laurel, Miss. managing the Jean Theatre. Having started in showbusiness as an operator, Charlie later managed road shows in C. C. C. camps and schools, and says he has held positions in every branch of our industry. With your background there ought to be plenty you can tell us about and we shall look forward to word from you.

manages the Princess Theatre in Raduille, Sask, Canada and while the membership boasts of plenty of contributors from Saskkatchewan, you're the first to join from your city so it shall be encumbent on you to keep us informed as to what's what up your way. Can we depend on you?

is managing the Strand Theatre in Suffern, N. Y. having started at that house as assistant and later elevated to his present job. Ted seems to be very active having been a special deputy sheriff of Rockland County, a member of the Merchants Association, Volunteer Hose company No. 1, and Rockland County Police Benevolent Association. With those connections you certainly ought to be able to make plenty of tieups for the theatre, right?

is Bixby, Okla, manages the Harmony Theatre and says he has been in showbusiness in the good old days when two one sheets and a set of photographs was all the paper needed by anyone. Art has worked for plenty of houses in Oklahoma in every capacity from as he puts it "janitor to chief operator of three houses, including advertising manager, sign artist, usher doorman and what have you."

in Rochester, N. Y. is the assistant manager at the Schine Dixie Theatre. Rochester has been well represented in our pages, Tony, but not from the Dixie, so how about getting busy and keeping us posted on how you put your shows on at the house?

personalities

manager of the Premier, Newburyport, Mass., is also handling the reopened Strand.

is managing the North Shore, Boston, Mass. with J. A. O'DONNELL going to the Maine in Waterville, Maine and TOM WALL to the Paramount in Needham, Mass.

formerly at the Mayfair in Miami, Fla., is now managing the new Lincoln at Miami Beach, with STANLEY STERN, formerly of the Capitol, assisting him, and MARK CHARTRAND succeeds him.

has purchased the Rex Theatre in Sprague, Wash.

is managing WILLIAM SCHULTE'S new Vandale Theatre in Detroit, Mich.

has resigned as manager of the Rialto in Boston to conduct a course in motion picture projection at the M.I.T.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

INCREASES EFFICIENCY

SAVES MONEY

The G-E Copper Oxide Rectifier for Motion Picture Projection Service meets all requirements of the Suprex arc. It employs a proven principle of rectification. Three-phase, full-wave rectification delivers smooth, uniform direct current. Secondary taps permit a wide range of adjustments in arc-voltage and current. A patented blower system maintains Copper Oxide Unit at approximately room temperature. The welded-steel casing is durable, compact, attractive.

This G-E Copper Oxide Rectifier For Projection Service is available in two standard sizes: 40-50 amperes for the 6-7 mm trim; and 50-65 amperes for the 6.5-8 mm trim, for operation on 230 volts, 3-phase, 60 cycles. (Other ratings built to order.)

There are no maintenance nor replacement costs. The first cost of a G-E Rectifier Unit is the only cost. Its high efficiency saves from 5 to 10 cents per hour in cost of current. The G-E Copper Oxide Rectifier for Projection Service pays for itself quickly . . . and earns money for you. Mail coupon for full details.

"Structural Modernism" in the Front of a New British Theatre

■ More often in the United States, the theatre front, essentially modern though it may be, tends to retain fairly close identification with long established architectural forms. Any severity is likely to recall the classical. Flamboyance is usually achieved by the addition of ornament and by illumination. Materials, of course, commonly include the new metals, glass and phenolics. Seldom in America, however, is the modern effect of a theatre facade attained through sheer structural patterns to the extent exemplified in the front of this new British theatre, the Dominion in Southall, a district in outer London. Yet there doubtless are American localities—metropolitan communities where "smartness" and departure from the usual is especially called for, perhaps for competitive reasons—to which a modern treatment as forthright as that of the Dominion is adaptable. Executed in marble-terrazzo, the design consists in a bilateral massing of rounded structures receding from a tower-like central element composed of five vertical panels. Windows, the panes set horizontally in metal bars, follow the contours of the rounded sections. Announcement boards for future attractions are placed against panels which terminate the recession of the rounded sections. The marquee extends across five sets of entrance doors, which lead into a box office vestibule. F. E. Bromige was the architect.

VOLUME 122 JANUARY 11, 1936 NUMBER TWO

Seek Cheaper Cooling By Use of Well Water

THIS SUMMER will see extensive use of well water, naturally cold and eliminating mechanical refrigeration, if efforts currently reported from various sections of the country produce a sufficient number of wells. Development of this method of cooling has taken on the aspects of a movement, involving large circuits and independent houses alike.

Suitable sources of cold water are being sought for between thirty and forty theatres in the Northwest, some of them affiliated with Paramount. In projecting air-conditioning plans for thirty theatres, Warner Theatres may include well water cooling in some of the houses. Operators of nearly fifty theatres in Westchester County, bordering New York City, are seeking locations for wells for the same purpose. Clarence B. Kaimann's plans for a new 700-seat theatre in St. Louis call for the use of well water for cooling, and the method has reached the discussion stage elsewhere.

Diesel Considered As Source of Power

PLANS FOR THE installation of Diesel (crude oil burning) engines for the operation of electrical generators to supply electrical power, are being mapped by RKO engineers for the theatres of this circuit. If carried out for all of the houses, the installations would form the largest application of the Diesel to the powering of theatres yet attempted.

The RKO announcement follows several months of discussion of Diesels by theatre groups. The installation of electrical power generating plants powered by Diesels have engaged the attention of a number of exhibitor associations since last summer. Installations so far have been isolated and essentially experimental.

It is the electrical power requirements of large air-conditioning equipment that have brought the Diesel into serious consideration for the theatre. Engineers point out, however, that such installations would not be warranted in theatres requiring less than 500 h.p. on the air-conditioning equipment alone. The initial equipment and installation cost for an installation of this kind is stated to be in the neighborhood of $16,000.

However impracticable Diesel installations may be where the demand load is merely moderate or where power rates are relatively low, it is pointed out that even in such favorable situations they can be threatened in controversies with utilities over charges and in many instances this might prove effective in efforts to obtain reductions and adjustments.

[The Diesel engine and its application to theatre power plants is the subject of an article by J. T. Knight, Jr., leading the department Equipment and Operation in this issue.—THE EDITOR.]

SELLING THE THEATRE

An Editorial Note

IS only the picture to be sold? What of the theatre itself, which must operate just the same, whether the picture is good, bad or indifferent?

Into the theatre goes much money for the operation of the mechanisms by which the picture is transformed into a performance. There are also many provisions for the comfort and safety of patrons. All represent service, and that is something which is most immediately related to the theatre itself, and to its proprietor.

The extraordinary Pix theatre, which is described and pictured elsewhere in this issue, uses a new model Ashcraft Suprex projection lamp. In one of the printed programs was this paragraph:

"In answer to the many compliments on the quality of Pix Technicolor projection, may we explain that the natural color values are made possible by a recently developed high-intensity arc lamp with which Pix is equipped. The obsolete low-intensity lamps in most theatres favor only the red-orange side of the spectrum."

Patrons of the Pix are now aware of what would seem to be quite a special arrangement for them.

There are many engines and gadgets in today's motion picture theatre which, in their way, have a place among the wonders of modern science and engineering. They not only provide the performance and contribute to comfort. They are interesting in themselves. There are occasions when they may well be brought out of concealment.

Plan State Tests for Projectionists

A BILL REQUIRING all motion picture projectionists to pass an examination before a State board is expected to be placed before the Louisiana legislature. The proposal is said to have the backing, if not the sponsorship, of labor unions in New Orleans. Members of the board would be appointed by the governor.

Theatre owners generally, but particularly those in the smaller localities, are certain to fight the bill, claiming that it is a political device to raise revenue and a trick designed to raise wage scales.

Only a few States examine projectionists, notably Massachusetts and Pennsylvania.

Sign Services Under A Voluntary Code

ELECTRIC SIGN manufacturing and servicing in the New York area is now operating under a code of fair practices patterned after that set up for this industry under the NRA, and it is working out successfully, according to Alfred Graze, president of the Electric Sign Association of New York. Continued success of the arrangement is said in the industry to point toward the adoption of similar codes in other important centers.

Under the code, which is administered by the association officials with R. V. Somerville as "impartial chairman," all union labor works a total of 35 hours a week of five days. In commenting on its adoption, Signs of the Times, leading journal of the industry, commented editorially:

"In recalling more than a generation of effort to organize the sign industry for the purpose of establishing standards of practice to assure profitable operation with limited success and many failures both nation-

Life must be lived, cares and fears escaped from—so Nanking, capital of China, has been given this new motion picture theatre. Called the Capitol, it is the city's finest, having facilities comparable to those of large American houses. Nanking newspapers gave it much space, describing it proudly—and sometimes amusingly, as in a reference to the air-conditioning equipment. This consists in York Freon compressor, shell-and-tube condensers, spray apparatus, motors, etc., which a Chinese writer found "very complicated and mysterious." The majority of pictures shown are in English, and a smaller screen placed beneath the performance screen shows translations of the dialogue.

ally and locally, the Electric Sign Association of New York has assumed a commendable responsibility in testing the practicability of a voluntary code."

Disorder in the electric sign industry nationally has been recognized for some time, with price-slashing and territorial infringements rampant. These practices end under the code in the New York area, and it is considered highly possible that similar regulation may be effected nationally under the supervision of the Federal Trade Commission.

A Novel Phone Service System

IN STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN, the RI circuit has worked out, in co-operation with the telephone company, a special method whereby tickets for any of the nine theatres in the circuit, or information concerning them, may be obtained by patrons through the magic of a single word. The word is "Ringbio," spoken to the central operator. A lamp lights up at the "Ringbio" central exchange to correspond with each telephone line, and upon pressing a button the circuit operator gets the customer immediately, without delay at either end.

The facility with which this system works is due to the names of the theatres of this circuit. The first two letters of each are R and I—Riviera, Rialto, Rivoli, Ritz, etc. The system was developed by Odd Biornstad, managing director of the circuit.

The patron may order tickets by this method for any performance, and they are at the proper box office when he arrives. When he calls "Ringbio," as described above, a girl at the circuit central office takes down the order for tickets on a ticket stub, the name of the customer and the time of the performance the customer wishes to attend. The telephone operator then gives the customer the corresponding number of the stub and telephones the same information over to the corresponding theatre, so that the customer may identify himself and get his tickets for the desired location and time by merely mentioning the number of his "Kontroll" stub.

The "Kontroll" stubs come in different colors denoting different times of performances, which difference is also noted by the numbers used on the "Kontroll" stubs—for instance, from Nos. 1 to 350, 7:15 p.m. performance; from Nos. 351 to 650, 9:15 p.m. performance, and so on.

The operator also has immediate access to the cashiers of the nine theatres, and when a customer wants some special information about the performance, the operator merely presses another button contacting any of the cashiers, obtaining the information while the customer is waiting on the trunkline.

A telephone girl is assigned to collect the "Kontroll" stubs, assert them and then telephone the orders into the various theatres.

Through advertising, Stockholm theatregoers have learned the advantages of the magic word "Ringbio." Competitors, however, don't care for it.

May Turn Many Banks Into Theatres

IF PRESENT plans go through there will be numerous new theatres opened in Chicago during the coming year. The renovation of many of the seventy-odd bank buildings which have been unoccupied since they were closed during the depression, is being considered.

This renovating would be in the form of making the bank offices into theatres. The buildings for the most part are modern structures and could easily be converted into houses of from 500 to 1,000 seats. The greatest advantage of all is the ideal corner locations most of them have.

Charles Sedell, real estate and theatre broker, has leased a number of these locations, planning to convert them into modern theatres. Several other concerns, it is understood, are considering the same idea, and it is not improbable that from thirty to fifty new theatres may result from the conversion of these former financial marts.

National Income Up 10% in 1935

THE NATIONAL income distributed during 1935 was 10 per cent greater than in 1934, when it amounted to $50,000,000, it is declared in a statement issued by Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper, tracing economic gains made during the year. These gains, which he associated with a "broadening of the recovery process," are further referred to as a basis for "further encouraging economic gains in 1936."

The rise in the amount of total income actually produced in 1935 was even larger than the amount indicated by the estimated 10 per cent advance, the statement points out. The increase in income is stated to have been widely diffused.

The Pix: An Experiment in Theatre Planning and Operation

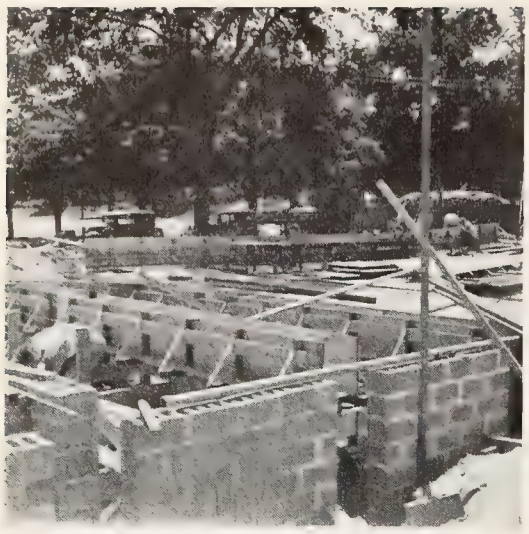
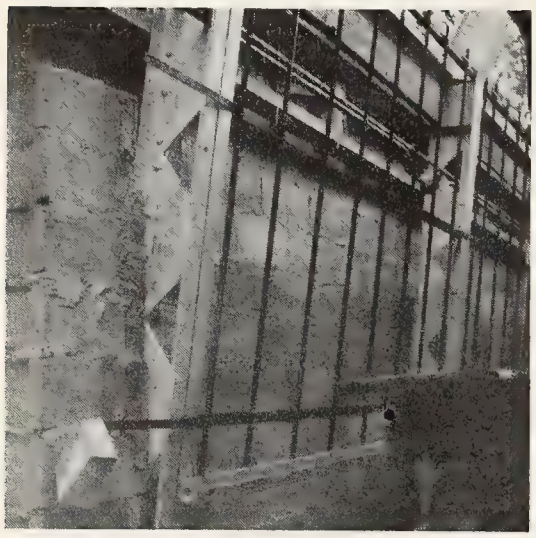
● Describing the first of a proposed group of small houses conceived to provide the best of motion picture exhibition at a minimum cost of operation

THE PIX THEATRE, a tiny little playhouse of the motion picture seating barely 300, is one of the most interesting theatres of recent years. It may be one of the most significant—only time can determine that.



It is interesting not only for itself but for the operating idea that it represents, which was discussed in these pages to some length last summer when plans for this, the first theatre of what is projected as an expanding group, were finally completed and a site determined upon in White Plains, a suburb of New York. Suffice it to say here that the owners, Pix Theatres, Inc., of which John S. Clarke, Jr., is the head, have attempted to create a theatre, in plan and construction (employing so far as possible pre-fabrication) that will permit operation at an extremely low overhead, entail but a small investment at a quick rate of write-off, yet provide finest exhibition facilities.

The architects were Bianculli & Ghiani, with Ben Schlanger as associate. The auditorium floor has a modification of the latter's reversed slope.



Construction of the Pix is of a very special type. The true walls are very low, the roof rising above them, on piers, at a point only 3 feet from the ground. A false wall extends 6 feet above this point. The concrete floor is laid on transverse abutments—the only excavation is at the rear, for the accommodation of air-conditioning equipment.

In the construction, insulation has been carried to an extreme. The true wall previously referred to consists (proceeding from outside to inside) in two layers of smooth stucco (which forms the external surface), 8 inches of concrete, 4 inches of dead air, 6 inches of rock wool, a shallow layer of steel, 1½ inches of Thermax, and another shallow layer of steel.

Similarly the roof, which, so far as the interior is concerned, forms both an upper wall and ceiling. The inside surface is of acoustic plaster, which is painted in water colors from a deep to a light peach, in gradient tones deepening from top to bottom. Behind the acoustic plaster is a brown plaster, then a scratch plaster, then lathing, next a 6-inch layer of rock wool, then 4 inches of dead air, and Robertson roofing, which is made up of steel flanked by asphalt and asbestos, corrugated and given a ceramic finish.

The overall width is 35 feet, and the depth is 95 feet. The front is white stucco, unrelieved except for the door indentations and the sign work. The eccentric form of the front section is due to the adoption of strictly functional design—that is, the architecture observes only the space requirements of the interior. This forward section houses the box office, lobby, manager's office, toilet rooms, mezzanine lobby and the projection room. The remainder of the building is devoted almost entirely to the auditorium and screen platform. The auditorium is without decorative treatment, except for the ceiling effect noted above. The only other noteworthy treatment related to decoration is obtained by means of illumination.

LIGHTING

Auditorium walls are of plaster, without decoration. The ceiling, which follows the arc of the roof in six planes, is also of plaster. The only decorative effects are derived from a lighting trough at the juncture of the two central ceiling planes, the trough running the length of the auditorium, and from three bracket luminous elements on each side wall. Both trough and bracket sources will be equipped with two circuits, one for low wattage lamps (lighted during performances) and one for high wattages.

Cutting the two forward corners of the auditorium are metallic panels stepped in three vertical planes and painted a dark neutral color. These panels flank the screen platform, which provide for a screen approximately 12 feet wide.

AIR-CONDITIONING

The screen platform is located over the only excavated portion. This excavated area houses the heating and cooling plants. The system provides for complete air-conditioning with circulation of either heated or mechanically refrigerated air under automatic control. The air intake is at the upper part of the rear wall, and after being washed, heated or cooled, is passed, under heavy pressure, to grilles located at near the ceiling on either side of the forward auditorium wall. Blown into the auditorium, the fresh air settles to the breathing zone and is drawn off at the rear of the auditorium at the floor line (and also through auxiliary exhausts on either side of the screen platform).

SEATING

Seating is arranged in a single bank of 14 chairs to the row. Chairs are of special design by the American Seating Company, having a spring back and full-floating spring edge seat. They are upholstered in coral mohair. Chairs are 22 inches wide, with spacing between rows 34 inches.

Seating occupies all but a minor portion of the main section. A shallow traffic lane runs behind the last row of chairs, leading to the aisles, one on each side, and to the men's and women's toilet rooms, which adjoin each other at the rear of the left aisle. A standee rail divides this traffic lane from the seating area.

In connection with the seating there is an indicator arrangement (Bilmarjac system) to guide patrons to empty seats by means of small subdued "jeweled" lights at each end seat. Each seat is equipped with a switch, and when there is no pressure from an occupant, its corresponding light at the aisle seat is lighted. There is a light for each seat in the row, facing the entrance.

The screen sets back in an inset in the front wall, the inset being 6 feet deep and about 6 feet wider at the bottom than is the screen itself. This inset flares outward in a graceful, rather flat curve until its sides contact the ceiling. From the outer edges of this inset rather dull colored red draperies are brought inward to meet the outer edges of the narrow black border surrounding the screen image.

Back of the screen is a 27-inch loudspeaker fixed in a Masonite baffleboard that has 144 square feet of area. This board is damped on its rear side by a layer of Ozite. The general effect of all this is to provide the illusion of sound coming from the entire screen and not from any one spot thereon, concerning which we would not care to comment at this time, except to say that certainly the sound effect in this little theatre leaves little to be desired.

The effect in this auditorium, due to illumination arrangements, is that screen light reflected from the walls supplies practically all the illumination required, therefore there is no graying of the blacks and shadows of the picture by reason of extraneous light falling upon them.

Let us now examine the projection quarters. The upper part of the rear 12 feet of the building is devoted to projection except for a space set aside for a hostess and cashier to don their uniforms. Mounting a narrow iron stair we are in a space 12 feet deep by the full width of the theatre, in the center of which is a standard asbestos projection room 10x12 feet, with an 8-foot ceiling, on which latter is mounted the vent fan and a bank of dimmers, the handles of which extend, through narrow slots, down into the projection room where they are in convenient location for manipulation.

To the right, facing the screen, is space for film cabinet, rewinder table, steel shelving, a steel storage cabinet and steel lockers for the projectionists' clothing. Back of the asbestos room is an alley way 2 feet wide leading to the girls' dressing room. Above this alley is mounted a Twin-50 Forest copper oxide current rectifier.

There are two Simplex projectors equipped with Ashcraft Suprex lamps. The sound equipment is RCA.

Paul M. Harris is chief projectionist, assisted by Albert Basso, Paul Korn and Samuel Weinberg, all of Motion Picture Projectionists Local Union No. 650, IATSE & MPMO.

Theatre management for Pix Theatres is in charge of E. S. C. Coppock. His assistant at this first theatre is L. D. MacGonigal.

Law for the Theatre Operator in Recent Decisions of the Higher Courts

BY LEO T. PARKER

● Describing and analyzing in non-legal terms important cases selected for their reference to legal matters of interest in theatre operation

CONSIDERABLE controversy has arisen from time to time as to whether a sub-tenant who pays rent to the original tenant may be sued by the property owner and compelled to pay rent, although he has paid the rental to the original tenant.

Another legal question frequently presented is: Is a lease contract valid if it is made by a sub-tenant, without consent of the property owner, where the lease contract that the tenant shall not sublease without consent of the property owner?

When answering these questions, it is well to remember that any and all lease contract provisions or clauses which are in favor of the landlord may, if he desires, be cancelled or rendered void at any time. These points of the law were discussed in the late case of South, Inc. v. Joel (Atlanta, 177 S. E. 525).

CASE

In this case the testimony showed that the owner of property leased it under a lease contract which specified that the tenant could not sub-lease the property without written consent of the landlord. Subsequently, and without consent of the landlord the tenant leased the property to a corporation. Legal controversy arose over the payment of the rentals and the landlord sued the corporation for the rental due from the original tenant.

It was contended by the corporation that it was not liable because it had paid rental to the original tenant and, also, because the latter had leased the property to the corporation without the written consent of the landlord. Notwithstanding these arguments the higher court held the corporation liable to the landlord for payment of the rent, and said:

DECISION

"Where one other than the lessee (original tenant is found in possession of the leased premises, a presumption arises that he holds under an assignment of the lease, more particularly where he is shown to be in under the tenant. . . . An assignee (corporation) of a lease, when sued for rent, cannot set up in defense that the assignment was made without the written assent of the lessor (property owner) contrary to the terms of the lease, since such provision in the lease, being for the benefit of the lessor (landlord) may be waived by him."

EQUIPMENT REMOVAL FROM LEASED THEATRE

THE RULE is well established that an unauthorized use of personal property by one who has a limited right to its possession may constitute conversion. And anyone who is guilty of conversion is liable to the owner for the full value of the converted property.

Also, it is important to know that a person who leases a theatre building, with its complete furnishings, cannot legally and without liability remove and use the furnishings or any part thereof in another theatre building.

CASE

For example, in E. J. Caron Enterprises v. State Operation Company (Concord, N. H., 179 Atl. 665), it was shown that the owner of a theatre building leased it to an amusement company. The lease contract provided that the company leased the premises known as the Vitaphone theatre with the appurtenances, and also the furniture, equipment and other articles of personal property used in connection with the operation and maintenance of the theatre.

The company operated the theatre for about two months, then closed it and later removed from the building to another of its theatres, the furnishings, including two projectors, a motor-generator, an automatic ticket-selling machine, 500 electric light bulbs, carpets valued at approximately $1,400, the stage curtain, rugs, mats, etc. All this equipment, totaling over $9,000 in cost, was purchased by the owner of the building for this particular theatre. Much of it was affixed in greater or less degree to the building, and much of it was specially made with a view of fitting out this theatre building.

After using the above mentioned articles in other theatres for a long period of time, the company moved them again into the Vitaphone theatre. The owner of the building sued the company, whose counsel contended that it had a right to use the various articles either in the theatre it had leased or in other theatre buildings, because it had closed down the Vitaphone theatre. However, it is interesting to know that the higher court held the amusement company liable, and said:

DECISION

"The fact that the property in question, though used only in connection with the leased theatre, would be greatly reduced in value by the end of the term, does not mean that the plaintiff has suffered no damage. Removing the property, adjusting it to the requirements of the new theatres, and restoring it to the demised premises before the expiration of the lease must of necessity result in greater wear and tear. . . . Consequently the measure of damages is the value of the property at the time of the conversion with interest to the date of judgment."

ACTS CONSTITUTING A LEGAL EVICTION

A TENANT is relieved from paying rent on a lease contract if the landlord performs any act which may be construed to mean that the tenant has been actually or constructively evicted from the leased premises. Various courts have held that whether the acts of the landlord constitute a constructive eviction of the tenant must be determined from all the facts and circumstances surrounding the particular case.

CASE

For example, in Kimball v. Lincoln Theatre Corporation (Lincoln, Neb., 261 N. W. 842), it was disclosed that theatre operator leased a theatre building under a written contract which provided that in the event the operator failed to pay the agreed rental the property owner could, after serving notice on the theatre operator, sue for payment of the rent.

Without giving the theatre operator notice, the property owner filed suit for over due rent and attached the personal property in the building belonging to the theatre operator. The theatre operator contended that this act constituted his legal eviction from the theatre building, and he refused to pay any further rental.

The property owner filed suit, and the higher court held the theatre operator bound to fulfill the obligations assumed under the lease contract, notwithstanding the fact that the property owner had sued and attached the theatre operator's personal property without first sending a notification of these intentions. This court said:

DECISION

"To constitute a constructive total eviction the law requires that the tenant (theatre operator) abandon the premises within a reasonable time."

FAILURE TO PAY WAGES PROMPTLY

MANY STATES have enacted laws which penalize employers who fail to pay wages promptly to employes. Therefore, it is important to know that a theatre owner is likely to be penalized under these laws if he fails to prove that he had a legal reason for refusing payment of the wages.

CASE

For example, in Harris v. North Star Amusement Company (Minneapolis, 259 N. W. 16), two projectionists of the Bijou theatre in Minneapolis had charge of the projection room, including the equipment pertaining thereto. A part of that equipment was a measuring machine used in determining the "running time" of the show. This machine was estimated to be of the value of $50. The wages of each employe were $40 per week. One day the local manager of the theatre gave each employe a notice that his employment would cease the next Saturday. At the finish of that day's work the employes asked for their pay checks. They were told by the manager to return the following Monday and he would have the checks ready for them. After the employes were gone the manager discovered that the measuring machine was missing.

On Monday the employes called for their checks. They were informed by the manager that the checks could not be delivered because he held them responsible for the missing machine and that he wanted time to look into the matter. They called again on Tuesday, with the same result, the manager claiming that he had not located the machine. They called again a day or two later, and upon again being refused payment of their wages, the employes each filed suit against the theatre company to recover $40 as wages plus $85.52 penalty for failure to pay the wages promptly when due, pursuant to a state law.

DECISION

The lower court held that if the theatre company could introduce testimony proving that the employes had taken the machine, the employes would not be entitled to recover the $85.52 penalty, because under these circumstances the theatre manager had a legal right to refuse payment. However, since the theatre company failed to prove the manager's contention, the higher court held each of the employes entitled to a judgment against the theatre company for $125.52.

POSSIBLE SLANDER

Another important point of the law involved in this case is that if the theatre manager had informed or made statements to the theatre employes, or other persons, that he had refused to pay the discharged employes the wages due them because he suspected that they had stolen the machine, the theatre company would have been liable in heavy damages on a slander suit which may have been filed by the employes. This is true because the theatre company is liable for all acts performed by a manager within the scope of his authority.

INSURANCE AGAINST ROBBERY OF PATRONS

DISCUSSION has arisen as to whether the testimony of a theatre patron and his wife is sufficient to justify a jury in rendering a verdict in favor of the patron on a suit filed against either the theatre owner or the insurer.

Also, some controversy has arisen whether an insurance policy against "rob-

INSURANCE: RIGHTS AND DUTIES

By M. MARVIN BERGER
Member New York Bar

AN IMPORTANT item of expense in the operation of a theatre is the cost of various forms of insurance; fire, public liability, workmen's compensation, burglary, embezzlement, etc., yet it is safe to say that not one exhibitor in a hundred has ever taken the trouble to read through his policies to ascertain exactly what his rights and duties are in connection with the losses against which he insures. Let us analyze a policy of insurance.

It is a contract, by which one party, the insurance company, agrees, in consideration of the payment of a certain amount of money, the premium, to indemnify the other party to the contract, the insured, against loss caused by some future happening. The insured must have something to insure. That "something" is known in law as an "insurable interest." In short, the happening of the thing against which the insurer insures must be such as will cause him a loss, otherwise the contract of insurance becomes a bet with the insurance company.

The policy usually specifies in no uncertain language that it contains the entire undertsanding between the parties and that no modification or waiver of the terms of the policy is binding unless such change is in writing and signed by an officer of the insurer. In cases where the insured wishes to modify or change some portion of the policy, it is highly dangerous to accept, in lieu of a written modification signed by an officer of the insurance company, the oral assurance of a broker or agent.

Taking up in order the policies with which a motion picture exhibitor is most concerned, let us first consider the policy of fire insurance. Among the persons who may have an insurable interest against fire, are the owner, the holder of a mortgage, the lessee or the operator of a theatre. It is usual for the owner of mortgaged property to insure it for the benefit of the holder of the mortgage, in which case the policy states that the loss is payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear.

The owner may safeguard his equity with additional insurance, over and above the amount of insurance payable to the mortgagee. The policy may be either valued or open—that is, it may provide for the payment of a certain fixed valuation after total loss, or it may leave open, up to the face amount of the policy, the amount of loss payable. It is important to note that a fire policy may not insure against other hazards, such as explosion or lightning, and additional insurance may be required to cover such loss.

The form of the policy of fire insurance is fixed by law in most States, and a fire insurance company organized in another state must use the form of policy prescribed by the State in which is located the property to be insured.

All policies generally provide that the property must not be left vacant for longer than a certain period of time, that the policy becomes void if the insurer misrepresents or hides any important facts in obtaining the policy or when seeking to collect his loss, and that the insured must get permission from the insurance company to carry additional fire insurance.

By providing in the policy that there shall be allowed only a percentage of the loss, in the event that the property is not insured up to a certain fixed percentage (usually 80 per cent) of the value of the property, it is sought to keep property from being under-insured against fire loss.

In the event of fire the amount of the loss must be promptly reported in detail to the insurer. Settlement of the claim is then made either by direct adjustment or by fixing the amount of the loss after appraisal by experts. Settlement may take the form of payment in cash, or rebuilding of the fire-damaged property or restoring the property to the condition it was in before it was damaged.

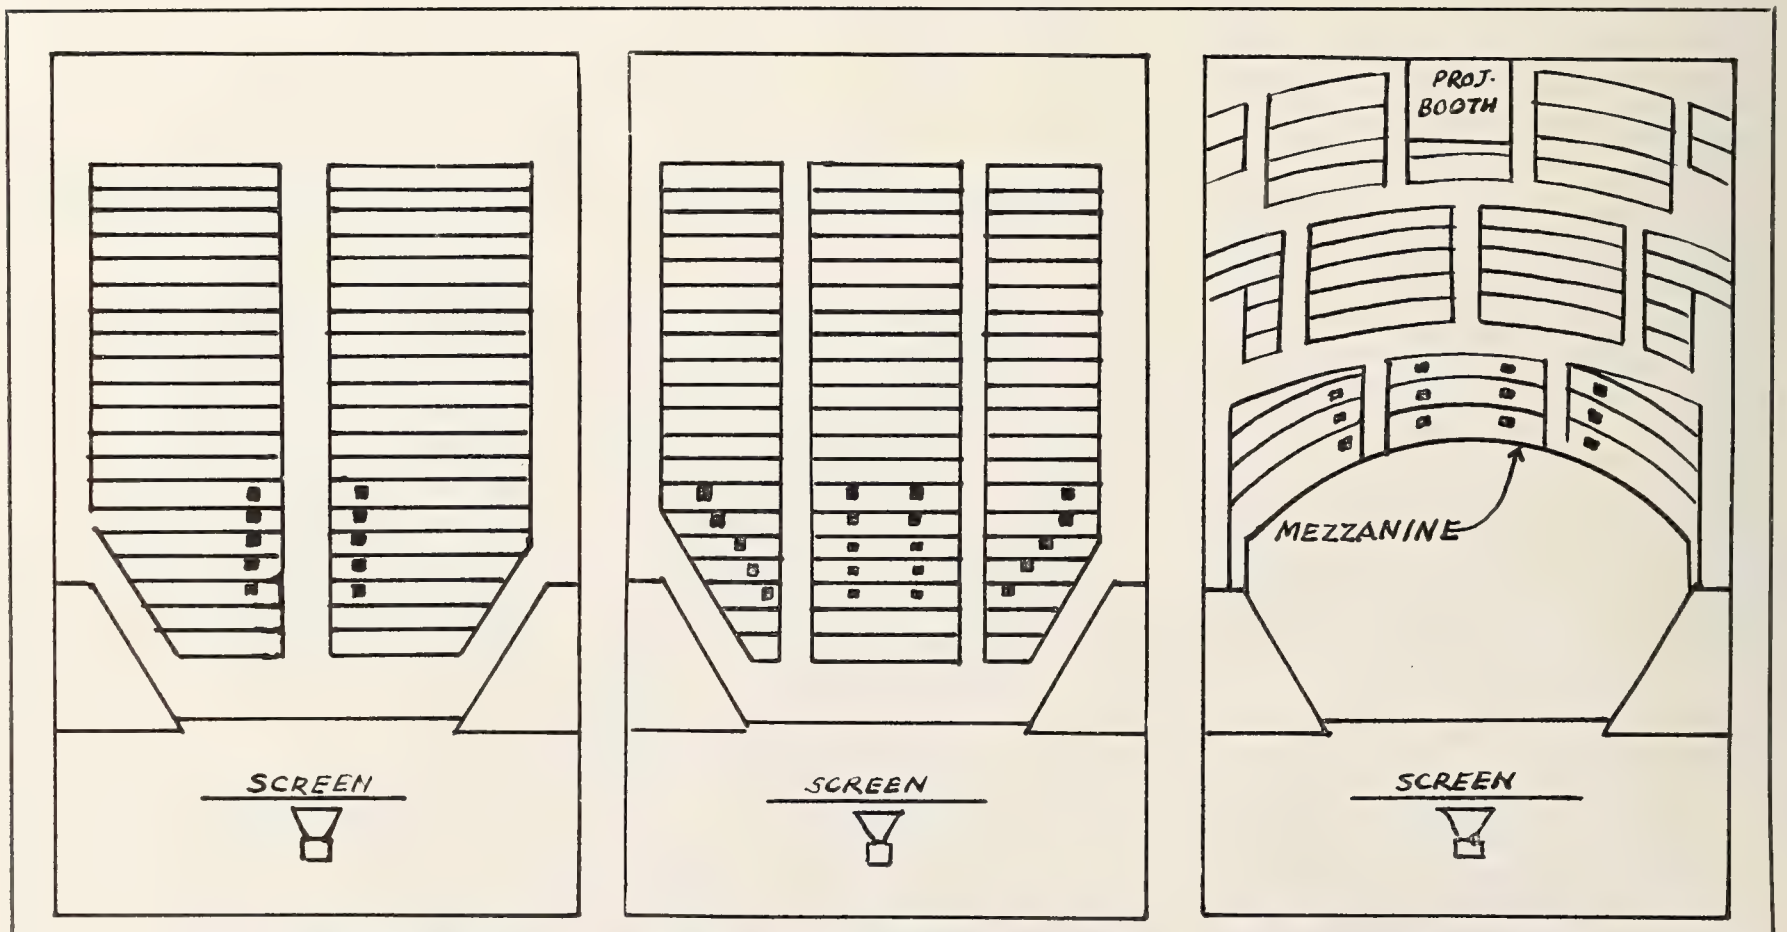
Successful Seating Plans For Theatre Hearing Aids

● Three arrangements for the installation of devices for the hard-of-hearing which have proved suitable in operation and satisfaction of patrons

IT IS FREQUENTLY puzzling to the motion picture theatre owner and manager just what chairs it is best to wire for hearing aids, and of course this is a matter that merits thoughtful consideration, since it is not one about which one is free to change one's mind once the installation has been completed. And a bad choice can reduce to some degree the effectiveness of these facilities as attractions for those potential patrons who have impaired hearing.

Since theatres began to install hearing aids to any substantial degree, there have been quite a variety of arrangements. It has been found, however, that the plans indicated in the accompanying sketches have proved most satisfactory in the greater number of communities, to the theatre operator and the deafened patron alike. These plans take into consideration costs and operating facility alike.

One of the things shown by the sketches is how double audio outlets may be staggered as well as ranged along an aisle. Many exhibitors favor placing the outlets along an aisle because this avoids confusion and annoyance to other patrons when the deafened person is being taken to a seat equipped with an outlet.



Other theatre executives favor wiring loge or mezzanine seats, when there are any, on the grounds that there is more space in such sections—also, these sections may otherwise make it reasonable to add an extra admission charge, which helps to defray the cost of the hard-of-hearing facilities.

For the large theatre, of course, the best arrangement is one placing wired seats on both the main and balcony floors.

The wiring of a solid row for the deafened is to be avoided at all costs. One characteristic of those with impaired hearing is pronounced sensitiveness regarding their affliction and they will not be segregated from persons of normal hearing, thus making themselves conspicuously "different."

Connected with the allocation of chairs for the deafened is the matter of keeping them available at all times for only this class of patrons. One effective method is to paint a white band on the arms of the wired chairs so that they may be readily discerned. Then on the slide or trailer which makes known to patrons the availability of special chairs for the hard-of-hearing, the manner of distinguishing these chairs is pointed out, and others are courteously asked to refrain from occupying them. This information should also be given in the printed program, if any, or on a lobby or foyer card.

[The material on which these suggestions and the diagrams are based was obtained from the engineering department of the RCA Manufacturing Company, distributors of Sonotone hearing aids.—THE EDITOR.]

Seating plans for theatre hearing aids. Left and center plans are for the main floor, the other for a mezzanine. Each block is a double audio outlet for two seats. It is recommended that theatres seating up to 600 have at least ten outlets, providing 20 wired seats; those above 600, at least 20 outlets, providing 40 wired seats.

Ways to Cut the Cost of Insurance on Your Theatre

BY L. A. EDWARDS

● Simple ways, too, and found effective by Mr. Edwards with the properties of Prudential Long Island Theatres, of which he is general manager

THERE ARE a great many theatres throughout the country, both circuit-owned and individually owned, that are unquestionably paying a great deal higher insurance premiums than necessary because of the lack of proper knowledge of the method of securing a reduction.

L. A. Edwards

It is the custom of most rating organizations to make up a rate to cover a certain theatre during and after completion of the building, but few exhibitors know that they may be charged for many items that proper attention and the expenditure of a few dollars will correct and be returned within a year in premium savings.

When an inspector goes over your building prior to making up the rate, he lists the so-called faults or hazards that exist at the time of inspection. They rarely tell you these faults to give you an opportunity to correct them, but permit them to continue until you or someone else discovers that you are paying almost double the premium you should pay. I know of one particular theatre where, upon completion of the building, the rate was $2.68 per hundred of insurance carried. By going after this I was able to reduce this rate to 80c per hundred dollars, or an annual saving on $100,000 of insurance carried, of $1,880, which is the difference between profit and loss in many theatres operating today.

The above is only one of several cases. In the past few years I have saved my company several thousand dollars in premiums. True we have had to spend some money to gain the saving, but in no instance has the expenditure exceeded the saving over a three year period. I am not an insurance expert—anyone with a little application can do the same thing.

Practically every insurance company in the business has its own engineer whose services are available at no cost, also many brokers also provide this service for you.

FIRST AN INSPECTION

The first thing to do is write your nearest rating organization and obtain a copy of your schedule. Turn this over to the engineer and he will tell you how you can reduce your rate by correcting certain conditions which exist in your building. There are many items which go to make up your rate, and everyone which does not meet with the underwriters' requirements, you pay for, not once but every year.

Many cities have their own building departments which have certain requirements that have to be lived up to also. Do not confuse this with your insurance requirements, as they may be entirely different.

There are hundreds of theatres not only in the cities but also in the smaller communities which, I feel sure, are paying excessive insurance premiums and all because no one has ever tried to explain how to accomplish a reduction. There are, of course, certain basic charges that cannot be removed, such as the community differential, etc. But there are also many things that can be easily corrected.

TYPES OF CHARGES

I am sure that many theatres do not have sufficient fire extinguishers to meet the requirements. The New York Suburban Exchange requires one for every 2,500 square feet of floor area, and at least one on every tier or balcony, depending on its area. This charge alone amounts to from 5% to 7% of your total rate.

A non-standard projection room can cost you from 35c to 75c per hundred dollars of insurance carried, depending upon the construction of the building. In several cases I have found that it paid to install a standard Johns-Manville projection booth right inside of the present one, provided I had the space. This is a comparatively easy method of correcting this condition, and depending on the size, it can be done for from $250 to $500. I have made two such installations in the past year and have saved the cost of doing it in reduced premiums over a period of a year.

Even with a so-called fireproof booth there can still be charges, such as the port holes being too large, the shutters not properly fused or of improper thickness or not lapping the holes all around sufficiently. In suburban territory, at least one 2½-gallon fire extinguisher is required inside the booth, and one directly outside. Be sure your film cabinets meet the underwriters' requirements.

Do you have an outside window from the booth with a wooden frame? If you do, you may be paying for it. It should be Kalamein, or steel is preferred. Are the doors in your booth self-closing and of fireproof construction? Is a no-smoking sign properly displayed? Are your film waste cans self-closing? Is the vent in the ceiling of proper diameter?

If you happen to have a theatre located under the jurisdiction of the New York Suburban Division, write them at 85 John Street, New York City, and ask for a copy of the "Uniform Schedule, Supplement No. 44," pertaining to the rating of motion picture theatres. There are doubtless similar offices in other localities.

Another item which can run into a considerable charge is the condition of your electric wiring. If you do not have a certificate of approval from your rating organization, the chances are this is costing you plenty. Your policy probably requires such a certificate under any circumstances.

STAGE AND STORE AREA

Should you have a Class A stage, is it properly equipped with fire hooks, fire axes, water tanks with buckets, fire extinguishers and waste cans? Are your dressing room shelves tin clad? Is your stage ventilator of standard construction and properly fused?

The installation of a sprinkler system on a Class A stage, while a little costly to install, can save you as much as 50 per cent in your rate, and even more. A system of standpipes throughout the house will also give you a considerable reduction.

If you have stores and offices attached to your building, they too require a certain amount of fire extinguishers. At least one is required for each store, and if the cellar of the store is used for storage, it too must have one.

About People of the Theatre

NEWS OF THEIR ACTIVITIES REPORTED FROM ALL SECTIONS AND BRIEFLY TOLD

Interstate Theatres, Inc., opened the North Main at Houston, Texas, on Christmas Day. JOHN H. ARNOLD, formerly assistant manager and treasurer of the Kirby, is manager.

ED KUGEL, formerly of Clarks, Neb., is taking over the State at Holstein, Ia., previously managed by FRED LEVY, who is giving it up and moving his residence to Omaha, due to a recent family tragedy.

PHILIP SLIMAN, owner and operator of the Laurel theatre in New Orleans, will enlarge his house early in the spring.

CHARLES BECKER has opened the Drake theatre, a new 600-seater, at Rego Park, Long Island.

CLARENCE H. KAIMANN, now operating five neighborhood theatres in St. Louis, announces plans for a fifth house, to be known as the Paragon. It will be a 700-seater and will be located at 5977 West Florissant Avenue.

SAM STECKER, MYER FINE and associates, will have the Shaker theatre, Cleveland, completed by about February 15. RAY ALLISON, formerly manager of Warners' Chillicothe has been appointed manager.

WESTLAND THEATRES, will reopen the Palm, Pueblo, Colo., after completely remodelling and redecorating it and will re-name it the Chief. Another Westland house to shortly be reopened is the 450-seat Kiva in Grand Junction.

D. DONNICI, who operates the Palace, Kansas City, will be part owner and manager of a new house at Twelfth street and the Paseo, which will cater to colored patronage. VICTOR BRANCATO and JOHN DONNICI, nephew to D. Donnici, also will be interested in the venture. The house will open about March 15.

HENRY LAZARUS, operator of the Coliseum theatre in New Orleans, is enlarging the seating capacity and installing a cooling system.

KENNETH DOUGLASS, manager of the Capitol Theatre Supply Company, Boston, is convalescing following an appendicitis operation.

JOHN FOSTER, manager of the Empire in Salem, Mass., has returned to his post after a lengthy illness.

RUSSELL MACK, manager of the Colonial theatre, Portland, Me., started off the New Year as a bridegroom, marrying Lillian Stiman of Portland.

HOAR and POLLARD, Maine circuit operators, have opened the Wilbur Hall in Phillip for first-run attractions.

ANDREW and MICHAEL SIRICA have taken over operation of the Capitol theatre, Waterbury, Conn., following the sudden death of their father, A. E. SIRICA, who originally constructed the house.

E. C. INGRAM reports that the new 1,200-seater, being erected at North Kannapolis, N. C., will be ready for occupancy the latter part of January.

WILLIAM BLAKE has reopened the Dunbar, at Dunbar, Ky., which had been closed for the past several months.

THOMAS BROTHERS, operating the Fayette, at Fayetteville, W. Va., has reopened the theatre after having it completely re-equipped.

M. and P. Theatres has installed HARRY MULQUEEN, formerly resident manager of the Maine, in Waterville, as manager of the Central, Biddeford, Me.

The tree is pictured in the lobby of the Adelphi theatre, Chicago neighborhood house, where it has been the central feature of a Holiday scheme. It is 11 feet high, has a mirror trunk and base, and revolves on an electric turntable, with ten spotlights illuminating it in colors. On a spiral shelf are mounted 200 Biblical figures. Construction of the external portions is chiefly of chromium and glass. Dell Studios, Chicago, built it. The Rialto, which has been remodeled and is one of the more prominent houses on Chicago's North Side, is operated by Ludwig Sussman.

ARTHUR MURCH has been put in charge of the North Shore in Gloucester, Mass., succeeding JAMES P. KINCAIDE, who recently died. Murch formerly managed the Federal in Salem, lately taken over by PHILIP BLOOMBERG and the Salem Realty Company.

M. and P. Theatres report the following appointments: MARVIN HUBAN as assistant manager of the Strand, Dorchester, Mass.; J. A. O'DONNELL, manager of the Maine, Waterville, Me.; THOMAS WALL, formerly house manager of the Metropolitan, Boston, to the managership of the Paramount in Needham.

B. B. BENFIELD has started construction of a new theatre at Myrtle Beach, S. C.

SHEA theatre interests have arranged to lease the new theatre now in construction on Second Street, Marietta, Ohio.

MRS. EDNA ECKERLY and son, operators in the Pacific Northwest, are completing construction of their fifth house, the Eackersley theatre, in Kamiah, Ida.

KARL HOBLITZELLE, president of Interstate Circuit, Inc., announces plans for the construction of a Spanish type theatre and community store group on South Main Street, Houston.

FRANK J. BECKER, head of Western Sound Equipment Company, Portland, Ore., reports a steady increase in business. Current equipment jobs include Odem's Mayfair theatre, Redmond, Ore., Baker theatre, Baker, Ore., Keylor-Grand theatre, Walla Walla, Wash., and the Princess theatre, operated by Pearl Brothers, Prosser, Wash.

WALTER READE has acquired a site in New Brunswick for his fortieth theatre, which will be a 1,500-seat house. The stage will be equipped for presentations, and a modern cooling system will be installed.

B. T. BITTS will construct a new 600-seat house at 418-20 N. Twenty-fifth Street, Richmond, Va., for the presentation of second-run pictures.

JOE APPELBAUM has opened a new theatre in Hollandale, Miss., replacing the Roosevelt, which was recently destroyed by fire.

HARRY BALABAN is now owner and operator of the Echo theatre in Des Plaines, Ill. The house was purchased from Ben Cooney, who is redecorating the Dante theatre in Chicago with plans for reopening the house about February 1. Another Chicago theatre to reopen after being dark for sometime is the Lyric at 47th Street and Emerald Avenue.

ALBERT E. ROBBINS and ADOLPH JOHNSON, owners of the Strand, Hamden, Conn., are planning the erection of a 1,000-seat film and vaudeville house at Dixwell Avenue and Hellen Street.

HARRY MILLER is having plans drawn for a new theatre and office building in Festus, Mo.

E. R. CUSTER of the Athens Theatre Company, announces plans for a 1,266-seat house in Athens, Ohio.

ROY KALVER of the Roosevelt theatre, Chicago, has taken a six-month leave of absence, going to Decatur, Ind., to assist his father in the operation of his several houses there.

WILLIAM MCGUINESS, engineer at the B&K Terminal theatre in Chicago, has patented a new high pressure steam boiler.

MORTON L. CLARK, formerly of Lustrolite, Inc., of Davenport, Ia., is now vicepresident and sales manager of the Artkraft Sign Company, of Lima, Ohio.

B. C. GRIFFITH, merchant, of Prentiss, Miss., is erecting a new theatre there.

FRANK ANDERSON has installed complete new sound and projection equipment in his Family theatre at Kirksville, Mo.

W. W. WELDON is installing new sound and projection equipment, a new screen, and other new units in the De Soto at De Soto, Kan.

MRS. C. A. HAHN, wife of C. A. HAHN, general manager of the McAuley Manufacturing Company, was buried here last week. Mrs. Hahn had been in ill health for many months.

COMERFORD THEATRES, INC., will soon start construction of a 900-seat theatre in Throop, Pa. It is scheduled to open about March 1.

HARRY MUSGRAVE has installed new seats in his 300-seat house at Minneapolis, ADOLPH JOHNSON and AL ROBBINS present operators of the Strand, Hamden, Conn., are negotiating for a site directly across the street for the construction of a new 1,000-seat house, to be equipped for vaudeville.

FRANK GROSS is rebuilding the Grand theatre in Cleveland. The alterations include a new lobby. Approximately 280 seats will be added.

RALPH LARNED, who operates the Paramount at La Crosse, Kan., will open the Jewel in Bazine, Kan., which never before has had a film house.

EQUIPMENT and OPERATION

A DEPARTMENT OF PRACTICAL MAINTENANCE AND OPERATING SERVICE

CONDUCTED BY J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

Diesel Engines Applied to the Power Requirements of the Theatre

A GREAT DEAL of interest is being aroused in the theatre industry over the use of diesel and gas engines as a prime mover or source of power. It has only been in the last few years that diesel engines have been available to operate on the relative small loads that we have in theatres which still remain relatively small despite increase in recent years.

Previously diesels had been used in power plants, factories, etc., but manufacturing costs and the costs of operation of hotels, apartments, office buildings and theatres during the last few years have become so important, and also on account of the unsatisfied demands of operators for lower electric energy rates from the power companies, that a sizable demand has been created for some source of power cheaper than present electric rates. The moment anyone begins to study the cost of power he must consider diesel engines using oil or gas as fuel as a possible answer to his problem.

Briefly, as a bit of history, the original patents on the diesel principle were dated in 1892. From that year until 1912 was a period of development (primarily with sales of installations particularly in this country far behind what really was necessary to defray development costs). In reality the history of the diesel begins about 1912, and the first real market was the heavy manufacturing field and the power generating field. Now, the demand is for diesels in sizes ranging from smaller than 500 horsepower to 1000 and 2000 horsepower plants.

TYPES OF DIESEL ENGINES

A DIESEL ENGINE is a class or type of internal combustion engine, the fuel is burned right in the cylinder creating pressure which does the work. The engine in an automobile is also an internal combustion engine, in which a mixture of gasoline vapor and air is compressed and at the point of highest compression the mixture is ignited by an electric spark. A diesel engine has no spark plugs, coils, magneto, battery or carburetor, it sucks in a cylinder-full of just air, compresses the air to 5 or 6 hundred pounds per square inch, and then at this point fuel oil under pressure is injected into the cylinder. The heat of compression is sufficient to ignite and burn the fuel oil and the expanding of the resulting gases drives the piston downward exerting power and doing work on the crank. The crank may be connected to another piece of machinery or to a dynamo and electric current is generated.

There are several arrangements of strokes and cycles for diesels, perhaps the most typical is the 4-stroke-cycle engine (such an engine completes its cycle in four strokes of the piston). For example: The first stroke (downward) is the intake stroke, sucking in a full cylinder of air; the second stroke (upward) compresses the air, at which point fuel is injected, burned, expanded; and the third stroke (downward) is the power or work stroke; the fourth stroke (upward) is the exhaust stroke, when all of the burned gases are forced out of the cylinder. This routine is continued.

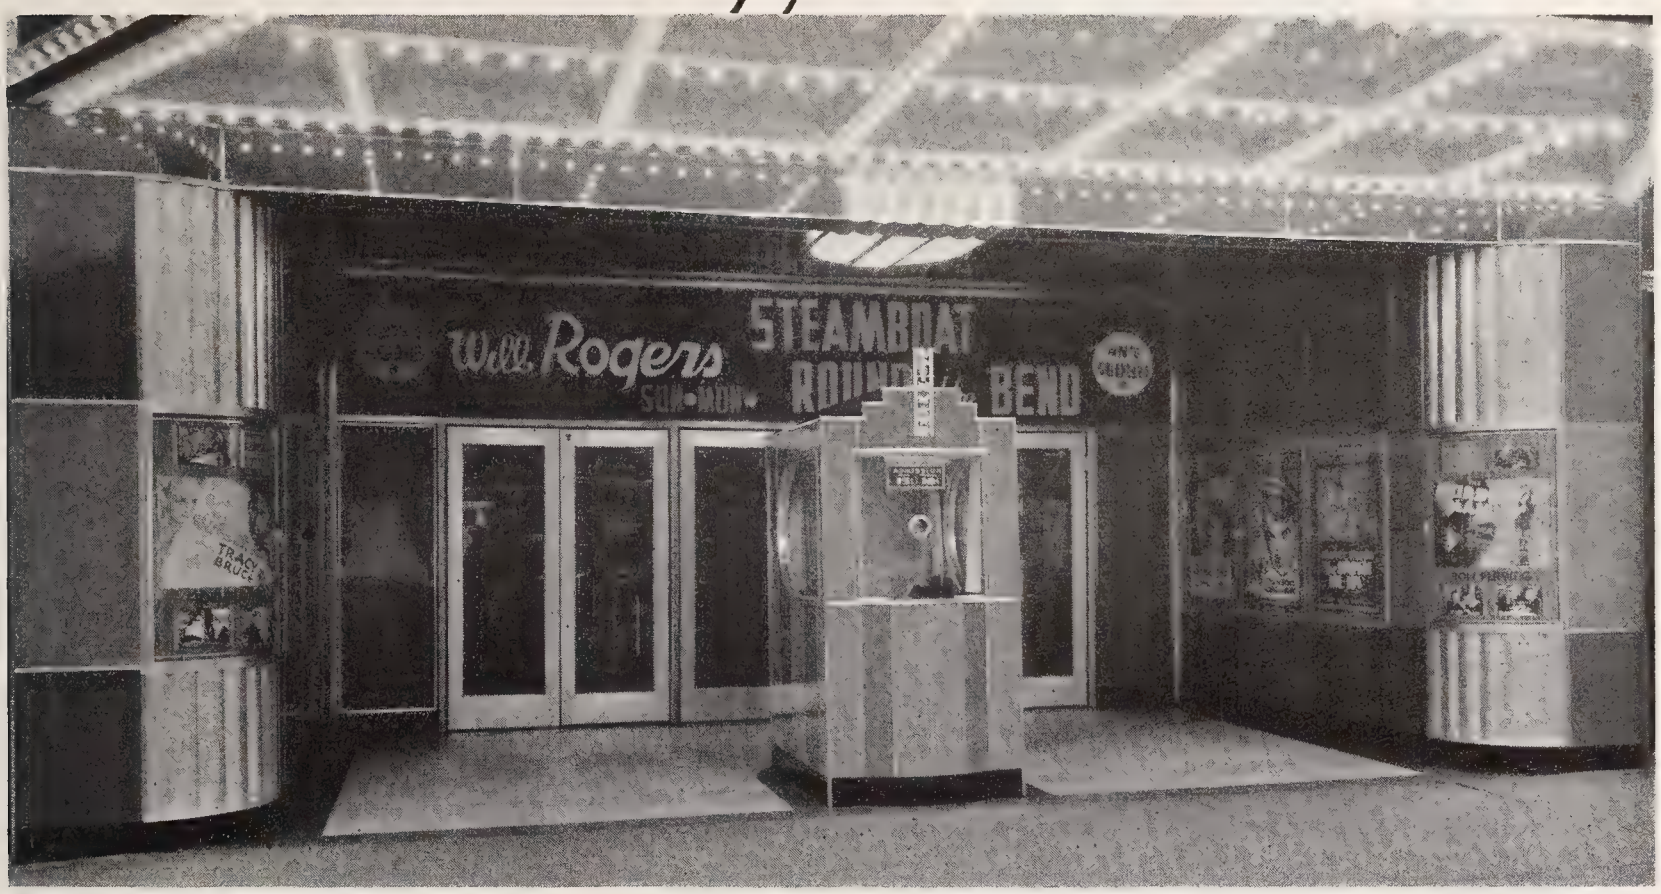
TWO-STROKE CYCLE

Another type of engine is the two-stroke-cycle. In this type the first stroke is upward compressing the air, the fuel is injected and expansion takes place driving the piston down. At this point air under pressure is forced into the cylinder driving out the burned gases, and leaves the cylinder filled with new air ready for compression on the next stroke (upward).

Then, of course, there are the special cylinder arrangements generally referred to as double-acting, in which case the cylinder is so designed and the piston is so designed that each end of the piston and its corresponding end of the cylinder acts as a primary cylinder and piston. All double-acting cylinder diesels that I have seen operate on the two-cycle principle.

CAPACITIES

With the more modern development of the diesel principle applied to either oil or natural gas-burning engines, units are now available as small as 100 to 150 horsepower, and they are just as automatic as an automobile engine. However, where loads are as small as this, it is very difficult to justify any other procedure than the purchase of electric power, because the consumption of electric energy is so small that it would be almost impossible to ever offset the initial investment for diesel engines from savings in cost of current.



Where sudden or seasonal large peaks in electrical consumption are met with in theatre operation, and such is the case of all theatres of say 2000 seats or more that have mechanical refrigeration or air-conditioning, diesel engines are a very real possibility in cutting down operating costs of electric energy.

CONSIDERATIONS BEFORE INSTALLING

THE FOLLOWING are some important considerations to be taken into account before installing diesel engines:

1. Know exactly the present load requirements and consider anticipated load increases.
2. Is there sufficient space available away from the auditorium?
3. There must be two complete diesel engine installations, one as an emergency stand by, so aligned or cross connected as to give the greatest possible flexibility to the installation.
4. A careful and detailed analysis of the present electrical rates and the general trend of those rates and government activity in your particular territory in the power generating field.
5. For rough calculations the diesel plant will cost you an average of about $80 per horsepower installed, then add to this about $25 per kilowatt of generator capacity which includes generator, exciter, foundation and installation.
6. With oil at 4c per gallon the cost exclusive of labor, supplies other than fuel oil, depreciation, interest on investment, insurance, rent, etc., should be about $.0043 per kilowatt hour, whereas with 5c oil this figure would probably be about $.0051 per kilowatt hour.
7. The following rates for fixed charges

DOORS LOBBIES FRONTS OF Colorful FORMICA

THE Formica installed on the box office and interior lobby of the Bryn Mawr Theater in Chicago was one of several hundred theater modernization jobs that were put in last year with Formica.

Most of these jobs were new in design and appearance, fresh, modern and very attractive. The material, in more than 50 colors—and with inlays of one color on another—was used for lobby paneling, doors, fronts and similar purposes.

It is easily and quickly erected, durable and economical. It produces effects that can be equalled with no other material.

Before you modernize get all the facts.

ALUMINUM PAINT: It has been noted that many theatres are using a great quantity of aluminum paint for box offices, display frames, wood trim, marquees, fire escapes, etc. Aluminum paint should never be bought ready mixed. The aluminum powder should be mixed with the liquid as the paint is used. Aluminum powder mixed with a good grade of spar varnish makes an excellent coating for metal or wood.

The one-coat aluminum jobs that are being done on so many theatres are going to prove disappointing in the long run. There really is no finished one-coat paint job; two coats is the very minimum number, even for just an acceptable job.

Aluminum paint is resistive to fumes, even acid fumes, and it prevents the bleeding through to the finished coat of stains or rosin from new wood. It is an excellent paint to cover up a dark color that is to be finally finished in a light color. However, aluminum is not the perfect coating for all purposes—it is not the answer to all paint problems.

COOLING WITH ICE: At the end of a rather hot summer, many operators of small theatres who felt that mechanical refrigeration for air conditioning was out of the question, asked for thoughts on cooling by means of ice. To design an ice melting system is not difficult, but there must be space available for the ice melting tank, accessibility of delivery of ice, and facilities for regular cleaning.

The ice melting tank must be designed to prevent excessive heat gain and leakage. Such a plant must not be designed so that the air blows over the ice, as the conductivity between ice and air is very low. The ice should not be placed in a tank of water because it would then be impossible to control the rate of melting. Consequently the ice must be set on a rack above the water and the water sprayed over it by means of a circulating pump and properly arranged spray nozzles. The cold water is then pumped (another pump) to the air washer where it comes in contact with the air and thus cools the air.

The ice melting tank only takes the place of the compressor, condenser and expansion coils; fans, air washer and duct distribution and return systems must form the rest of the system. A properly designed ice melting system is not cheap by any means. Its cost, of course, is less than that of mechanical refrigeration.

FLUE GASES: The principal chemicals of the flue gases from the chimney of a boiler are: oxygen, nitrogen, carbon dioxide (carbonic acid gas), and carbonic oxide (carbon monoxide). Any analysis of flue gas has for its object the determination of the percentages of the basic gases present. From this it is possible to determine the actual amount of air entering the boiler as draft, and the actual amount of air entering can then be compared with the theoretical amount of air necessary for perfect combustion.

If there were such a thing possible as perfect combustion, all the air admitted to the boiler fire box would come in such intimate contact with the fuel that each atom of oxygen would be utilized for combustion and the escaping gases would consist only in carbonic acid and nitrogen. In this case each atom of carbon of the fuel would combine with two atoms of oxygen from the air, forming carbonic dioxide, and the nitrogen of the air would pass through unchanged. The presence of carbon monoxide in the flue gas indicates carbon in the fuel which has not been completely consumed. The formation of carbon monoxide in the fuel gas represents a very serious loss of heat, and a large percentage of it means more air must be admitted to the fire box.

Perhaps a flue gas analysis in your theatre and the proper instruction of your firemen as to damper settings would save fuel and money for you.

are generally accepted in the industrial field: depreciation 5%, taxes and insurance 2%, interest on investment 6%.

8. A diesel engine is enclosed in a water cooling jacket. This water in the summer time must be cooled by some mechanical means—cooling tower or spray pond—in the winter time it might be possible to utilize the heat of this jacket water in reducing heating costs.

The country's diesel engine manufacturers are becoming rapidly aware of the market represented by the theatres of this country. To appreciate the picture of the near future all we have to do is to consider the air conditioning field and realize the fog and haze that theatre owners are in on account of it, then multiply that confusion by say two and you have the approximate result when diesel salesmen begin to call on theatre owners. In brief theatre men are going to be at a disadvantage because salesmen are going to talk a language not easily understood by theatre owners. There are going to be just as many mistakes made in buying diesel plants as there have been in buying air conditioning plants.

APPLYING DIESELS TO THEATRE NEEDS

ONE CANNOT VISIT, say, the Palace theatre in New York, read the name plate on the engines, then write to the manufacturer and say, "I want to buy a diesel plant such as the Palace theatre has."

ECONOMY FACTORS

The only reason for diesel engines in a theatre is to furnish power, either directly connected (mechanical power) or driving a dynamo (electrical power). The power costs that the diesel will compete with is represented by the monthly electric bill. Consequently the real beginning of the study of a possible diesel installation is a careful analysis of past power bills and a detail schedule of the operating time of every motor connected to the electric service in the theatre, and finally an analysis of the lighting load.

The characteristics of the entire load is vitally important. For instance a check up of the total connected load might show that it called for a 500 horse-power plant. After careful study it is possible that operating schedules would show that there never was a necessity for more than 300 horse-power at any time. Consequently a 300 horse-power plan would show a real economy, while the 500 horse-power plant might, from the standpoint of fixed charges plus operating costs, prove little more economical than buying power from a utility.

Here's another example of economy. Suppose a theatre has a 300 horse-power electric load which is equivalent to an electrical load of 223.8 K.W. Assume that of this load 60 horse-power or 44.76 K.W. represent the motor on a refrigerating compressor. The compressor would be operated only four months out of the year, whereas the rest of the electrical load, or 179.04-kw., is constant throughout the twelve months of the year. It would be possible under such conditions to install a diesel directly connected to the compressor by geared clutch arrangement and at the same time it would drive a dynamo or altinator of 180-kw. capacity, rather than one 225-kw. capacity generator, which in turn would furnish current for the entire load. In this way the engine would only drive the combined load four months of the year and the other eight months it would operate the generator. This method would

BLUEBOOK of PROJECTION

Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith

WE sincerely appreciate this authorized unsolicited statement from Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith on F. H. Richardson's new Bluebook Projection. We know that you will be interested in the frank opinion of this recognized authority who as Past President of The Society of Motion Picture Engineers did so much to further the cause of projection and projectionists.

IN every field, there are a few books which must be regarded as "classics" and important guides by the workers in that field. Richardson's "Bluebook of Projection" compresses between its covers substantially all the information and guides which motion picture projectionists need. The projectionist who makes himself thoroughly familiar with the contents of this book and constantly applies his knowledge in the projection room can hardly fail to do a good job and to command the respect of his fellow workers and employer. In their own interests, projectionists should not hesitate to avail themselves of such a mine of information.

THE convenience of using Richardson's "Bluebook of Projection" is greatly increased by a novel and helpful indexing system which the author has developed. Preceding each chapter are a series of numbered questions which adequately cover the subject matter of that chapter. In the chapter itself, the answers to the questions are preceded by the corresponding number. Accordingly, the projectionist can readily check up his knowledge of the subject material of each chapter before and after reading it; and can return to these questions at any time to make sure that his knowledge of the subject is still complete. This indexing system is a fine method of "perpetual self-examination."

TWO-PIPE STEAM SYSTEMS

[This is the second of two discussions, with diagrams, of steam systems for the heating of theatres. The first, on single-pipe systems, appeared in the December 14 issue.]

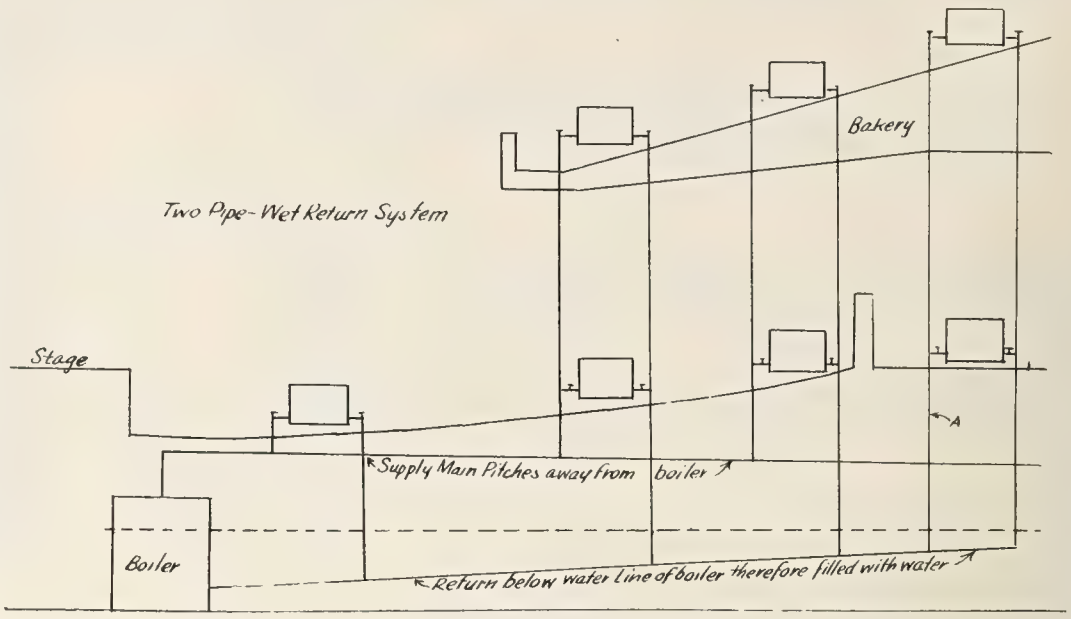

FIGURE A: This drawing indicates the piping layout in a 2-pipe wet return system. It is a wet return system because the return main is below the level of the water in the boiler. Otherwise it does not vary a great deal from the layout shown in Figure C. In this sketch the amount of water in the risers joining the return main is shown only to the water level of the boiler. It should be obvious that with any pressure being carried in the boiler, say 5 lbs., that the condensation in these risers joining the return will actually be above the water level at such a point where the pressure inside of those risers will be equal to the pressure on the surface of the water in the boiler. Be sure to note that in the last riser indicated by the Figure A and the arrow is not only connected as a riser feeding the radiators but in turn is connected to the return main. This is to eliminate any water of condensation collecting in the supply main thereby blocking supply branches to groups of radiators.—J.T.K.

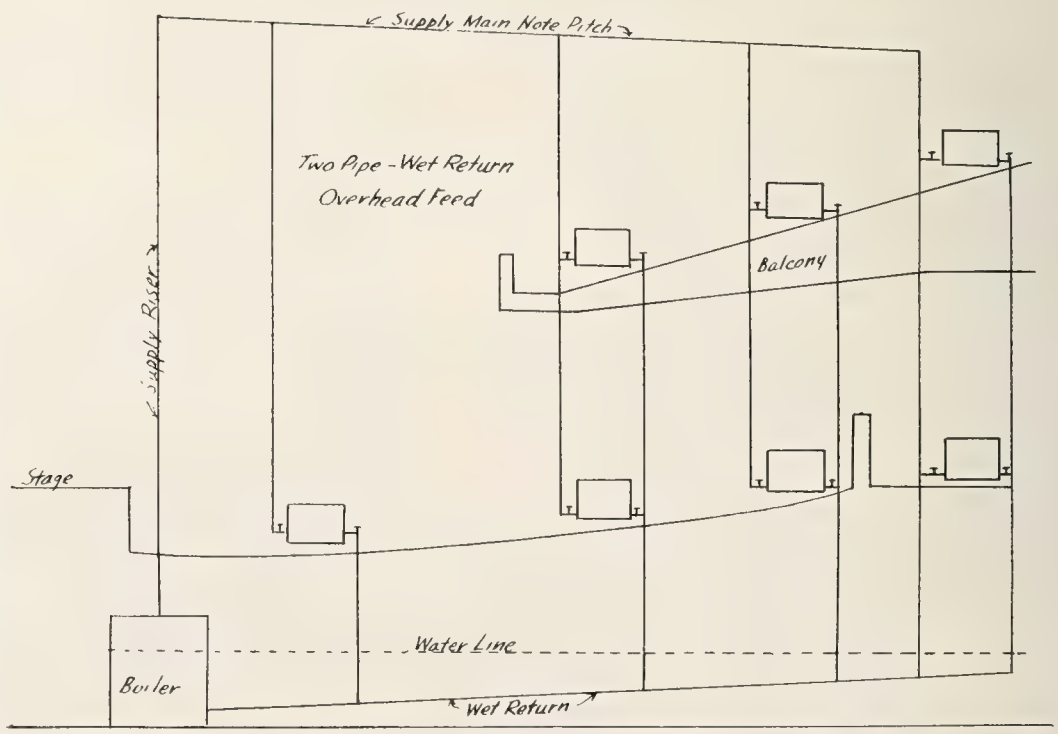

FIGURE B: This shows the piping layout of a 2-pipe wet return overhead feed system. This principle of overhead feed can be easily adapted to a one-pipe system. It is a great mistake to ever attempt to connect a take-off branch to the main vertical riser on an overhead system. All take-offs to radiators should be from the approximately horizontal main at the top of the building. Please note carefully the direction of the pitch in the supply and return mains.—J.T.K.

FIGURE C: Shows the typical pipe arrangement, including main steam supply and return, indicating proper pitches and radiator connections. This is known as a dry pipe return. Due to the fact that the return main is above the water level in the boiler and therefore is never filled with the water of condensation, you will note in the lower righthand side of the diagram a drip connection. This forms a definite water seal between the supply main and the return main. No effort in this sketch has been made to indicate radiator accessories, such as proper valves and traps. Such details will be covered in a later issue. It is easy to appreciate from this piping layout that the pressures in the supply main and in the return main will be practically the same when all connections to and from the radiators are open. This is the earliest type of 2-pipe layout and is only found in older buildings at the present time. It is of interest to theatre men because it provides a means of converting old 1-pipe systems to a better operating 2-pipe system.—J.T.K.

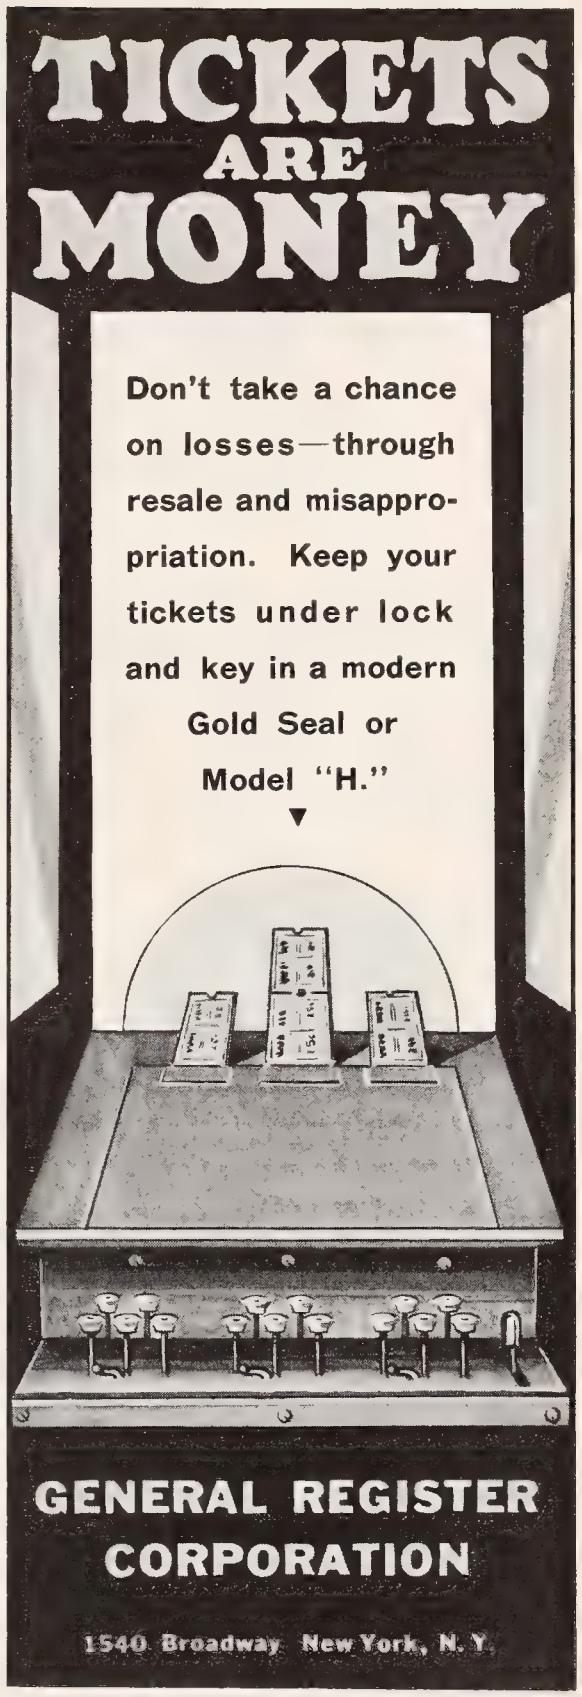
THESE REPORTS CONCERNING MOTION PICTURE THEATRE EQUIPMENT, FURNISHINGS AND SUPPLIES ARE FOR THE IMMEDIATE INFORMATION OF THEATRE OPERATORS, MANAGERS AND PURCHASING AGENTS. WITH RESPECT TO SOME OF THE PRODUCTS REFERRED TO THEY ARE PRELIMINARY TO MORE COMPLETE ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTIONS IN PREPARATION FOR A FOLLOWING ISSUE.

INTERMEDIATE MODEL P. A. MICROPHONE

● A new model microphone which was designed, according to the manufacturer, to fill "the gap between the carbon microphone and the less sensitive high-quality microphones," has been developed by the Amperite Corporation, of New York, makers of public address and allied sound equipment.



The output of this microphone can be fed directly into amplifiers using ordinary carbon microphones, and the general design is geared to brilliancy at the higher frequencies (it has a gradual rising characteristic rated at from 7,000 to 11,000 cycles per second). Its signal to noise level is also high.

A 6J7 metal tube is used with this microphone and can be operated from batteries or a.c. Either a compact a.c. power supply or floor stand with self-contained batteries can be supplied for it. A cylindrically shaped, single-stage pre-amplifier forms the bottom of the microphone.

NEW MODEL DUAL CHANGEOVER DEVICE

● A changeover mechanism to affect changeover with respect to both sound and image, has been developed by the Essannay Electric Manufacturing Company of Chicago, headed by L. D. Strong, who is a member of Projectionists' Local 110, Chicago.

The dual changeover is accomplished when the projectionist steps on a foot switch. This model is for porthole mount-

An adjustment screw regulates the speed of the opening and closing of the changeovers.

The device is shown in an accompanying photograph. At the top is the housing for

SWIVEL-CHUTE ONE-KEY CHANGEMAKER

● A new model changemaker designed for single-key operation has been brought out by the Brandt Automatic Cashier Company of Watertown, Wis. It has a swivel delivery chute which can be readily turned and locked in any position desired by means of a thumb screw. The chute is held firmly in its bracket; yet it is detachable, permitting it to be taken in at night.

The keyboard is in five colors, and the case can be procured in colors to blend with specific surroundings. It is very compact and sturdily built.

AIR-CONDITIONING SERVICE ORGANIZED

● Buensod-Stacey Air-Conditioning, Inc., has been formed in New York to operate as a personal service organization in the air-conditioning contracting field. The new company is headed by Alfred E. Stacey, Jr., research engineer who was previously associated with the Carrier Engineering Corporation, air-conditioning equipment manufacturers. Other officers and executives of the firm, all formerly with Carrier, are:

M. S. Smith, for many years purchasing agent and production manager, and of late years the treasurer.

A. C. Buensod, specialist in the application of air-conditioning to the tobacco industry; also pioneer in the development of air-conditioning for theatres, motion picture film and sound stage production.

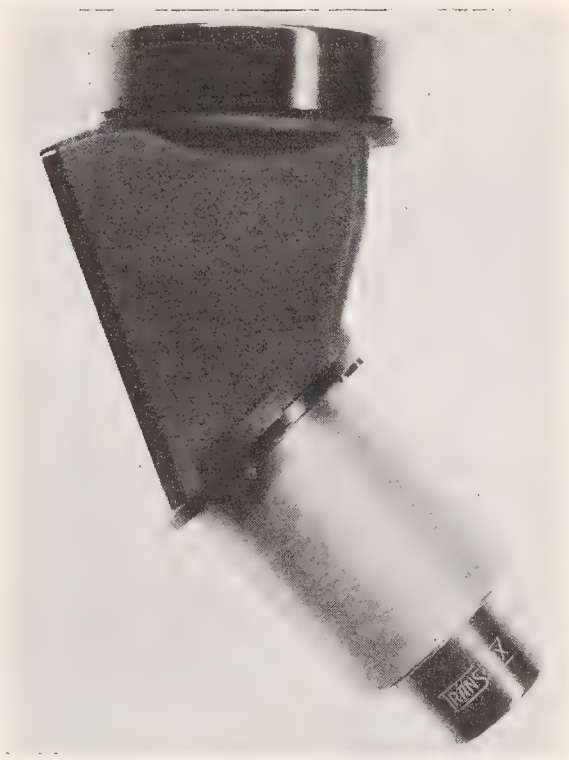
The Screen and Lenses Used in Rear Projection

● Examining the two elements peculiar to the system—an article supplementing discussion of the Trans-Lux method in the November 16th issue



THE TRANS-LUX motion picture screen, when first proposed, seemed a fanciful idea. To project a picture from the rear necessitated a screen without seams, entirely in one piece, and with sufficient diffusing power to prevent the light of the arc from coming directly through as a "ball of fire." The first step necessary to the achievement of such a screen was to discover and perfect a translucent material of which the screen could be made. It had to be strong enough to stand the strain of stretching to a smooth even plane, yet translucent enough to permit a proper image. It had to be immune to changes in temperature and humidity so that it would not sag and throw the picture out of focus.

Consequently, a reinforcing fabric was the next essential to be sought. It had to be both transparent and seamless and good manufacturing foresight decreed, as well, that it should be of sufficient area to accommodate not only the screen of average size but a large one (the maximum size at the time was 18 feet by 22 feet).

Experiments showed that silk was the logical fabric for such reinforcing, but an investigation covering practically every silk manufacturer in America and Europe, disclosed that silk of that width was yet to be loomed, and the suggestion that silk could be made in such an unprecedented width was regarded as incredible.

Eventually, however, and quite by accident, a loom maker was found whose pet hobby was the invention of a wide loom, and although the widest silk then made measured only 30 inches, he accepted the unusual commission. The loom was developed slowly, step by step, and after silks of varying widths were woven, a piece of silk 20 feet wide was eventually made.

When the screen was finally provided for, there was yet another problem to be solved before rear projection was practical. It was necessary to develop a wide-angle lens requiring but one foot of throw for every foot of picture width projected, since with the projector placed behind the screen instead of in front of it, a maximum throw of 18 or 20 feet was automatically imposed by the depth of the average stage area available. There were many short focus lenses available, but they had such a small aperture that hardly any light from the arc lamp would pass through. They were satisfactory for camera use where the brilliance of the sun produced sufficient light, but were worthless for projection. The lenses commonly used for ordinary front projection had a throw of at least 3½ feet for every foot of picture width—in other words, they required 70 feet or more to project a 20-foot picture. When the lens makers both here and abroad were approached and asked to produce a 1-inch focus projection lens that would pass sufficient light, they ridiculed the idea and said it could not be done—and, of course, they were correct as far as the then known projection lens systems were concerned.

The Trans-Lux projection lens.

Finally, an old-time projectionist and designer of motion picture equipment conceived an idea which accomplished the seemingly impossible. He proposed what was the early Trans-Lux wide-angle lens. There followed many years of experimentation, however, before a really effective design was attained.

The optical principle involved in the rear projection lens may be explained in this simplified way:

The lens consists of three main optical units (see diagram) calculated in relation to each other and combined to produce the desired results. The odd shape of the lens is due to the first of these units, which consists of a specially designed reflecting prism which bends the light through an angle of about 45°. This accomplishes two purposes; namely, the placing of the

81% MORE LIGHT With Kni-tron Rectifier and 10¼″ Reflectors

Working them in combination with SRA carbons gives the kind of light that makes pictures actually live. That's what people pay to see. That's how you make money by adopting this marvelous combination. Actually 81% more light—nearly double the brilliance—from an investment that is ridiculously small.

Tests Made Under Working Conditions

In an average, every-day theatre such as you will find by walking along any principal street, we got results that are certain to boost box office. With ordinary equipment we produced 8 foot candles on the screen. We got 14½ foot candles when we switched over to the Kni-Tron hooked up with SRA carbons in front of a 10¼″ reflector: 14½ as against 8, an increase of 81%. All other conditions were unchanged.

You can do the same. When customers see brilliant, clear, razor-sharp pictures they come back oftener. Soon you have the small cost back and the bigger profits follow. Write for details now.

projectors close enough to each other so that the pictures will coincide on the screen without keystone or distortion, and the reversal of the picture so that the titles read correctly from the auditorium.

This latter feature eliminates the necessity of reversing the soundheads of the projectors and permits the use of standard projectors and soundheads and the threading of the film in the normal way. This prism is unsilvered so that the loss of light is, theoretically, not over 10%. It is placed between the other units of the lens.

The second unit consists of what might be considered an ordinary positive projection lens, except that it will not project a satisfactory picture when used alone and is intentionally calculated that way in order to produce the required result in conjunction with the other units. It consists of two achromatic positive lenses spaced apart a fixed distance, mounted in a single barrel, and having a focal length of approximately 3 inches.

The third unit consists of two negative lenses, one of them achromatic, spaced apart a fixed distance, which is relatively small, and forming a negative combination. When the negative unit is placed in front of the positive unit, the beam of light is suddenly spread out, forming the picture at a distance less than one-third the distance required by the positive unit above.

F. H. Richardson

A CASE OF ARBITRATION OR JUST ARBITRARINESS?

AT LEAST ONCE each year we witness what all too often amounts to a battle between exhibitors and projectionists' unions, for which there would seldom be necessity did each side substitute reason and common sense for arrogance, and greed for gain. Moreover, I venture the assertion that were this done, and both sides entered into wage discussions with intent to be fair, there would in the main be ultimate gain for both sides, considered over a term of years, as compared with the net results of the battle plan.

I joined the labor movement in either the fall of 1893, or the spring of 1894, when at the tender age of 17 I was accepted into the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen. Thereafter I was actively identified with labor union activities until along about 1925 or thereabouts, when I withdrew for the reason that as a writer it seemed best to be in a position to discuss either or both sides of labor questions impartially.

Since that time 35 local unions have conferred honorary membership upon me, two have issued gold card honorary memberships, and one (Winnipeg, Manitoba) a gold life membership card. I set this forth merely as evidence that I am, or at least should be, in a position to discuss relations between employer and employe, or employers and unions, with at least some degree of understanding.

When first I became a union man fifty years ago, unions were just beginning to acquire some very small degree of recognition. There then was need for strikes and physical battle. Employers, up to that time, had had everything pretty much their own way; hence they resented any suggestion to discuss working conditions with an employe organization. They were willing only to enter into arguments over wages and working conditions with individual employes, holding over their heads an if-you-don't-like-it-you-can-quit axe, ready to fall in case the argument ended otherwise than in favor of the employer. Therefore the only course open to unions was to fight, and fight we did.

Those days have passed, thanks be, though there still is an occasional battle. The union now is a universally recognized institution, which employers have learned, willingly or not, they must deal with. That occasional battles still persist is due almost entirely to the fact that one side or the other, or both, refuse to cede points that calm consideration and common sense would tell them should be ceded.

What I mean by the foregoing is that too often both men and employers enter wage discussions with the idea of getting everything possible, utterly regardless of fairness, right or justice. The employer seeks to argue or beat down the men to the lowest possible point, regardless of the fact that he may well know what he finally may get is not fair—also without regard to its final effect in making men dissatisfied and therefore not inclined to produce the best results. On the other hand the union representative too often is more interested in getting every possible thing, thus making a good "showing," regardless of the possible fact that he well knows what he finally secures is unfair in that it will impose an almost unbearably heavy burden on the employer.

Surely all this is unnecessary, and in the end bad business for both sides. While it is very true that in many cases a wage scale must impose too heavy a burden on some badly managed theatres, or upon some theatres that are unable to get sufficient business at adequate prices, that cannot be helped. In my opinion wage scales should be considered by selecting what seems to be an average theatre of the class being considered. Not one doing capacity business, or the extreme opposite. The scale should be based upon ability of such average theatres to pay, and without an attempt to gouge out the very last possible cent. In the end it has been my observation that a disposition to deal fairly and justly gets more than does the attempt to grab everything in sight, and that goes both ways.

UNFAIR QUESTIONS IN LICENSE TEST

FROM A PROJECTIONIST located in Georgia, a considerable distance from Atlanta, comes this communication:

"This is my first letter, but it will not be my last. Am a constant reader of the 'Bluebook School' in MOTION PICTURE HERALD and your BETTER THEATRES articles. I find your writings to be of good benefit. May I ask your opinion concerning certain questions that were asked a friend of mine who applied for license in Atlanta and was refused a license? Do you consider them fair?

"First, 'Explain in detail the Hall & Connolly Type HC10 arc lamp.' Second, 'Explain the operation of the new Suprex acr.' Third, 'Explain how sound-on-film is recorded and reproduced.' Fourth, 'Give three ways an arc may be fed automatically.' Fifth, 'Draw a diagram of a full-wave rectifier.' Sixth, 'Draw a diagram of a one-stage audio amplifier.'

"These questions are just a few of many. Questions five and six are to be very simple (in spare time I am a radio repair man), but many excellent projectionists know nothing about drawing diagrams of sound systems or parts thereof. Questions one, two and three I regard as foolish and unfair. I have been told by some Atlanta projectionists that they could not pass the examination now being given."

I would not consider any of these questions foolish, but would regard some of them as ill-judged and others as decidedly unfair. The first question demands a detailed description and analysis of one make of arc lamp equipment. If this is to be demanded at all, it should include all arc lamps used for projection. Had the examiner instead asked a question something like this it would have been entirely unobjectionable: What various things should be very carefully looked after when using high-intensity, high-amperage arc light sources for projection? Or, what relation has crater area of an arc light to amount of light produced? Or, given a light brilliancy of 160 c.p. per square mm. of crater area, what is the difference in total light production between a crater 0.25*-inch and a crater* 0.50*-inch in diameter?* Or, what causes the difference in light quality or tone between a high- and a low-intensity light course? Or, name the various light sources available for projection work. Or, explain why the new Suprex carbons produce such brilliant screen illumination when the carbons are of such small diameter.

Such questions deal with things the projectionist should know, or at least have a fair knowledge of. It is his business to know them. If he does not, he has neglected his business, since the information is available to him. However, a very competent projectionist might be wholly unable to explain in detail some one individual lamp equipment with which he has not actually worked.

As to explaining the operation of the new Suprex lamp, thousands of projectionists have as yet never even seen one and, anyhow, the question is not fair, even though general information about that light source has been laid before them. But all projectionists should be able to answer the question as I have stated it.

As to explaining how sound-on-film is recorded and reproduced—well, that is rather needless, is it not? There are so very many other questions of a more practical nature insofar as has to do with projection. And why question four? If it read, give detailed explanation as to how projector arc lamp carbons are automatically fed toward each other in such manner that a practically constant arc length is maintained, it would be a highly practical examination question.

While questions five and six are not foolish, they are very unfair and not properly a part of such an examination. Drawing such diagrams is an engineer's job. I venture the assertion that not one projectionist in a hundred could draw such a diagram, nor is it any part of his business to know how to do so. Were this the question: Explain the action of a full-wave and a half-wave rectifier, it would be legitimate.

Assuming the questions to be correctly stated, it would seem that the Atlanta examination should be revised, and rather sharply. I am a firm believer in thoroughness in projection, but the bread and butter of men, women and children depends upon the ability of the men to get employment, therefore examinations should be very carefully guarded from questions that are in any way unfair. Questions should deal only with such things as competent projectionists may reasonably be expected to answer. They should be largely confined to questions dealing with practical work in projection and explanations of such things as rotating shutter action, intermittent movement action and its speed with relation to passage of light and to flicker; why increased current produces additional light (that might bring out some surprising answers); what various effects dirty lenses have and why; why low-intensity lamps produce so much more light per watt than do the old style or even high-intensity arc; the action of the exciter lamp, its optical system and the photocell; just what current "amplification" really consists of; what an amplifier vacuum tube consists of and how it operates; why the utmost cleanliness of sound apparatus is essential to good results; how film should be cared for while in a theatre projection room; the essential features of proper rewinding of film; the essentials of a perfect film splice—and other questions of a practical nature, varying the questions, however, with each examination.

OPERATING DATA SHOULD BE SUPPLIED

FROM NEBRASKA comes this message: "Our manager is going to purchase two Sterling lamps. I have been unable to find the name and address of the makers of these lamps in BETTER THEATRES, or any information about them anywhere—the kind and size of carbons, distance center of mirror to aperture, kind of mirror, distance center of mirror to light source. And as the lamps are second-hand I am afraid no instructions will accompany them.

"We now are using low-intensity lamps, RCA sound (P.G. 30). The house seats less than 900. We are going to use copper disc rectifiers, concerning which I also am unable to get any information at all, and the manager refuses to supply any data except what I have told you. I naturally want to get enough dope so that I can handle the equipments efficiently when they are installed. Where can I get the new Bluebook?"

You can order the new Bluebook from the Quigley Book Shop, 1790 Broadway, New York City. Price $5.25. It will give you complete information on copper disc rectifiers. You will be able to obtain full instructions from the manufacturers of the Sterling lamp.

Your manager is pursuing a wrong course. If he proposes to install new and different equipments, he should see to it that you are provided, in advance, with every possible bit of information concerning them. However, aside from proper connections there is little information you need about the new copper disc rectifiers. They require no attention whatsoever except to keep them free from dust and dirt and to inspect them occasionally—say, once in 90 days—to see that their clamping bolt nuts are all tight.

Managers should realize that in order to handle a light source equipment or anything else efficiently and well it is necessary that the equipment be thoroughly understood by the projectionist. It is therefore good management to see to it that the projectionist is, as far as possible, well posted on both the theory upon which equipments depend for their operation, and the practical side of operation—how to so handle the equipment so that the best possible results will be had, and had at the lowest possible cost.

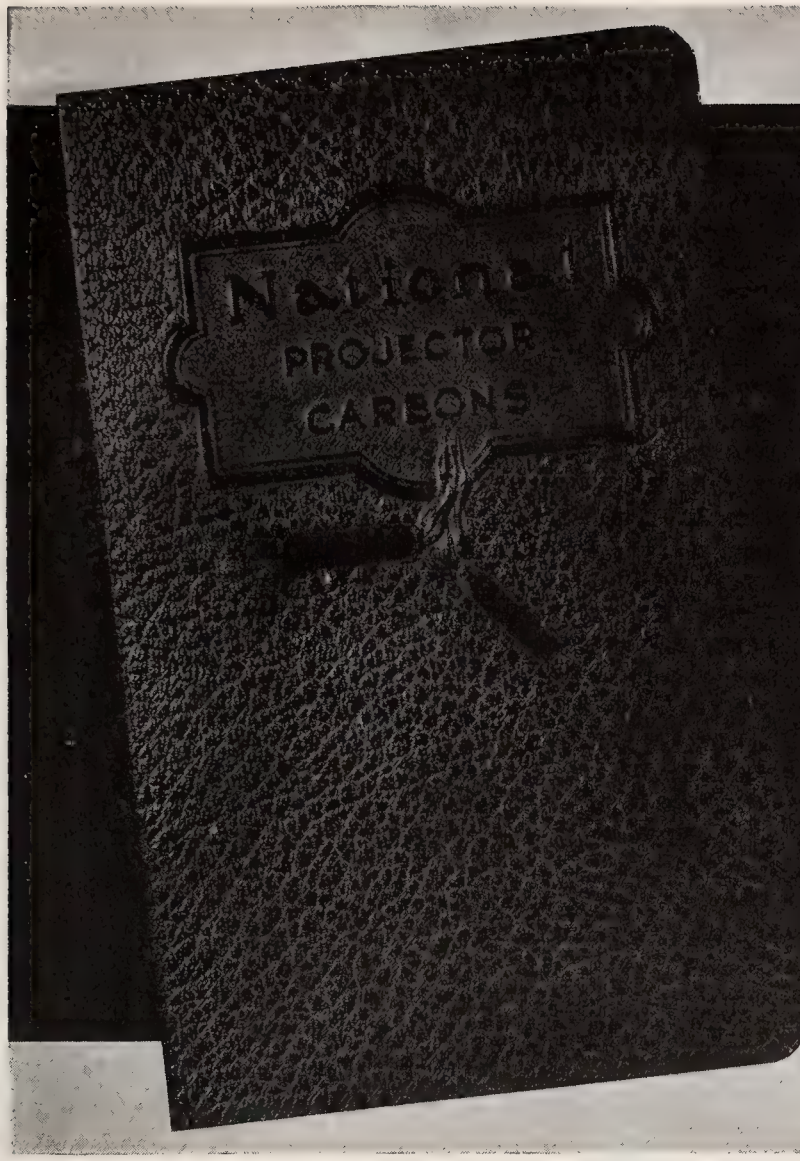
KINDS OF FILTERS AND WHAT THEY DO

JOHN L. GREGERSON of Wilmington, N. C., asks, "Will you please explain exactly what a low-pass, a high-pass and a band-pass filter is? Just what do they really do?"

A high-pass filter is an electrical network that will either largely reduce the value of, or wholly exclude, all frequencies below a predetermined value. In other words, it will permit only frequencies above a certain value to pass through a circuit which it controls.

A low-pass filter is exactly the opposite, permitting only frequencies below a certain predetermined value to pass.

A band-pass filter is a network so constructed that it excludes frequencies above and below certain values.



There also is what is known as a "narrow band filter," which is a band filter that passes only frequencies of a very narrow range, excluding all those above or below the predetermined points. However, please understand that when I say "excludes all" I do not mean that quite, since close to the dividing line the frequencies said to be "excluded" are usually not quite, but their power is very largely reduced. Those further from the aforesaid line are to all intents and purposes totally cut off.

GRATITUDE—BUT IT WAS HIS IDEA!

T. A. WILKENSON, projectionist of the Alamo theatre in Belleville, Tex., writes, "Here is what is perhaps your first letter from a projectionist not containing a question—the letter I mean—though probably later ones will. I cannot remember when I first began reading your Comments, but believe you me I've not missed one since. Also from friend employer I borrowed a Bluebook, issue of 1927, which has helped me a lot. In fact, to show you how much I think of the old one, I attach a P.O. money order for $5.25 for the new edition.

"I have been trying to project motion pictures and sound for a little more than five years, but must admit it has been just trying. But at last I have, because of your writings, come to realize (I think I do realize at last) the importance of projection as a profession. At least I know some of the differences between motion picture-sound projection and machine operation.

"I am proud to say that our small theatre in a small town (population, 2,000) enjoys the reputation of being competently

The National Projector Carbon Handbook is a practical treatise on the carbon arc as applied to projection. It is prepared for the purpose of giving the projectionist the information needed to secure efficient operation, freedom from trouble, and maximum intensity and quality of screen illumination from projection lamp equipment.

The third edition of this popular Handbook is a revision and enlargement of previous editions. Chapters have been added on the new Suprex and A.C. High Intensity Arcs. The basic principles of the carbon arc are discussed in detail and instructions are given for correct arc operation in every type of projection lamp.

"As I said, this letter contains no questions. It is more in the nature of a letter of thanks or appreciation for the invaluable help your Comments and the HERALD questions and answers have been to me. And now for another matter.

"In the July 27, 1935 issue of BETTER THEATRES, in your Comments, I read the announcement made by 'Uncle Carl' Laemmle of Universal, that he would pay $50 for any suggestion from any projectionist that seemed to have value for improvement in Universal film. In September I had a brain storm, sent in a suggestion, and on November 10 back came a perfectly good check for $50 and a letter from Mr. Laemmle himself. And believe me, Mr. Richardson, I am certainly proud of that letter. As for the money, I feel that you deserve the credit more than I do and I wish I might adequately express my sincere gratitude. Words are not at all adequate, though, but maybe the Blue-book order will anyhow help a little."

Brother, you owe nothing to me. I do my job and try to do it well. If you do your job well, as it seems you do, that is the best form of gratitude you can show me. It was you who had the energy and ambition to act on Mr. Laemmle's offer.

SCREEN WIDTH AND GOOD VISION

F. L. BRYANT of Durant, Oklahoma, writes, "In a recent discussion there was much uncertainty as to just what is best, so like the good parson turns to his Bible, we turn to you.

The company we work for is building a new theatre in which the architect's plan calls for a screen 20x15 feet. Auditorium dimensions are 72 feet from screen to last row of seats below, and 92 feet to last row in balcony. Screen to front row of seats, 16 feet. Width of auditorium, 48 feet. Proscenium opening, 30 feet.

"Possibly I am wrong, but according to my views a 20-foot screen is too large. It could and should be much smaller. Please set forth the dope in this matter. My heartiest congratulations for the wonderful work you are doing. May 1936 be even better to you than you hope for."

Thanks, brother. Space is restricted, so let's get at the problem. You are perfectly right. Your company would do well to cut down the size (width) of that screen image to, at the very most, 18 feet. Sixteen would be still better. What sort of view is going to be had of a 20-foot screen image by people in those front seats—especially the end ones? And what purpose does this large size serve?

A well illuminated 16-foot screen image will be perfectly visible in all its details to all persons of normal eyesight at 92 feet, and it will appear very much better to those in the front part of the auditorium than would one 20 feet wide. The commonest kind of common sense should tell any one that a reduction of size will improve the appearance of a screen image from the front part of the theatre—any theatre. The only question, then, is can all picture details be seen from the rear seats, and you may take it from me they can in this case, always assuming the screen to be well illuminated—not over-illuminated, but with, say, 13 foot-candles at the screen center.

And is it not perfectly plain that with equal light on both, the 16-foot screen image will be far more brilliantly illuminated than would the 20-footer. Given a certain amount of total light, in one case it must be spread over a very much larger area than in the other. You can figure it out for yourselves.

Architects, no matter how capable they may be in planning theatres, are expert in projection problems, yet they too often go right ahead and stipulate picture size, etc., which is often accepted and a great deal of damage done.

OPERATION OF INDUCTION MOTORS

JOHN C. BALLINGER of St. Paul, Minn., asks, "Will you be good enough to explain, in detail, the application of power by induction as applies to electric motors? I have examined electric text books, but find myself unable to understand the very complicated explanations therein contained."

That is the trouble with too many text books. The book and its text usually is quite all right, but all too often of little or no value to any except men with technical training, which is something the great majority of theatre men lack. However, I fear the question you ask cannot be completely answered in any very simple fashion. Many different people have written complete volumes in explanation of the various characteristics of induction motors. It is therefore obviously quite impossible to enter into any comprehensive analysis of the matter in my Comments. Moreover I believe that did I attempt any such thing, it would only serve to confuse you and call down upon my head the very just criticism you have made of text books.

I believe you come mostly into contact with what is known as "squirrel cage" induction motors. I shall answer the question along the lines suggested by the Westinghouse engineering department, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Whenever a voltage is impressed upon a coil, current flows in that coil, and that current causes a magnetic field to be produced. In polyphase induction motors the line voltage is connected to a series of coils in the stator, and these coils are so connected together and to the line that the resulting magnetic field tends to rotate around the rotor.

If a magnetic field cuts or moves across any conducting material it will induce a voltage in that material, therefore current will tend to flow in or through it. This is sometimes referred to as inducing a voltage or current in the material, for the current is not brought there by any electrical connection, but is induced by a magnetic field.

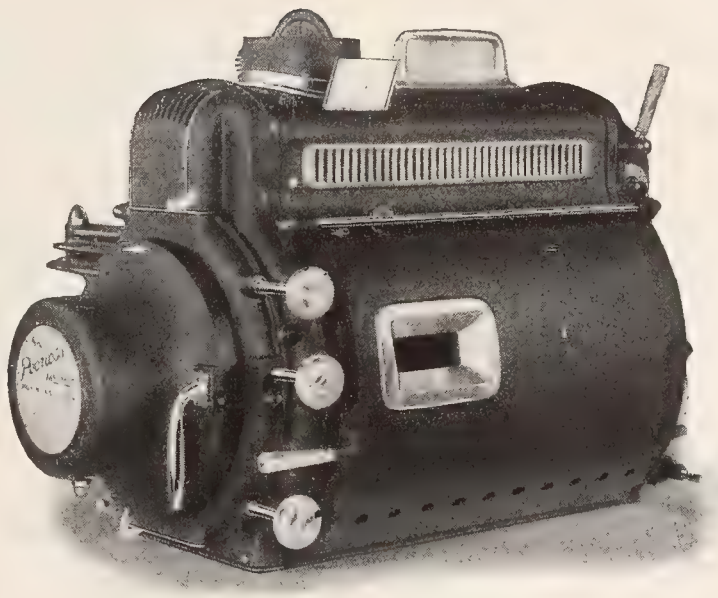
A "squirrel cage" induction motor has a rotating element, usually termed the "rotor," which has conducting material laid in slots around its cylindrical surface. This conducting material may be bars of copper, aluminum or any other suitable material. These bars are connected to end rings. A variation employed is insulated copper coils connected to slip rings. In either case the magnetic field set up by the current flowing through the stator windings rotates so that it cuts the conductors of the rotor, thus inducing voltage and causing current to flow through them.

Now whenever a conductor carrying current is placed in a magnetic field, there is a force caused to act against the conductor, which tends to cause it to move through the said field. In the case of an induction motor a field has been set up by connecting the line voltage to the stator winding. A current has thus been caused to flow through the rotor conductors by the voltage induced in them by the stator current. Now this current must of course flow through the magnetic field set up by the stator. As a result of all this there is a force tending to move the rotor conductors, which, since the rotor conductors are located in slots in the rotor itself, must cause the rotor itself to move and it is this force that gives power to induction motors.

MORE PROTECTION AGAINST PITTING

MANUFACTURERS of light sources using reflectors have, in their newer equipments, adopted pretty generally a shield designed to protect the reflector from incandescent carbon particles when the arc is struck. It is in the form of a piece, usually of some heat resisting metallic composition, attached to a conveniently located handle by means of which it may be lowered between reflector and positive crater before the arc is struck, and raised out of the way when its purpose has been accomplished. It is good, so far as it goes, but there lies the trouble. It doesn't go far enough.

Reflectors now in use are rather costly bits of equipment. They may now be had with a positive guarantee for six months, save only so far as has to do with pitting. The shields now in use protect the top and center of the mirror from pitting, but not their lower outer portion. I have myself examined reflectors pretty badly pitted at these points, notwithstanding the fact that the shield was, the projectionists averred, always used when striking the arc.



The point I am getting at is just this: The shields as now used help a lot. That is admitted. But I am unable to see any reasonable reason why they could not be so made that they would protect the entire mirror surface. So far as that is con-

HIGH INTENSITY LAMP

BUY QUALITY!

IT IS WISEST, EVENTUALLY

Understanding experience, advanced design and creative engineering have earned for Peerless their traditional reputation of superiority.

The Peerless Magnarc is the only low voltage high intensity lamp that is the same today as it was when first put on the market and yet Peerless is still far advanced in design.

If you did not purchase Peerless Magnarcs—what are your orphan lamps worth now?

Answer this question fairly and you have undeniable proof that—Real economy lies not in a low first cost or can be had in any other lamp.

cerned, by altering the shape of the lamphouse top a bit, a shield in curved form could be installed, I believe, to cover the whole reflector. This would cost a little more, yes, but light wasted through reflector pitting costs money, too.

NEW BOTTLES AND STALE WINE

IN THE NEW YORK Herald-Tribune of Sunday, December 22, appeared an article descriptive of the new theatre now in process of erection to replace the old Rialto, Times Square, New York City, that in its turn some years ago replaced the famous old Hammerstein theatre that played a notable part in both stage and motion picture history.

The said article should have been captioned, "Everything New but the Projectors." A portion of it read as follows:

"All equipment in this theatre will be new except the projection machines. There was quite a fuss about those. Mayer, who had watched those machines run 24 hours daily in the old 'hit' days, insisted that they remain. After all he knew they could take the strain of the grind."

I know it's incredible, but there it is. A new theatre from the ground up, erected on as costly a piece of ground, per unit area, as could probably be found anywhere on earth, the entire income from both building, its equipment and the land wholly dependent upon what comes from two second-hand projectors that have withstood the grind of an all-day show for years! If Mr. Mayer felt such an attachment for those projectors, it would have seemed better to give them a long deserved rest. If he felt the need for economy, it would seem that some more appropriate way might have been found to exercise it.

This theatre is located in the very center of our theatre capital. It will be visited by people from everywhere, who will expect it to be representative of the best in motion picture theatre technique. Moreover, retaining those old out-of-date and already badly worn projectors is unfair to whomever will be placed in charge of projection in that theatre. Playing to critical audiences he will be expected to perform the impossible. In ancient times, we are told, good bricks could not be made without straw. Well, the modern projectionist, no matter how competent, cannot produce the best results with worn projectors that also lack all those many improvements and refinements that have been added during the past few years.

It is queer how often economy gets no consideration whatsoever when a new theatre is being built, or an old one remodeled, until the projection room is reached. Then, it being removed from the gaze of the public, economy suddenly jumps into the saddle and rides rough-shod over many things, to the later sorrow of the box office and the present sadness and worry of the men who are asked to produce high-class projection without proper means for doing it.

Were I building a new theatre I would plan the projection room first. I would plan its equipment layout and use whatever money was left to produce as excellent and comfortable a theatre as possible. Thus I would feel I was placing my financial horse before and not behind the theatre cart.

VACATIONS WITH PAY, NEW LOEW PRACTICE

RECENTLY IN NEW YORK, Lester Isaac, director of projection of Loew's Theatres, called a meeting of projectionists to announce what amounts to a revolutionary change in the wage scale signed recently by Loew's and Motion Picture Projectionist's Local Union 306, IATSE & MPMO. The new scale gives Loew projectionists one week vacation each year, with full pay, and that certainly is a novelty.

In addition to this there was extended discussion of a plan to have all men take from one to three weeks additional vacation, without pay, each year, in order to provide work for the large number of members of Local 306 that now have no work. Stress was laid upon the desirability of taking at least one week vacation at once, in order that the idle men might have a few dollars for Christmas.

Mr. Isaac, as usual at such meetings, spoke to the men, telling them plainly it was his intention to discharge those of the men who permitted faults in the projection work to creep in through neglect, carelessness, lack of knowledge, personal difficulties and petty fault-finding. Reasonable allowance will be made, said he, but told the meeting plainly that a small percentage of the men do not live up to the standards demanded by Loew's.

HE FINDS THE "BOOKS ARE CLOSED"

A NEW YORK projectionist writes, "After reading your Comments in BETTER THEATRES for some while I am impressed with the idea that you are one, and possibly the only, person before whom I may parade my trouble and ask questions with the expectation of receiving truthful, unbiased answers.

"I am an experienced, licensed projectionist in New York City. I presume you know, without my telling you, that the salary and working conditions of a union and a non-union man are not at all the same, and that the latter gets the worst of it. Now, Mr. Richardson, I have applied for membership in Local Union 306, only to be told the 'books are closed and we don't know when they will be opened.' This, in fact, has been the answer for three long years. I am very certain I am just as capable in my work as many of the union men; also I am for the union. I believe in it. Could you then offer any advice as to what I might do?

"My other question is: Will television replace or affect the projectionist in any appreciable manner? Do you think it advisable to study television?"

Yes, Local 306 books are closed. The membership has been over-loaded, many of the surplus being none too competent. Local 306 has many high-grade members who must themselves lay off two or three days a week to make employment for idle members, some of whom have exactly as much business in a projection room as the proverbial bull in a china shop.

I have been told, on good authority, that an effort is going to be made to remedy this state of affairs in a manner that will eliminate the incompetent surplus. Speed the day! I know just how a competent projectionist feels under such conditions. Local 306 has a real president and a corps of officials that is working with him.

As to television: Who can say? I would not undertake even to offer an opinion. But just the same, were I an active projectionist I most certainly would try to keep posted on television and its progress so far as possible. If or when it finally arrives, how or how much it will affect the projectionist no one now can say. That lies wholly in the future. But why assume that it would greatly affect the theatre at all—at any rate, after the novelty had worn off?

DIFFERENCE IN SOUND BETWEEN PROJECTORS

J. E. LOVVORN of the Palace theatre in Rowdon, Ga., writes, "I have followed your articles in MOTION PICTURE HERALD and BETTER THEATRES for quite some time, finding them both interesting and helpful. I now have a problem I am unable to solve.

"This theatre has two Simplex projectors equipped with Peerless low-intensity lamps and Mellaphone sound. The trouble is that the sound from projector No. 1 (right-hand one) is not as strong as that from projector No. 2. I use more volume and more voltage, yet it does not seem to give as good sound as does the No. 2 projector; also, when I use the automatic arc control the speakers pick up interference. Have tried to locate the source of the trouble, but up to date without success. No. 2 projector works perfectly in every way."

This leaves considerable to be guessed at. "I use more volume and more voltage." Now just what does he mean by "more voltage"? In what way is it applied? As I understand the matter, it is simply that projector No. 2, other things being equal, provides more volume than does No. 1, and noise from the automatic arc control of No. 1 is picked up by the sound circuit.

This latter matter I have referred to the makers of the equipment, though it probably is due to the fact that there is arcing at the motor of No. 1 arc control, though it may be that the shielding of that motor circuit is imperfect. The manufacturer of the equipment doubtless can, and I am sure will, straighten that item out, as I have requested.

And now for the sound trouble. Its source may be in any one of several places. First, if the system uses pre-amps, it may be in one of them—one of its tubes at fault or making poor contact—unless the same equipments are used for both projectors. Probably, however, it lies farther along.

Examine the exciter lamp of No. 1. make sure its contacts are perfect, including socket and lamp base, remembering that "perfect" includes cleanliness. Be certain its filament is not at all sagged and that it is exactly at right angles with the axis of the optical system; also, that it is in exactly the correct position vertically. Next, examine the lens combination of the optical system, making sure that it is free from oil, both inside and out and that on it are no invisible finger prints. Then examine into the position of the light beam at the soundhead aperture, making certain it is exactly in alignment with the slit therein and exactly centered, vertically, thereon. A very small displacement will cut down on sound, both in volume and quality. Examine the slit itself, making sure it is not in any degree clogged with dust or dirt.

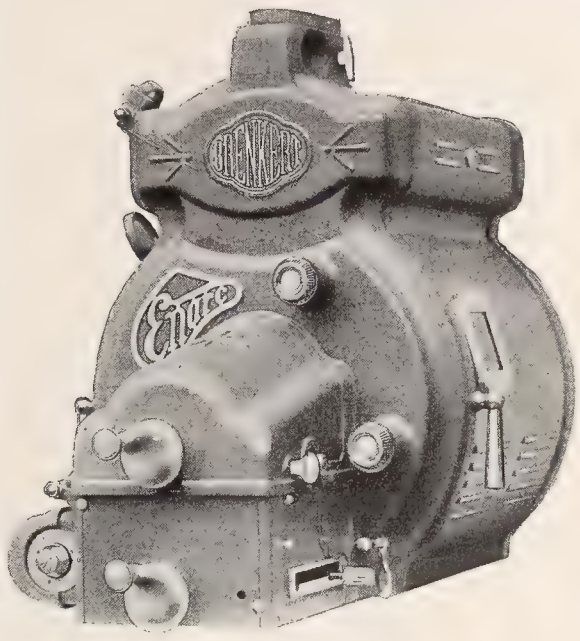
If everything is all right up to here, then go after your No. 1 photocell. See to it that all its connections are clean and electrically perfect. See to it that its active elements are in good condition. In fact, it might be well, before doing anything else, to switch photocells, placing No. 1 on No. 2, and vice versa. If this switches the trouble, that settles it; the photo cell is the goat. Then follow right on to the loudspeaker circuit connection, beyond which it is unnecessary to go, as both projectors use the same circuit from there on.

In fact, when anything of this kind shows up, the only thing to do is start at the first piece of sound apparatus that is not used by both projectors and follow right through to the loudspeaker circuit, carefully examining every connection and every part of every bit of apparatus all along the way, making such tests as may be necessary to ascertain whether or not each item is in perfect condition. I cannot of course describe all the tests required. Your Bluebook of Projection and manufacturer's instructions booklet will provide that information.

LIGHT SOURCES IN SMALL THEATRES

MARTIN G. SMITH of Smith & Beidler Theatres, which owns and operates several playhouses in and around Toledo, Ohio, writes:

"Please refer to pages 276 and 277 of your latest Bluebook of Projection, paragraphs 2 and 7. I would very much appreciate it if you would advise whether or not you would consider as a 'small theatre,' one seating 959, using a 15x20-foot screen, projection distance approximately 120 feet, and one seating 808, with an 18-foot picture, projection distance approximately 100 feet.



"We are using Da-Tone seamless white screens, a.c. lamps, National copper-coated carbons, 8 mm. At times there is considerable flicker noticeable in these two theatres, and I am wondering whether or not the a.c. lamp is the one you refer to as 'one new type of high-intensity alternating current light source' in paragraph 3. Please let us have such comment as you may be in position to offer in this connection."

Yes, the light source referred to is a.c., which when it was first sprung on theatre folk, enjoyed considerable favor. Exhibitors and projectionists who follow my Comments may have noticed that I was never very favorable toward it.

No, I most emphatically would not consider the theatres you describe as "small" houses in the sense that term is used in the Bluebook citation. In such theatres as those you specify, I would, first of all, reduce the larger screen to 18 feet. Assuming these to have seating space in excess of 120 feet from screen to rear seats, with the same light source a brighter screen would result, and an 18-foot picture is quite visible as to its details from 120 feet, provided it be illminated up to, say, 12 or 15 foot-candles at the screen center.

I would substitute d.c. Suprex light sources for the a.c., regarding the a.c. installation as an experimental error for which no one is to blame.

And now as to the flicker. Presumably you have competent projectionists in each of the two theatres in question. If so, they should be able to advise you as to whether or not it is a.c. flicker, or flicker due to other causes. If it is a.c. flicker, it should be visible all the time, though most visible, very possibly, only in the lighter scenes. Ask your projectionists to show you what they have studied that bears upon flicker troubles. Don't accept mere statements. Demand to see the part of such text books, etc., as deals with flicker. If they have not studied such matters, you have every right to demand to know why they have not, since without such knowledge they cannot possibly lay claim to being really competent projectionists.

Presumably there are theatres in Toledo that have d.c. light sources using the new Suprex carbons. Visit those theatres and compare the results with your own a.c. results, including difference in light tone.

But you must remember that results in one theatre cannot always be duplicated in another because of differences in auditorium illumination, amount of light striking the screen from sources other than the lens, glare spots, etc.

THE PROBLEMS OF SCREEN ILLUMINATION

L. A. EDWARDS, general manager of Prudential Long Island Theatres, writes, "I recently purchased a sight meter in New York City to the end that I might measure the amount of light delivered to the screen in our various theatres. I now find I have started something that has greater depth than I had suspected.

"In making tests I hold the instrument against the screen, its face toward the light source (lens), thus obtaining a reading of the amount of light being delivered to the screen. But the results vary so widely that I now am having trouble deciding just what illumination really is needed—just what is the maximum and the minimum requirement and what to expect from various types of lamp.

"For example, in the Bayshore theatre we recently installed two new Suprex lamps. I got a reading of 18 foot-candles at the screen center, and only 11 a distance of 1 foot from the sides, which seems to me to be a terrific drop in evenness of illumination. In this house we are using from 60 to 65 amperes at the arc.

"In the Edwards theatre, at East Hampton, and in the Greenport theatre, both of which are equipped with low-intensity lamps, I get 10 candle-power at center, and 9 at each side, which I regard as a very fair distribution of light. Each of these theatres uses about 28 amperes of current. The picture illumination is fair.

"At the Regent theatre in Bayshore, also using the same make of low-intensity, I got 7 c.p. at center, and 5 at sides. This house has a 110-foot projection distance, with a 16-foot screen image, using 30 amperes at the arcs. Have tried different types of carbon and the condenserless reflector; also have checked the entire equipment all over, but have been unable to get the lamps to produce in excess of 7 foot-candles.

"Have you ever made any study of what candle-power a screen should have, and what is considered a fair distribution of light on the screen surface? I can understand that many factors may enter into the matter in various theatres, but surely there should be some standard by which one may be guided. Any information you may be able to supply will be highly appreciated.

"Permit me to take this opportunity to congratulate you upon your latest Bluebook of Projection. I carry it with me at all times and consider it an absolute necessity to intelligent work. This industry owes you a great deal for your untiring efforts for the improvement of projection."

Many thanks. And now to your problem. You say you held the instrument with its face to the lens. That gives you the illumination reaching various sections of your screen, but imparts no knowledge of what the screen itself is doing, and therefore what the effect is to audience. The 18 c.p. measured directly from the lamp seems very low. Using 65 amperes, it should reach pretty close to 15, measured from the screen, I would say, but certainly could not do anything like that if the measurement you quote is correct.

As to the variation in light intensity, if you will turn to page 126 of your new Bluebook of Projection, you will there observe an actual measurement of light intensity of a light beam at a point 3 inches from the projector aperture, on the projection lens side, of course. If you will then conduct the following experiment you will, I think, understand why this is so.

Thin down a little coach painter's black (obtainable from any paint supply store) with a little turpentine and paint the surface of one of your lamp mirrors black. (It may afterward be washed off with turpentine, and if you are careful not to get "turps" on the back of the mirror, it will be wholly undamaged.) Install this black mirror, and using a needle point, near the outer edge of it scratch a tiny hole in the paint—a very small one, mind you. Clean the glass in this hole carefully. Strike on arc and project the light from it to the cooling plate. You will find it to be a cone, and that the base of the cone of light will only partly enter the aperture, the rest falling upon the cooling plate, where the light is of course wasted.

Next blacken the hole and make another one an inch nearer the center of the mirror. You will discover the base of this cone overlaps the aperture considerably more. Make other holes, each nearer the mirror center, until finally you make one as near the center as you can, whereupon you should find all the light to enter the aperture.

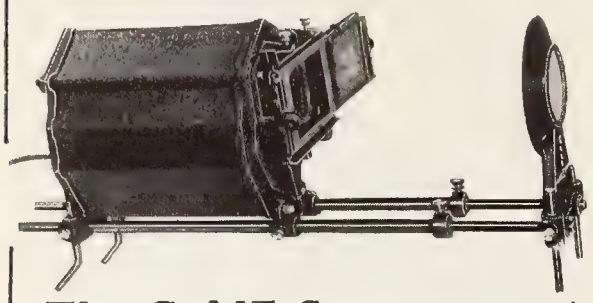
Analyzed, this means that all the light from the center of the reflector or condenser enters the aperture, hence the center of the screen image is fully illuminated with the strongest light from the light source and the light most free from discoloration by chromatic aberration, but that since all the light from other zones of the converging element (mirror or converging lens of condenser), it necessarily follows that the film image thereupon is not evenly illuminated, as is shown in the Bluebook illustration cited.

In some of the very best theatres on Broadway, the Paramount for example, I found an amazing difference in illumination of various zones of the screen, amounting, as I remember it, to 17 c.p. at the center and 6 at the corners.

But another element enters. Examine figure 41A, page 127 of your new Bluebook, and its accompanying text. You will see that under the condition there shown (which too often obtains) the screen illumination cannot possibly be even.

What is the remedy for all this, you ask? There is no complete one, but nevertheless much may be done to even things up. Unless the projection lens working distance be very long, lens diameters may be had that will admit all the light, provided the distance of condenser or mirror from the aperture be not too short and the diameter of the mirror not too great.

If you try the paint experiment at the Bayshore and the Edwards theatres, it probably will enlighten you, especially if by blowing smoke into the light you follow it into the projection lens. I think probably you will find the Bayshore mirror to be larger in diameter than the one at the Edwards and probably nearer the aperture as well. Following the light by means of smoke should provide you with plenty to think about. Figures 39 and 40 of your new Bluebook are illustrative of the effect of diameter and distance of condenser or mirror from aperture.



As to the amount of screen illumination that is best in any theatre, there is and can be no set rule that will apply in all cases unless auditorium lighting and maximum viewing distance be standardized, and that last probably never will be done. The effect of screen illumination upon the eyes at any given distance is dependent to some extent upon the contrast between screen illumination and the illumination of the screen surrounding area as well upon the amount of extraneous light falling upon the screen image itself, which latter falls alike upon all parts of the image. The whites are not affected in any appreciable degree, but the blacks are made gray in proportion to the amount of light, and shadows are reduced in value. Extraneous light injures the contrast of which the screen image is made.

It would require pages to discuss this matter in full detail. In general I would say that where the viewing distance runs up to say 150 feet, the illumination at screen center should be perhaps as high as 15 to 17 c.p., though that brilliancy will be very hard on the eyes of those farther down front. If the maximum viewing distance does not exceed 125 feet, I believe 13 to 15 c.p. at the screen center is enough. If the maximum distance does not exceed 75 feet, 12 c.p. is sufficient. Below 12 c.p. I would not risk, as loss of too much photographic detail would result with dark to medium prints.

Please understand, however, that these estimates merely express my own opinions on the subject. What is the proper screen illumination presents perhaps the toughest, most complicated problem with which theatre folk are confronted. My own estimates are based upon reduction of auditorium illumination to the lowest value consistent with comfort and safety of patrons.

WE HEAR FROM THE LONE STAR STATE

LOUIS J. HAJOVSKY, projectionist of El Camop, Texas, writes, "I enjoy your Comments in BETTER THEATRES, and get a big kick out of the letters from projectionists all over the world. They and your answers to them have taught me a great deal. In fact, I have many times intended writing you about my own troubles, but somehow it always got put off and usually some other chap would send in something that was close enough to my own difficulty to permit of my getting a steer from your answer.

"I have been shooting shadows for fourteen years. There are 16,000 photographs to each 1,000 feet of film, therefore if I only project two shows of seven reels each per day, I have shot about 224,000 photos at the screen each day, or about 6,720,000 per month, which totals about 80,640,000 per year, all of which convinces me that I'm some fast shooter. In the fourteen years of my service that figures up to about 1,128,060,000 photographs. Should be able to tell a photograph from a locomotive.

"I am now on a suburban job. Manage to keep my equipment in ship-shape condition. Have matinees every day, seven days a week. Beginning New Year's I am to have a position as projectionist in San Antonio. The hours there won't be so strenuous and the pay will be higher, for all of which I weep me no wet tears.

"I have evolved a sort of tension adjustment that helps some; also a reel end alarm, also a changeover bell signal.

"I receive many prints of which the sprocket holes are perfect on one side and strained more or less badly on the other, which seems to bear out your own contention that the aperture tension is sometimes much stronger on one side than the other."

TREATMENTS FOR SOME SOUND ILLS

HAPPY JONES, chief of projection of the Carolina theatre in Anderson, S. Car., comes forward with one of the most helpful, interesting letters I have received for quite some while. He says:

"May I offer a few suggestions to the projectionist who asked for ideas recently for curing distortion, flutter and other foreign noises that had from time to time come through his De Forest equipment? In my opinion it is largely because of lack of close attention to details that such faults appear.

"Distortion may have its seat in any one of a dozen places. First, inspect the soundhead mechanism. Be sure all rollers operate freely, which means proper lubrication and cleanliness; also that they are not permitted to wear too much or there will be trouble. Be sure the shoe plates in the slit block are not so badly cut that they throw the light beam out of line. By that it is meant that after a time these plates, which are removable, will become worn or 'cut' by the film. They should be replaced before this occurs. [Brother Jones says about every six months, but I have changed that for the reason that six months might mean double the time of use in one theatre that it would in another.—F. H. R.]

"Be sure the tension springs on the two roller units are in good shape. See to it that the soundhead mechanism is kept scrupulously clean. That last is very important. Dirt and sound don't and won't mix well. Be sure the exciter lamp sockets are clean—particularly as to oil; also that the electrical connection between socket and lamp is perfect. Keep the whole exciter lamp optical system carefully checked for focus and alignment.

"Secondly, there could be a leaky condenser in the PEC amplifier, in which event a bad case of distortion may be expected. Check the PEC often and keep its tube prongs clean, using a hard rubber eraser for the purpose.

"Thirdly, check up on your fader frequency and keep its points clean.

"Fourthly, check all soldered connections in all outlet boxes for possible trouble. If, as in my case, lead-sheathed cable is used, it is possible the insulation is faulty or entirely dead. You may determine this by the usual tests. If it is, the entire cable must be replaced. It is caused by bad connections and oil will break down the insulation qualities in any form of cable or shielded line if the growth starts inside the shielding. It is very similar to electrolysis in a water line, destroying or decomposing the insulation.

"Fifth, check up on the main amplifier, ascertaining whether or not all the tubes are in good condition and all condensers free from leakage. Don't get the idea that because everything is okay today it will remain that way indefinitely. It probably won't! You are presumed to be a projectionist, not an I-guess-it-iser. Be sure the line voltage is what it is presumed to be and that is stays put when the full load is on; also, that all switches on the main amplifier make not good but practically perfect contact.

"Sixth, are your dry cell batteries up to correct voltage? Are they making good contact and are their tops free from dust. Collections of dust can raise hell with sound, you know. Ditto for the wet batteries. Check the photo cells and their voltage with relation to the cells and plate in the PEC amplifier. It also is highly important that your equipments be perfectly grounded. If that fails you may expect arc control current to be picked up in the sound.

"I don't know, Brother Richardson, whether or not what I have said will have value to the party asking for help. I have been handling DeForest equipment for five years and have had no trouble at all with it, for which I give full credit to you, as I have followed your Bluebook charts and suggestions in BETTER THEATRES to the letter. If all projectionists would get a Bluebook of Projection, really study it and follow all the expert advice and information therein contained, they would seldom have trouble they could not themselves correct.

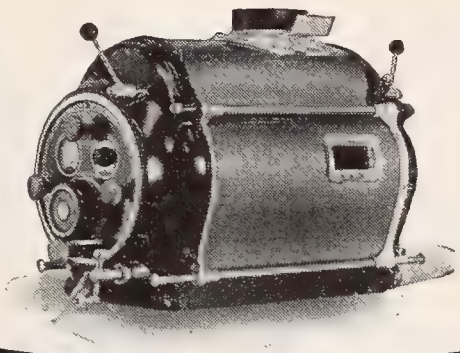
"I want to thank you, Brother Richardson, for the help and encouragement I have received from your various articles in BETTER THEATRES. I might add that my boss stands back of me in everything that will improve projection.

"And now here is an experiment for those who may desire to try out a novelty. Several weeks ago Chief Engineer Peoples, of station WAIM, and I put on a broadcast after the station had signed off for the day and the theatre of course closed. Other projectionists and many managers may be interested when I say we have received letters from all over the South—more than 1,000 of them—concerning the broadcast. Several of them were from projectionists. Here is how we did it.

"We had a preview of 'In Person,' starring Ginger Rogers (we give such previews regularly each Sunday night to a specially invited audience of newspaper men and others). This time, we did it differently, running the picture silent insofar as concerned our own apparatus. We placed a radio on the stage close to the foots, and another in the projection room to act as a monitor.



"Our PEC amps and PE cells work on dry and wet batteries. I disconnected the wires from the input stage of the main amplifier and connected with a telephone wire that led directly to the radio station, whereupon at a given signal that we were on the air, I started the projector. The sound traveled to the station and was sent out over the air, from which it was picked up here by radio for the audience, and for the projection room, too. Its time was perfect to the audience watching the picture. No lag that the eye could discern. I might add the remark that we also projected 'March of Time' and an RKO newsreel. The broadcast lasted two hours. It proved to be a big publicity stunt for the theatre. We used the pre-amps as boosters for the telephone line running to the broadcast station. Please understand clearly that all sound was received both by the audience and in the projection room from the air, through the two radio sets. At the risk of boasting I will say it was as smooth a radio reproduction as I have ever listened to. According to Chief Engineer Peoples it was the first time this has ever been successfully accomplished, taking sound directly from the motion picture projector soundhead. True, broadcasts have been put on from theatres, but they have all used a mike to pick up the sound from the theatre loudspeaker, which means the audience, if any, received sound direct and not by radio; also the quality cannot be so good that way as it was the way we did it."

Some stunt! Both yourself and Chief Engineer Peoples are to be complimented.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

I AM contemplating building a new building for a theatre and would like to have all and any information you can supply me. The lot is 50 feet by 120 feet. Want 600 seats (19 inches). Also a stage to accommodate small shows.—M. M.

The Answer:

THE LOT, being 50x120 feet, is large enough to accommodate a theatre with a seating capacity of 600 on one floor. Arrange the seating layout with a center bank of fourteen seats with aisle on each side and two wall banks of five seats each, making a total of 24 seats across the width of the auditorium. This will require 25 rows of seats, leaving space for a 15-foot lobby and a 10-foot foyer, also a small stage.

The minimum cost of such a theatre, outside of equipment, would be $30,000. This includes general, plumbing, heating, ventilating and electric wiring contracts.

The Question:

WE ARE figuring on putting up a theatre in a town of about 6,000 population. The place that we have is 33 feet wide including the walls, by 155 feet, and we can extend it in length to 200 feet if desired. The height from the floor to the ceiling is 12 feet, and the floor is of hardwood.

Could you inform us if possible what the seating capacity would be for this type of theatre? Also, what the tilting of the floor from the rear of the theatre to the screen would be?

We plan to have a small stage, and the projection room 80 feet from the screen at the top of the ceiling.—J. V. B.

The Answer:

I UNDERSTAND that the lot on which you intend to build a new theatre is 33′ wide and 155′ in length, but you did not state whether there is an alley or court on either side of the lot for exit purposes. I do not think it will be necessary to use the extra 45′ as I fear if you did the auditorium would be too long for its width. I am afraid that a ceiling 12 feet high is entirely too low.

I interpret that it is your plan to suspend the projection room from the ceiling at a distance of 80′ from the screen. This will interfere with the vision lines of the rear part of the auditorium. Why not place this projection room over the foyer? This, however, will require a minimum ceiling height of 16′. On the other hand, should the present ceiling height of 12′ run to the place where you intend to locate the projection room and you will be able to increase the ceiling height from there on, 12′ for ceiling height in rear part of the auditorium will be perfectly all right.

After deducting sufficient space for lobby, foyer, stage, space between first row of seats and stage apron, and wall thickness, there will be room for at least 42 rows of seats. There will be space for 14 seats across the width of the auditorium with wall aisles on each side, so the minimum seating capacity will be 588 seats. The minimum slope of the auditorium floor should be 8′.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

The new Cameo theatre in Tallulah, La., an addition to the group of houses operated by W. W. Page, Jr. The Cameo has a capacity of 700, including a balcony. Architecture and decoration is basically modern. The exterior finish is in stucco. The interior is colorfully painted in patterns suggested by Japanese design, and modernistic lighting fixtures are used throughout. Projectors are Simplex, while the sound system is RCA. Tallulah has a population of 4,500 and has one other theatre. The Cameo is managed by C. J. Hubley, Jr., who previously managed Mr. Page's theatre in Leesville, La.

The Question:

WE HAVE a lot 25x90 feet and would like to build a small house on same. Would like to know the best and cheapest way to build it and how many seats we can get on main floor. Do you think that a balcony would be advisable, if so, how far down should it go and how much extra will it cost?

Would 6 feet on each side of front for toilets be large enough. This will give 12 feet for lobby. Will this be large enough? How much will it cost for a marquee. Would like to have front and marquee made of structural glass, if not too expensive.

Would want brick walls, concrete floors and celotex for ceiling and walls. Could indirect trough lighting be made for ceiling and walls at about the same price as chandeleirs?

As this is our first attempt, we are not familiar as to the cost of architect. What should it cost for plans for a place like I have tried to describe to you?—E. M. I.

The Answer:

A THEATRE of the dimensions you give is really to small to have a balcony. The maximum amount of seats which you will be able to accommodate on one floor will be 200. Six feet on each side of lobby for toilet rooms will be sufficient, but there will not be 12′ left for width of lobby, as allowance should be made for wall thickness. However, 12′ width is enough.

A marquee for such a theatre will cost from $700 up. The construction of a building as per your description is satisfactory. Indirect trough lighting is very effective, but I think too expensive for such a small theatre.

I advise you to use any electric ceiling fixtures—use wall brackets instead.

The customary architectural fee for this type of building is a minimum of 6% of the total cost of the building.

Law for Theatre Operators

bery" protects its holder against loss of valuable articles stolen by a pickpocket thief. These points of the law were decided in the late case of Buckeye v. Strashun, Cincinnati (194 N. E. 384).

CASE

In this case it was shown that a theatre patron together with his wife, entered the Albee Theatre, and on account of the crowd were unable to immediately go into the theatre. They were in the crowd which was held back by a cord and brass bar. The patron and his wife were behind the cord and brass bar, waiting to be ushered into the theatre. While so situated a man forced his way between the patron and his wife, elbowing the wife to one side with one arm, and at the same time pressing his other arm against the upper part of the patron's body. The wife expostulated with the man and asked what he meant by his actions. At that moment the cord was released and the people moved forward, and the patron and his wife went to a seat in the theatre. The patron's clothing was mussed up and disarranged. While arranging his clothing, he noticed his diamond tie pin, which he had worn for thirty years, was gone. There was a hole in the patron's tie, tending to show that the pin had been removed by force. The patron thereupon notified the theatre manager of the loss. The police were called and detectives came, but the pin valued at near $1,000 was not recovered.

The legal question arose whether the testimony given by the patron and his wife was sufficient to convince a jury that a robbery actually had been accomplished while waiting to get into the theatre.

The higher court held that the testimony entitled the theatre patron to a judgment, for the value of the pin, against an insurance company which had issued a policy for protection against "robbery." This court said:

TAX PAYMENT ON LEASED PROPERTY

THE LAW is well settled that under all circumstances a property owner is liable for payment of all taxes and assessments on his property, unless such property is leased under a contract which distinctly obligates the tenant. Moreover, if the lease contract specifies that the tenant shall pay a portion of the taxes and assessments, then the landlord is impliedly obligated to pay the balance.

CASE

For illustration, in Los Angeles v. Consumers, Los Angeles (43 Pac. [2d] 281), it was shown that a company leased its property under a lease contract which specified that the tenant shall pay all taxes of any city, county, or state, or any subdi-

SECTION 12: —The making of any oral or written guarantees concerning the guarantees, recommended applications or recommendations for the service or use of the product of any manufacturer in excess of that given by the manufacturer thereof, which is incapable of performance by the guarantor is an unfair trade practice and is hereby condemned.

vision, which may be lawfully levied or become a lien upon said premises during the term of said lease; and shall also pay any increase in taxes on the lands covered by this lease caused by an increase in the assessed value of such land.

Several years later the tax rate on the property was increased and the legal question arose whether the tenant was liable for payment of the increased taxes. In holding the property owner liable, the court said:

DECISION

"It is elementary that, in the absence of an agreement, the duty to pay all state, municipal, and county taxes and assessments, which during the term of the lease become chargeable upon the premises, is imposed by law upon the landlord. Of course, the tenant may assume such liability, but such liability does not exist unless the lease clearly imposes it upon the tenant."

CORPORATION PARTNERSHIPS

FREQUENTLY the question arises as to what acts, contracts, etc., a corporation may legally perform. Generally speaking, a corporation may do anything authorized by its articles of incorporation providing, of course, no valid laws are violated.

CASE

For example, in Universal Pictures Corporation v. Roy Davidge Film Laboratory, Los Angeles, California (45 Pac. [2d] 1028), the legal question arose whether a corporation may legally form a partnership with another company. In holding in the affirmative, the court said:

"A corporation may enter into a partnership if so authorized by its articles of incorporation. . . . There is nothing in the evidence to indicate that the corporation was not so authorized. The contract was for its benefit and, until the contrary be shown, it will be presumed that it was made in the proper exercise of its corporate powers."

MISREPRESENTATION IN CONTRACTS

IN ALL LEGAL controversies involving written contracts, the courts endeavor to interpret the intended meaning of the contracting parties, and any statement inserted into the contract by one party, which is designed or likely to defraud the other party, renders the contract void and unenforceable. Moreover, where one makes a false representation, not knowing whether it is true or false, he is liable as much as if he knew it to be false.

CASE

For example, in Eutsler v. Mixon (77 S. W. [2d] 655, Galena, Mo.), it was disclosed that a contract specified an incorrect amount but contained a clause that the amount was "estimated" to be correct.

In holding the contract not valid, the court said: "The introduction of the words 'more or less' or 'about' or 'estimated' in a conveyance or contract for conveyance, does not afford a shield against liability for false representation."

DECISION

"It is contended that the judgment was against the weight of the evidence. The accuracy of the doctor's (patron's) testimony given at the trial is challenged as being inconsistent. . . . We have examined the evidence . . . but we do not find the discrepancies to be sufficient to overturn the evidence as given by the doctor. The doctor is quite an elderly man, and there is sufficient in the statements and the evidence given by his wife to support the facts as above briefly recited. . . . Snatching a valuable article from another is always denominated robbery where any force is exercised either to overcome the resistance of the person robbed or in detaching the article taken where it is fastened in some way to the clothing or person of the one robbed."

It is, therefore, quite apparent that theatre owners may protect themselves against suits by theatre patrons for theft of articles of value by pickpocket thieves, if an insurance policy is carried which gives blanket protection against "robbery" of theatre employes and patrons.

Obviously, however, a theatre owner would not be protected by a policy of this nature against loss or theft of the property of theatre patrons, if the disappearance of such property does not result from some force exerted by the thief. For example, in the leading case of Snyder v. Commonwealth (21 Ky. Law Rep. 1538), Louisville, Kentucky, the court said:

"While to pick one's pocket without the use of some force or violence or putting in fear is not robbery, yet if the victim is being pushed or shoved about by the pickpocket or his associates, for the purpose of diverting his attention, and the crime is then accomplished, it is robbery, even if the victim is at the time unaware of his loss."

COMPENSATION IN CASES OF DISEASE

A NUMBER of decisions recently have been rendered by the higher courts as to circumstances under which a theatre employe, who suffers from an occupational disease, is entitled to payment of compensation.

The courts have stated that a great deal of unnecessary controversy has arisen because the State laws in many instances make no special provision for determining the date when disability arises. In most cases this point must be determined by the courts, without guidance by State laws. However, the courts cannot make the law, only interpret it, and if the state law regulating compensation payments does not clearly authorize payment, the court will not render a verdict in favor of the employe.

CASE

For illustration, in North v. Industrial Commission, Milwaukee (258 N. W. 440), it was shown that an employe was discharged when an examining physician rendered a statement to the employer that he was suffering from tuberculosis. Prior to this time he had not suffered any loss of wages by reason of any disability.

The question presented the court was: Is the employe entitled to compensation under a state law which provides that employes are entitled to compensation for injuries sustained while in the employ of the employer?

After the State commission had heard all of the medical testimony, it awarded the employe compensation for an amount over $17,000. The Industrial Commission based its decision on the fact that the employe had "during his employment" been exposed to the disease.

DECISION

However, it is interesting to know that the higher court reversed this and said:

"This court has consistently held that disability occurs within the meaning of the statute when the employe is disabled from rendering further service; that is, when he no longer has the present physical ability to perform his work in the usual and customary way. Unless he is so disabled as to be unable to perform his usual and customary work in the ordinary way during the time of his employment, he sustains no compensable injury even though while in the employment he may have been subjected to exposure which contributed to the end result."

TIME FACTOR IN EMPLOYE DISABILITY

THE COURTS have adopted the view that in some cases the cause of an accident may have been instantaneous, and in others it may have been operating for days, months, or years; and ultimately the "accident" occurs. For example, a workman may work on a given job for years where he regularly has to lift a considerable weight. In the course of time his heart grows weaker and eventually he lifts a similar load and his heart fails and he dies. The medical experts state that he overstrained himself in lifting the load, but the courts say it was an accident arising out of his employment.

CASE

For illustration, in one recent case Beaver v. Morrison-Knudsen Company (41 Pac. [2d] 605), it was shown that a State law does not provide for compensation to employes who have contracted occupational diseases, but specifies compensation payments only for injuries arising from accidents.

An employe who had contracted a disease argued that he was entitled to recover compensation because the disease resulted from inhaling dust during many months of work for this employer. In upholding the contention, and allowing the employe compensation for an accidental injury, the court said:

"This court long since held that the Workmen's Compensation Act 'is to be liberally construed with a view to effect its objects and promote justice. * * * It shall be so construed as to carry out its purposes, and, so far as is reasonably possible, secure its benefits to all those who were intended to receive them.' The conclusion should have been reached that an accident occurred."

GIVING AGENT HIS AUTHORITY

THERE ARE two kinds of employes or agents, namely: general and special. Also, there are two methods of legally employing an agent or employe, and those are: expressly, as by letter or contract, and impliedly.

It has been held that implied agency is actual agency, which is to be established by proof of circumstances bearing upon the question, that is, by deduction or inference from other material facts in the cases. In other words, implied authority is such authority as the employer intended his agent to have, though he directly conferred no such authority upon his agent, and though his intention to that end is to be implied merely from his acts and conduct. However, the authority is none the less actual merely because it is implied.

Where there is proof of facts, which by reasonable implication, support the belief that the employer, having expressly given his agent certain authority, intended at the same time that the agent be also invested with authority to do all acts which were necessary to the accomplishment of the main purpose of the employment, it is very rare that a court will refuse to hold the employer liable on contracts made by his agent.

CASE

For illustration, in Thimmig v. Talking Pictures Corporation, St. Louis (85 S. W. [2d] 208), it was disclosed that a man named Thimmig for many years had been connected with the motion picture industry in and around the city of St. Louis. In the course of his activities, in the motion picture field, he became interested in sound equipment. Because of such interest he wrote a manufacturer a letter, directed to its home office in New York City, setting forth his qualifications and experience in the talking picture business, and inquiring whether the manufacturer would be interested in appointing him as its sales and service representative.

Soon afterward he received a reply from the manufacturer, over the signature of its corporate secretary, advising him that the St. Louis territory was under the jurisdiction of a Chicago branch office, and referring him to a Mr. Rosenberg who was in charge of the same.

Two days later Thimmig wrote Rosenberg in Chicago along the lines of his original letter to the manufacturer's New York office. Rosenberg replied advising that he had turned his letter over to the company's new representative in the St. Louis territory, Mr. J. L. Gertz, who would take the matter up with him.

A short time later, Thimmig did meet Gertz, and after several interviews was employed by Gertz, who wrote Rosenberg in Chicago, advising him that he had made arrangements with Thimmig "to represent our company" in the city of St. Louis and Eastern Missouri; that he had agreed to pay him 5% on all sales.

Sometime later Thimmig contended that he was entitled to commissions on certain sales. He wrote to the manufacturer in New York who claimed that Thimmig was not entitled to commissions unless collected from Gertz, as Gertz had no authority to offer Thimmig 5% commission.

It is interesting to know that Thimmig sued the manufacturer and the higher court held the latter bound to pay $1,265 commissions due.

LAWFUL USE OF SIDEWALK

A PROPERTY OWNER owns to the center line of the street. However, it is equally true that the public has a right to travel upon the street at any and all times as a public street. Therefore, a theatre owner cannot prevent any person or persons from making any lawful use of the sidewalk in front of his theatre.

For example, in Vonderschmitt v. McGuire, Bloomington, Ind. (195 N. E. 585), it was disclosed that a property owner filed suit seeking to enjoin union members from using the streets and sidewalks in front of the Indiana Theatre in the city of Bloomington, Ind., for the purpose of picketing the theatre. However, the property owner did not enumerate any unlawful acts of the union members, except that they carried signs which stated that the theatre was unfair to union employes. Therefore, the higher court refused to enjoin the picketing, and said:

"There is no allegation in the complaint that the appellees (pickets were making any use of the street whatever that the public has no right to make, unless it be the bare allegations to the effect that they were engaged in peacefully picketing the theatre in question by carrying a placard back and forth past the theatre bearing the inscription that the theatre was unfair to organized labor and by the use of handbills of the same import. There is no allegation that the appellees (pickets) were going beyond the scope of peaceful picketing. This they had a right to do. There is no allegation that the picketing was accompanied by any unlawful acts."

create an appreciable saving in the initial cost and it would also favorably affect the operating costs.

FUEL AND WATER

Another important consideration of course is the cost of fuel. Diesels are designed to burn various grades of oil and it is important to select an engine designed to burn the grade which is cheapest and most economical in the particular location where it is to be installed.

Water is an item of consideration in diesel engine operation. Where combustion takes place, heat is generated, it is the heat that in a large measure determines the work done. Diesel engine cylinders are surrounded by a water cooling jacket and an adequate supply of water at a right temperature is vitally necessary. Water that will deposit a scale on the inside of the jacket will reduce efficiency and run up costs. As an illustration the 300 horsepower engine discussed early will require 3,240 gallons per hour assuming a water temperature of 80° going into the jacket and a temperature of 110° leaving the jacket, or 54 gallons per minute. From this it is inferred that a well or a cooling tower is a necessity with a diesel engine. A cooling tower requires a pump, and should anything happen to that pump, it would be necessary to shut down the engine. Consequently a stand-by pump is necessary, or a gravity tank with a capacity of two to three hours of water supply, is very important.

Diesel engines require a great amount of lubricating oil and it is very important that the plant be provided with some means of reclaiming oil. Otherwise the cost of lubrication will be excessive.

In the general layout of a diesel plant, it is necessary to use all possible precaution in planning cross connections so that a fortune does not have to be spent in stand-by equipment. There is no rule of thumb for engine layouts, as each plant requires individual solution.

The initial engineering in connection with the original specifications and layout requires study, ingenuity and capable engineering. There is nothing gained by rushing into a diesel installation.

This, of course, is but the briefest sort of outline of the diesel idea of power plants for theatres. There have been very few installations to date, but it is undoubtedly going to become increasingly more important unless the power companies begin soon to make more favorable rates to take care of air-conditioning electrical loads in theatres.—J. T. K.

RCA FIRST

with ROTARY STABILIZER

essential for box office draw with modern films

Tremendous improvements are being made in sound recording. Today's new films never before were so amazingly faithful to the original sound. But to give your audiences this thrilling realism you must have constant film speed through the sound head.

WHY CONSTANT SPEED?

The sound track is recorded at constant speed, and must be reproduced at the same speed. If the speed varies in the sound head, the sound varies, producing "wows" and other annoying effects, spoiling music, and ruining dialog. Speed variations are especially objectionable on coloratura sopranos, and in the higher notes of instruments. It is in recording soprano voices that great recent improvements have been made.

ROTARY STABILIZER ASSURES CONSTANCY

RCA was first with the great Rotary Stabilizer, a unique creation of the RCA laboratories. Look at the RCA Photophone Sound Head and you see the Rotary Stabilizer as a simple drum, fully enclosed, needing practically no attention. The film passes over it, and any speed variations are eliminated absolutely. And the same drum also maintains the film within the focus of the light beam, with an accuracy of a thousandth of an inch. This correct focusing is also essential for faithful reproduction of high notes. Thus the RCA Rotary Stabilizer does two jobs, with complete perfection. Great inventions are always simple, and the RCA Rotary Stabilizer is both simple and fundamental.

For perfect reproduction from modern films, use the RCA Photophone Sound Head with its unique RCA invention, the Rotary Stabilizer.

This is a typical sound track recorded by RCA Photophone. Any change in the speed of the track varies the sound. Hence the speed must be absolutely constant, as is guaranteed by RCA's great invention, the Rotary Stabilizer.

MUSIC COPYRIGHT FIGHT IS CARRIED INTO COURTS

New York City Demands Immunity From Warner Subsidiary's Restrictions; Company Will Sue Broadcasters in Test

The opening gun in the barrage of litigations expected in the copyright controversy involving the Warner music companies and the American Society of Composers Authors and Publishers was fired Tuesday when Paul Windels, corporation counsel for the city of New York, sought a declaratory judgment in the United States district court against Harms, Inc., one of the Warner subsidiaries.

The city seeks to obtain immunity for its radio station, WNYC, from copyright difficulties. The complaint contends the station is "purely a philanthropic enterprise" and that in its 11 years of existence it has never been bothered by copyright problems, having used the defendant's music without "hindrance or objection."

The petition seeks a declaratory judgment as to the "non-commercial and purely philanthropic nature" of WNYC's activities, adding that "there is no provision in the copyright laws of the United States that prohibits the public performance of a copyrighted musical composition unless for profit."

Herman Starr, Warner vice-president in charge of music, expressed surprise at the city's action. He pointed out WNYC never had asked for a license and that non-commercial stations requesting a license received it immediately without charge. This the city had not done.

Warner to Sue

At the same time, Mr. Starr said that suits would be filed late this week, probably in the federal court, against National Broadcasting Company, Columbia Broadcasting System and stations WEAF, WJZ, WOR and WHN, all in New York. These will be in the nature of test cases to obtain judicial determination of the copyright ownership of the musical compositions controlled by the Warner subsidiaries but claimed by ASCAP for performing rights.

The legal departments of the two major networks, NBC and CBS, reported Wednesday that their plans for legal action were still indefinite. Meanwhile network stations and others which have not obtained a Warner license are confining themselves to broadcasting music other than Warner's, where such ownership is definitely known, but Warner claims copyright infringements.

Tax Reductions Ordered

Adding to its troubles, ASCAP suffered a further setback in the superior court in the state of Washington when an order was given directing Tracy Griffin, the society's receiver in the state, to effect "drastic reductions" in the music taxes charged exhibitors, radio stations and other music users.

The receiver has refused to recognize Warner's withdrawal from the society on the ground that he cannot ascertain whether it is a "bona fide attempt to withdraw or is a contemptuous continuation of criminal practices heretofore found to exist."

Exhibitors are protected from infringement actions by Warner by the dictum of the Washington attorney general that the company or any other defendant named in the state's action would face criminal prosecution if they should attempt any such litigation in the state.

Both ASCAP and Warner, however, have more serious problems at the moment, and neither intends to fight the receivership for for the time being.

Warner announced Tuesday that 26 more independent stations had signed the new contract for three months, bringing the total to 181. More than 550 stations had been offered the agreement.

Litigation was threatened by ASCAP when 390 independent stations were notified over the weekend that they must sign a new five-year license agreement by Wednesday of this week or be held accountable financially for the broadcasting of the society's music since January 1, when contracts expired.

While denouncing the society's demands, the National Association of Broadcasters this week advised members that those who need ASCAP music have "no alternative but to accept the five-year contract."

Passage of the Duffy copyright bill, elimination of the $250 minimum penalty for copyright infringements and vigorous prosecution of the Government's anti-trust suit offered hope of relief to music users, said the association.

The independent stations feel ASCAP's terms are unfair since its repertory has been materially reduced by Warner's withdrawal. The broadcasters want the society to guarantee the music list as it existed prior to the Warner secession; otherwise, they feel they should have to pay less.

The Society contends that since it does not raise the rates when the repertory is increased, it should not be required to reduce them under present circumstances. ASCAP claims a periodical increase in its repertory by the addition of new members and the publication of new compositions by its 200 publisher members, at the rate of 10,000 or 12,000 a year.

Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors is laying plans to protect exhibitors against an increased or dual seat tax, and has announced it will fight any attempt by Warner to impose such a levy. A full report on the situation will be made at the annual meeting of Allied's directors in Washington early next month.

Other exhibitor units are taking cognizance of the situation. A bulletin of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio advises members: "Broadcasting stations and hotels can protect themselves by playing just what music they desire, but motion picture theatres are absolutely helpless in the matter because of the fact that they are forced to play the music as it comes to them on the film."

The Ohio organization recommends that members obtain its advice before renewing agreements with ASCAP or signing any initial agreement with Warner.

Manufacturers Expect Fight

Transcription record manufacturers for broadcast purposes expect to be involved in the anticipated legal tangle. The society has refused them permission for broadcasting of such programs over unlicensed stations, and the record manufacturers contend this is restraint of interstate commerce. Mindful of the complication, Warner has granted these manufacturers permission to record any of its music and broadcast it over any station without a fee, reserving the right to fix reasonable rates by October 1, 1936. This applies only to commercial programs, sustaining libraries being excluded.

Warner has notified the society that unless it formally advises its licensees of the withdrawal effective December 31, all ASCAP officers, directors and members would be held accountable for damages.

Hotels Resist Society's Demand

Hotels in the south meanwhile are resisting ASCAP's demands for $1 per year for every radio receiver installed in the rooms. Hotels in Georgia and Alabama have discontinued such radio reception, and notices have been posted in the rooms blaming ASCAP for demanding exorbitant fees and asking guests to appeal to their Congressmen to support passage of the Duffy copyright bill.

Important music composers heretofore publishing through Warner have started a movement to gain "freedom of outlet" for performance of their music, reserving for themselves the performing rights to any compositions they bring out in the future. Such music will be published by firms other than Warner's subsidiaries. Typically, George Gershwin said that 50,000 compositions in his catalogue were restricted because of Warner control. Others who have broken their future affiliation with Warner are Cole Porter, Sigmund Romberg, Arthur Schwartz and Ira Gershwin.

PARISIANS THREATEN CLOSING AGAINST TAX

Directors of theatres in Paris, France, decided at a meeting Monday to close their houses unless the government taxes on gross receipts are reduced from 10 to 8 per cent. The date of closing was not set, however, according to cable dispatches.

The meeting was presided over by Max Maurey, director and playwright.

ROCKEFELLER AND U.S. TO PUT FILMS IN SCHOOLS

Further Goodwill for Screen and the Theatre Is Seen by the Leaders in Movement; Films for Classroom Only

The greatest effort ever made to coordinate and centralize the widely disorganized educational motion picture industry and the millions of dollars invested therein, is now well under way, the objective being the application of the screen as a medium of instruction to the country's vast public educational system. The project has the backing of the Rockefeller millions and the participating support of the United States Government and virtually all national educational organizations.

Educational motion picture observers see no adverse affect on theatre box offices; on the contrary, they envision the development of further goodwill for the screen. Tangibly, theatre receipts would not suffer, they hold, because the educational film would be applied only to classrooms and class hours and of necessity would be of an academic nature and not entertainment.

At the moment a survey to establish a record of all motion pictures which have an educational value is being conducted jointly by the United States Office of Education, J. W. Studebaker, commissioner of the Department of the Interior, and the American Council on Education in Washington, Dr. George F. Zook, president. The Council embraces in its membership 23 national educational associations, 18 other groups, 20 associate members from departmental organizations and over 200 institutional members from among the universities. It is probably the largest educational force in the world, both from the standpoint of concentrated effort and expression and wealth.

Wider Application Studied

Motion picture equipment and raw stock manufacturers have long eyed the educational motion picture market and its millions in potential profits. Electrical Research Products, Inc., during the Otterson regime is reputed to have spent some $2,000,000 in attempting to develop the market, investing largely in the production of educational films in order to create a product supply with which they might sell reproducing equipment. Manufacturers of projection booth supplies and others stand to reap huge profits.

The present survey, however, is to include not only the strict classroom film, but also subjects useful to medical students, scientific workers, vocational classes, Civilian Conservation Camps, teachers and other specialized educational groups.

It is freely stated that the investigation is being conducted under a grant from the General Education Board (Rockefeller) and is part of the work being carried on by the American Council on Educational.

From the study, the sponsors hope to develop the American Educational Film Institute, intended as an all-embracing and permanent source of supply for educational films.

More than 10,000 film catalogue cards already have been mailed to 1,800 sources of educational films in this country. This card covers nearly 100 items, which it is hoped will result in accurate information being filed in one central office, probably at Washington, covering information necessary to judge the adaptability of the film to specific educational needs. Supplemental analyses and listings will be prepared and publicized.

That the new year would see great strides in the consummation of efforts expended for years in the development of the educational films field has been freely predicted both in and outside of the motion picture industry. Large city school systems everywhere have been appropriating sizeable sums for the purchase of equipment. The principal problem has been the creation of a sufficient product supply. This is the main objective of the sponsors of the new move. Too, various of the large educational organizations have been lobbying in state legislative halls for appropriations for the establishment of state visual education. Interest in the visual idea, which waned during the depression, is at its highest.

And while the Rockefeller-Government-American Council project is progressive, similar efforts have been undertaken by others. The Department of Visual Instruction of the National Education Association, after months of work, is forwarding questionnaires to schools, universities and other educational institutions to determine maximum information on each school's equipment and activities with motion pictures. The NEA predicts that the questionnaire will bring comprehensive statistics on educational screening possibilites for the first time in history.

Government Active

Seeking to meet the increasing demand for information as to the sources of educational and all other non-theatrical films, the United States Department of Commerce has made public a composite list of such sources, compiled by Nathan D. Golden, chief of the motion picture section of the specialities division, assisted by Francis M. Johnson.

Unheard of since the motion picture industry's attention last summer was called to its efforts to compete with theatres for public screen attention in the community, the Parent-Teachers Association now reports, through the Educational Screen, "very encouraging progress" on the projects of its "national motion picture plan."

Parents-Teachers Plan

The National Congress of Parents and Teachers' plan calls for the cooperation of Congress with school officials for the purpose of having each school supplied with adequate motion picture equipment and to make arrangements for the regular use of films for strictly educational and cultural purposes in the classroom; and for the use of school auditoriums for regularly scheduled entertainment motion pictures from non-theatrical sources, suitable to the various ages and interests of children of school age. Other projects urged by the PTA are: 1. The formation of a national film institute. 2. The establishment of state and local film libraries in educational institutions. 3. The inclusion in teacher-training institutions of required courses in the use of motion pictures as visual aids. 4. The adoption of a motion picture appreciation course in high schools under the direction of the teachers of English. 5. The organization of amateur motion picture clubs in high schools.

Joint Survey Underway by U. S. Office of Education and American Council under Grant from Rockefeller Board

Reports from the state motion picture chairmen, according to Educational Screen, indicate that these projects are already in operation in each of 40 states heard from. The Louisiana chairman reports progress has been made toward securing training courses for teachers in the use of visual aids, and in establishing film libraries. In New Jersey "almost all subjects in the junior and senior high schools are taught with the aid of movies." The New York chairman reports that almost every city of any size has its own film library and that many schools are equipped with projectors. California has made a study of motion picture equipment and the use of films in schools. There have been in Pennsylvania seven motion picture institutes, six of which were conducted by the former national motion picture chairman of the PTA, Mrs. Robbins Gilman, and the other one by Dr. Edgar Dale, present chairman.

Educational Council's Study

During the past year the American Council on Education has been studying the field of visual education with a view of sponsoring the establishment of a national educational film institute. This project has become known as the American Film Institute.

A number of conferences have been held to discuss the feasibility of the project and contact has been made with most of the visual education centers in the United States. A consensus favors establishment of a film institute whose main functions will be to advance education by developing the use of the motion picture and other allied visual-auditory aids in all fields of learning, and more particularly:

1. To collect and distribute significant information concerning motion pictures in education, at home and abroad.

2. To stimulate the production and use of motion pictures for educational purposes.

3. To promote the cooperation of agencies interested in the production and use of motion pictures in education.

4. To initiate and promote research pertaining to motion pictures and allied visual and auditory aids in education.

5. To develop a national appreciation of the potential contribution of the motion picture to the cultural life of America.

To accomplish the aim of the Institute it will be necessary to have all the films needed by the schools and other educational agencies readily available and properly used. The fol-

Don't Get Personal

(Universal)

Comedy Romance

That this production reunites the team of Sally Eilers and James Dunn, stars of "Bad Girl," "Dance Team" and "Sob Sister," is not the only factor that the producing company is counting upon to arouse unusual spectator and exhibitor interest. They further figure that the inclusion of singing and acting Pinky Tomlin, plus the straight comedy and light drama character of the motivating story in which laughs are anticipated to come thick and fast as result of action, situations and dialogue, will be a further medium of intriguing audience and showmanship attention.

Modernly premised, the yarn concerns a couple of college graduates, depression victims, unable to get jobs, who finally resort to the "human slave" auction gag as a means of getting money. Bought by a girl, supposedly in the same circumstances, they blaze a trail of humorous adventures from New York to rural Ohio. Dunn and Miss Eilers, battling all the way to the amazement and chagrin of Tomlin, finally are married, when electrical engineer Dunn, unable to stand the shock of seeing Sally married to a home town snob, steals her from the altar.

The story is adapted from the novel "Tomorrow Is a Better Day," by William Thiele and Edmund Hartmann. The screen play is by George Waggner, Clarence Marks and Houston Branch. Direction is by William Nigh, maker of the recent comedy features "His Night Out" and "She Gets Her Man."

Though practically all the action is centered about Dunn, Miss Eilers and Tomlin, their experiences and escapades, substantiating features of the story emphasizing its comedy and dramatic contrast will be handled by Spencer Charters and Doris Lloyd as the girl's father and mother; George Cleveland and Lillian Harmer as a pair of farm folk at whose home much of the production's fun appears; George Meeker, who sees his bride swiped away from him, and Charles Coleman as the butler in the girl's home.

These Three

(United Artists - Goldwyn)

Drama

This production is a dramatic story of how biased maturity and not so innocent childish immaturity can play havoc with the course of true love. It is authored by and the screen play is also credited to Lillian Hellman, whose novel and play "The Children's Hour" was a matter of much publicity several months ago. Yet Samuel Goldwyn, who is producing the picture, is very emphatic in his declamations that the story to be picturized is not even remotely related to that widely discussed work.

The story is that of two women in love with the same man. The women operate an exclusive younger girls' school. As a result of an innocent event, seen and later related by an ultrawise and incorrigible brat to the giddy minded aunt of one of the women, a situation is precipitated that brings the partners into court before a jury of rigidly moralistic New Englanders. They are condemned and forced to close their school, the aunt repents her evil doing, one of the partners is left alone, the other goes to Europe to forget and find solace with the man.

Miriam Hopkins, last in "Splendor" and "Barbary Coast," and Merle Oberon, seen in "Folies Bergere" and "Dark Angel," are the two partners. Joel McCrea, who played opposite Miss Hopkins in her two pictures, is the man. The catty, chattering aunt is Catherine Doucet, and the child responsible for most of the trouble is Bonita Granville. Supporting players included are Alma Kruger, Carmencita Johnson, Margaret Hamilton, Marie Louise Cooper, Walter Brennan, Anita Denniston and Mary Ann Durkin.

The picture is being directed by William Wyler, maker of "The Gay Deception." In nature very much of a problem drama, the picture is being given a realistic treatment counted upon to emphasize the theme of its motivating story. The locale is New England and practically all action takes place within the neighborhood of a frame house which the Misses Hopkins and Oberon have reconstructed into a school with the aid of McCrea.

Everybody's Old Man

(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy

The star of this production, Irvin S. Cobb, is probably one of the best known contemporary personalities. Seen on the screen in several shorts and featured in "Steamboat Round the Bend," his magazine contributions, books, radio and lecture appearances plus his newspaper work have made him familiar to and appreciated by millions. Seldom has a picture player enjoyed such a buildup, which gauged by any standard should assure readymade audiences for his first starring screen appearance.

The story provided for him, making it possible for him to display his acknowledged homely human and humorous talents, appears to be one of much potential entertainment and commercial worth. It tells of an old commercial tycoon who loses the lust for battle when his chief rival dies. In Europe he finds the son and daughter of his old foe and the sweetheart of his youth dissipating their inheritance. Contriving to become their guardian, he with them goes into competition with his own business being conducted by a very modern minded and efficient nephew. Routing conspirators who would loot his charges, he makes things so hot for the nephew that only a successful business and romantic merger can be the result. In vein, the yarn has a human interest smash similar to that of one of George Arliss' most successful features, "Working Man."

Based on an original story by Edgar Franklin, the screen play is by Patterson McNutt and A. E. Thomas. Direction is by James Flood. Principals in the supporting cast are Rochelle Hudson, last in "Curly Top," "Way Down East" and "Show Them No Mercy," and Johnny Downs, erstwhile "Our Gang" star, seen recently in "Coronado" and "College Scandal," as the wards of Cobb, and Norman Foster as his nephew. Sarah Haden now, in "Magnificent Obsession," appears as Cobb's sister. Alan Dinehart is the principal heavy. In prominent smaller parts will be Warren Hymer, Donald Meek, Maurice Cass, Hilda Vaughn, Charles Coleman, Ann Moultry, John Miltern, Walter Walker, Frederick Burton and Hal K. Dawson.

To attain best commercial results, producers recommend a concentration on Cobb's appeal, seconded by the prestige that has accrued to Rochelle Hudson, but not overlooking the name values of others in the cast.

Love Before Breakfast

(Universal)

Comedy Romance

Here is a modernly atmosphered story of two individuals—the man madly in love with the girl, she rather resentful of his affection—who couldn't get along with or without each other. It is portrayed by a trio of principals who have scored notable successes in recent pictures. The production is suggested by a published novel, "Spinster Dinner," by Faith Baldwin, who incidentally is the author of another story currently in production, MGM's "Wife versus Secretary." It is being directed by Walter Lang, whose flair for comedy is attested by the recent "Hooray for Love," also "The Mighty Barnum," "Warrior's Husband" and "No More Orchids."

Presently timed, localed in New York, being given the benefit of swanky but not too sophisticated production and moving to the pitch of many comic situations, the picture tells of a man who is determined to get his woman. Though he has to send the man with whom she is in love off to China; contrive to have him fall in love with one of his old flames, get the girl's mother on his side and lavish upon her all that money can buy, she is still adamant to his romantic pleas. When she tries to swim away from him, he has to pursue her, knock her cold and hold her tightly in his arms as his yacht captain marries them while she fumes and rages.

Carole Lombard, whose "Hands Across the Table" is vividly remembered, and Preston Foster, last in "Annie Oakley" and "Pompeii," are the battling lovers. Cesar Romero, currently in "Metropolitan" and "A Tale of Two Cities," is the other side of the triangle. The fourth featured personality, Miss Lombard's mother, is Janet Beecher. The supporting cast lists Betty Lawford as the girl in whom Foster seeks to interest Romero; Douglas Bouchly, Bert Roach, Andre de Beranger, Ed Barton, Diana Gibson, Joyce Compton and John King.

Three Godfathers

(MGM)

(Tentative Title)

Drama

The producing company is not hesitant in heralding this feature as a western. At the same time it is not backward about labeling it as a different kind of western, one in which all the sock action thrill of an outdoor adventure picture is retained, but premised on an unusual motivating story. It deals with three bandits, who, fleeing into the desert after a bank robbery, find a dying mother and her baby. Adopting the orphan, with the intent of carrying it to the town they have just looted, one of the bandits dies as a result of a wound. A second commits suicide. The third, the hero, knowing that certain death awaits him, drinks from a poisoned water hole, dying as he lays the baby in the arms of the girl he once had loved but had surrendered to another man.

The story is by Peter B. Kyne and under this title appeared serially in the Saturday Evening Post some time ago. The screen play is by E. E. Paramore, Jr., and Manuel Seff. Direction is by Richard Boleslawski, recently credited with "The Painted Veil" and "Les Miserables." The choice of Boleslawski as director is evidence of the potential entertainment and commercial values to be included, in relation to production and name assets.

The bad man trio is composed of Chester Morris, recently in "Public Hero," Lewis Stone and Walter Brennan, who will be remembered for his work in "Barbary Coast." Supporting players include Irene Hervey and Robert Livingston, who carry the principal romantic love interest contrast; Sidney Toler, Willard Robertson, Roger Imhof, John Sheehan, Dorothy Tree, Joseph Marievsky, Victor Potel, Helen Brown, Harvey Clark, Virginia Brissac and the Kirchner twins.

In suggesting that this feature be given a typical western campaign, producers advance the warning that advances should clearly establish that the picture does not come within the "horse opera" or "cliff hanger" category.

Wild West

(Radio)

Comedy

The identity of the leading players, Wheeler and Woolsey, plus the significance quickly read into the title, easily establishes the comedy character of this production. It's the pair of funsters, Woolsey as a "painless" dentist, and his aide Wheeler getting mixed up in a gold rush. Victimized, left the sole residents of a ghost town, the populace of which is following the rainbow trail to the site of a rumored gold strike, they try to save the covered wagon train from bandit depredations and Indian attacks. Situations so contrived that they are in danger of being burned at the stake by the redskins and of being lynched by the fortune hunters, the U. S. cavalry rides up to save the party. In the resulting excitement gold is discovered back in the ghost town and the victimized comedians clean up handsomely in staking out choice claims. Through the dominant action comedy runs a bit of romantic love interest involving Wheeler and Dorothy Lee, in which both sing several songs.

The story is an original by Tom Lennon and Fred Guiol. The screen play is by a team of expert comedy writers, Al Boasberg and Jack Townley. Guiol, who made the last Wheeler-Woolsey feature, "Rainmakers," also is directing.

Though the cast of principals supporting the leading trio is small, hundreds of extras will appear in the picture as Indians, settlers and soldiers. Harry Woods, Maurice Black and Ethan Laidlaw are featured as bad men. Richard Alexander is a shrewd real estate dealer who sells the boys the supposedly valueless lots, and Chief Thunderbird is the Indian Chief.

While not in direct nature a satire or burlesque on westerns, the feature will treat the various dramatic, romantic and thrill action elements with a high degree of hokum.

Farmer in the Dell

(Radio)

Comedy

A different kind of Hollywood story is to be related in this production. It's one in which the often done idea of showing inside stuff or ridiculing the art of picture making is entirely eschewed. Based on a story by Phil Stong that appeared serially in Saturday Evening Post some time ago, with screen play by Sam Mintz, studio opinion is that the entertainment will be altogether fresh and novel.

In substance it's the yarn of an Iowa family. The husband is forced by his wife to sell his farm and migrate to Hollywood, partly that the mother's pride and joy daughter may get a chance in the movies and partly to get her away from her country bumpkin sweetheart. In Hollywood, through accidental circumstances, it's the old man and not the daughter who becomes a star. That's all right with the mother until her husband finds her going typically Hollywood. Then there's an eruption that puts mom in her proper place, eliminates the gang of hangers-on, and makes the girl see that she will have plenty to do keeping the bumpkin lover happy while the old man does the picture starring.

Fred Stone, seen in "Alice Adams," has the featured role with Esther Dale as his wife and Jean Parker as the daughter. Frank Albertson, also in "Alice Adams," is the country boy. Moroni Olsen plays the part of the director who discovers Stone's picture talents. The limited featured supporting cast lists Lucille Ball, Maxine Jennings, Leonard Trainor, Rose McQuoid, Alleen O'Malley, Margaret Armstrong and Spencer Charters.

The picture is being directed by Ben Holmes.

Wife Versus Secretary

(MGM)

Dramatic Romance

Star, cast, author, director and producer credits, and the human interest of modernly geared dramatic romantic story content, are the principal pegs upon which the producing company is hanging its enthusiastic anticipations that this picture will excite much more than ordinary exhibitor and patron attention.

The novel from which it is adapted is a Faith Baldwin story recently carried in Cosmopolitan Magazine. A widely read authoress, she is credited with several screen contributions, notably "Alimony" and "Beauty." The job of consolidating its screen availability was entrusted to a trio of brilliant scenarists and authors, Norman Krasna, John Lee Mahin and Alice Duer Miller. The director is Clarence Brown, who numbers "Anna Karenina" and "Ah Wilderness" among his many important accomplishments. It is being produced by Hunt Stromberg, maker of "Thin Man," "Naughty Marietta" and the forthcoming "Rose Marie."

The title aptly describes the theme and establishes the picture's character. It is a story of two women in love with the same man; a wife who sits at home and waits and fears, a secretary working for a man who finds it necessary to have her at his side at all times, late at night in the office and on trips around and out of the country. The situation is such that the potential entertainment values of drama, romance, comedy and conflict are evident, moving at a speedy tempo and in class circumstances.

Clark Gable, Jean Harlow and Myrna Loy are the lead trio. All are names that generally stimulate quick public interest. The supporting cast is large and includes many well known personalities and a few not so familiar. Listed are Holmes Herbert, May Robson, Myra Marsh, Frederick Burton, Hobart Cavanaugh, Harold Minjir, Roger Imhof, Maurice Cass, William Newell, Margaret Irving (currently outstanding in "Exclusive Story"), Claudelle Kay, Jose Rubio, James Thomas, Helen Shipman, Tom Dugan, Gilbert Emery and Don Rowan.

The Singing Kid

(Warner)

Dramatic Musical Romance

Essentially the motivating story of this production is dramatic. But when one considers its star, Al Jolson, and looks over the credits and sees Edward Everett Horton, Allen Jenkins, the Yacht Club Boys, Mitchell and Durant and Cab Calloway and his band included, and recalls the type of production given Jolson features, it must be concluded that there is lots of comedy and plenty music.

"The Singing Kid" is the story of an ace entertainer jilted by a Broadway butterfly and gypped into tax difficulties with the Government by a conniving manager. Taking with him his gag man, Jenkins, and secretary, Horton, Jolson seeks a mountain refuge to think things over. There he encounters Beverly Roberts, Warner's budding new starlette, and her niece Sybil Jason, seen in "Little Big Shot" and "Stella Parish." Poverty stricken Beverly is writing a play. Jolson buys it at the cost of losing the girl's growing affection.

Colorfully produced, it is a drama that is tinged with pathos, love interest, comedy and spectacle. The story is by Robert Lord, with screen play by Warren Duff and Patsy Flick, who is Jolson's personal gag creator. Music and lyrics are by E. Y. Harburg and Harold Arlen. Group dance features are being directed by Bobby Connolly. William Keighley is the director in charge.

Besides the personalities previously mentioned, the most important supporting principals are Lyle Talbot as the dishonest manager and Claire Dodd as the girl upon whom Jolson lavishes his wealth. In lesser roles will be seen William Davidson, Joseph Crehan, Edward Keen, Kay Hughes and Tom Manning.

Clair Guest of Honor At Party Given By UA

Rene Clair was the guest of honor at a reception given last week by United Artists in New York. He came over from England for the opening of "The Ghost Goes West," at the Rivoli theatre. The reception drew about 100 newspaper, fan magazine and trade paper writers.

Mr. Clair plans to remain in New York for about 10 days to obtain the American reaction to his first picture in English. Mr. Clair, who is under contract to Alexander Korda for a series of three pictures, said that his next film venture would be a story centered on life in early London. He will start this at the new Korda studio in Denham in May.

Levine Signs Mae Clarke

Nat Levine has placed Mae Clarke under contract to appear in four Republic pictures this year. Tentatively scheduled as vehicles will be two musicals, "Sitting on the Moon" and "Ticket to Paradise."

21 Millions Cut Made in Claims On Fox Theatres

Ten of 50 claims against Fox Theatres Corp. aggregating $24,285,033, on which hearings have been held to date, were disallowed in their entirety and the remainder were reduced to $2,949,103, it was disclosed in a report filed with the federal court in New York last week by Milton C. Weisman, Fox Theatres receiver.

In addition to the claims already heard, there are 14 claims aggregating $9,379,474 which have yet to be heard and reported on. Claims which accounted for the principal reductions were those of Union Guardian Trust Co. for $10,663,346, which was reduced to $1,111,641; St. Louis Union Trust Co. for $7,819,283, reduced to $764,845; Ridgewood Operating Co., Inc., for $550,000, reduced to $11,568; Franklin Operating Co., Inc., for $816,666, reduced to $25,399, and Philadelphia Co. for Guaranteeing Mortgages, for $389,436, reduced to $30,134. These five claimants have been the only ones in the group of 50 to file exceptions with the court in connection with the reductions made on their claims.

Other large reductions in the claims include one for $430,941 filed by A. C. Blumenthal and counsel, which was disallowed entirely; a claim of the Continental Bank & Trust Co. of N. Y. for $2,675,000, which was allowed at $891,925; one for $304,903 by Criterion Advertising Co., allowed at $12,555; one by J. A. Lacy for $250,000, disallowed entirely; one by the State of New York for $111,927, allowed at $607, and one by Fox West Coast Service Corp. for $39,355, disallowed entirely.

The largest of the 14 claims against Fox Theatres remaining to be heard include one by Burroughs and Boas for $2,304,184; Chicago Title & Trust Co., $1,159,380; Halsey, Stuart & Co., Inc., $1,000,000; Lexington Ave. & 59th St. Corp., $1,250,000; Roxy Theatre Noteholders' Protective Committee, $1,138,100, and Trust Co. of Georgia, $1,032,563.

The receiver's report lists cash on hand of $780,217, as of Dec. 31, last. This includes a cash balance of $645,410 on hand at the time of the receiver's last report, June 30, 1935, and a payment of $150,000 received in November from United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., in settlement of Fox Theatres' claim against Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, under which Fox Theatres relinquished its option to acquire 50 per cent of the stock of Metropolitan Playhouses, the reorganized Fox Met company. The stock was taken up by United Artists Theatre Circuit and KAO.

Cash receipts during the six months period covered by the report amounted to $190,082 and disbursements were $55,274. The report notes that operations under the receiver include the Academy of Music, New York; Elizabeth, Elizabeth, N. J.; the Broadway and 165th St., New York; the Isis, Denver, and Nelson, Springfield, Mass.

The receivership of Fox Theatres Corp. was extended last week for another six months, ending July 12, under an order signed by Federal Judge Martin T. Manton. Mr. Weisman continues as receiver of the company under the arrangement.

Danziger to Vacation

Bill E. Danziger of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer home office publicity and advertising staff, leaves New York on February 1 to spend six months in the desert. His assignments will be taken over by Herb Morgan, recently in charge of Loew theatre publicity in Baltimore.

Series of Changes in Erpi Personnel Setup

H. M. Wilcox, vice-president of Electrical Research, who has been on a leave of absence serving in an advisory capacity in Paramount, has resigned, effective January 22. J. H. Ray, a director, has resigned from Erpi as well as from the directorate and vice-presidency of Western Electric, to become counsel for American Telephone. D. S. Pratt has become general auditor. E. S. Gregg, distribution manager, has been named assistant comptroller, and F. H. Arlinghaus has been appointed to succeed him as distribution manager.

Leo Spitz Returns East for Work On Reorganization

Leo Spitz, Odlum-Lehman Brothers' recently elected president of RKO, returned to the home office in New York from Hollywood this week, and with his arrival came indications that plans for the corporation's reorganization setup will be furthered during the conferences which he is about to hold with reorganization principals.

According to present indications, the plan still is in its early formative stages and probably will require several months more to complete. Mr. Spitz said that he had received no recent report on the progress being made on the plan and that one of the principal objectives of his trip back to New York was to obtain information on the current status of matters pertaining to the reorganization. It is anticipated that he may give some study to various proposals for the settlement of the Rockefeller Center claim against RKO, the largest individual claim against the company.

Mr. Spitz will remain in New York until the end of February, at which time he plans to return to the coast to confer with studio executives on RKO's production schedule for next season.

Sam Briskin was installed as head of production during Mr. Spitz's last visit at the studio. The RKO head reiterated that B. B. Kahane would continue as head of RKO Studio Corporation.

Pandro S. Berman's contract was extended another year, functioning with his own unit, under Mr. Spitz and Mr. Kahane. He will make features with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, Katharine Hepburn and Lily Pons and will produce "Winterset."

Terry Turner Opens Own Merchandising Service

Terry Turner, for 14 years director of advertising and publicity for the Loew Circuit and for several years in the same capacity for RKO Theatres and Radio City Music Hall, has taken offices at 247 Park Avenue, New York, to devote his entire time to making tie-ups between national advertisers and motion pictures and directing national campaigns and contests.

For the last two years Mr. Turner has been experimenting in that field.

"March of Time" Celebrates Its First Anniversary

The March of Time celebrated its first anniversary Tuesday with a preview of its first issue of the second year, in the Hotel Madison in New York. Members of the editorial board, Roy E. Larsen, John Martin and Louis de Rochemont, acted as hosts, with Ralph Rolan, vice-president in charge of advertising.

Among those present were: Bruce Barton, Lucius Beebe, Harry Bull, Martin Quigley, president, and Colvin Brown, vice-president of Quigley Publishing Company; John Chapman, Edward G. Robinson, Frank Buck, Keith Winter, Beatrice Lillie, Eileen Creelman, Ned E. Depinet, Roy Durstine, Robert Garland, Mr. and Mrs. W. French Githens, Thomas Hamlin, Pete Harrison, Mark Hellinger, Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Seldes, Mr. and Mrs. John Byram, Edward McAvoy, Barret McCormack, Marya Mannes, Morris Markey, Mrs. William Brown Meloney, Ward Morehouse, John C. Mosher and Rutgers Neilsen;

Also Cresson Smith, Louis Sobol, Murray Martin, Margaret Tazelaar, Mrs. Robert Martin, Richard Watts, Jr., Walter Winchell, Mrs. F. Smith Vincent, Miss Maria Sermolino, Ben Sonnenberg, William Powell, Iris Barry, Ernestine Taggard, Herbert J. Yates and S. Charles Einfeld.

Exhibitors Join Sales Tax Fight

United for the common cause, motion picture theatre owners and distributors have joined their forces in a fight against the City of New York when the arguments against rentals are heard on January 20th.

New York exchanges have been adding the two per cent tax to film rentals since January 1, and widespread protests from exhibitors resulted. The exchanges have been urging the exhibitor to cooperate with them in opposing the assessment before the city officials. If, following the hearing, the city rules that its efforts to apply the tax to film rentals are in order, appeals will be taken by the local industry to the state courts.

Members of the Independent Theatre Owners' Association will deposit with New York exchanges sums sufficient to cover the two per cent city sales tax, it was decided last week following a meeting of the organization. The meeting voted to abide by the advice of its counsel, Milton C. Weisman, in the matter. Mr. Weisman, after conferring with Louis Nizer, head of the New York Film Board, recommended that the two per cent tax now being added to the rentals should be deposited with the exchanges as billed until such time as the legality of the city's levy is determined.

Meanwhile, exhibitors elsewhere were confronted with new taxes, the while others were protesting existing levies.

SKOURAS TESTIMONY ON KOPLAR SCORES FOR DEFENSE AT ST. LOUIS

Witness Under Cross-Examination by Warner Counsel Tells of Koplar Receivership Suits Despite Hardy's Objections

Moving speedily since the taking of testimony began last Thursday, the St. Louis federal court civil suit in which the Government seeks to enjoin Warner, RKO and Paramount from continuing an alleged conspiracy against Fanchon and Marco theatres in St. Louis, on Tuesday took a turn decidedly favorable to the defense.

This was when Spyros Skouras, a Government witness under cross-examination by Frederick H. Wood of Warner counsel, told about the socalled Harry Koplar receivership suits filed against Skouras Brothers Enterprises and the St. Louis Amusement Company in June, 1931.

Over the objection of Russell Hardy, special assistant United States attorney general, directing the prosecution of the nine corporate defendants and their officers, Judge Joseph West Molyneaux admitted the evidence, holding it clearly had a bearing on the chief question in the case, that relating to the alleged conspiracy.

The testimony concerned litigation directed against Warner Brothers and subsidiary corporations by persons close to Mr. Koplar.

At the criminal trial the court barred introduction by the defense of any evidence dealing with the Koplar suits.

Opposing the Government's objections, Mr. Wood described the suits as "vexatious litigation." He said that Mr. Koplar, an associate of F. & M. in the operation of the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central, was an "arch enemy of Warners, engaged in an attempt to blacken them," and that the courts found the litigation and charges unfounded.

When the Government rests its case the defense will immediately move for dismissal.

Much of the testimony followed along the lines of that given in the criminal conspiracy action, which resulted in acquittals of all defendants in November.

Thirteenth Witness

Mr. Skouras, the thirteenth witness to take the stand, related how he attempted unsuccessfully to dissuade Mr. Koplar from bringing the receivership actions, which charged misconduct. Among others, a defendant in those actions was Mr. Skouras, formerly a business associate of Mr. Koplar in the operation of the St. Louis theatre companies before Warner acquired control.

Indications that the Government's attempts to introduce newspaper stories in evidence would be blocked came when Judge Molyneaux barred a typewritten copy of an article in the St. Louis Globe Democrat reporting the leasing of the Shubert-Rialto by Warners. This developed in the direct examination of Joseph Grand, St. Louis attorney for the bondholders' protective committee, who was a witness Tuesday and Wednesday.

The taking of testimony got underway at 3:20 p.m. Friday with Thomas N. Dysart, president of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce and head of the corporations that own the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central buildings and formerly chairman of the Bondholders Protective Committees for those properties prior to their reorganization following foreclosure proceedings in July, 1934, as the first witness for the prosecution.

Mr. Dysart took the witness chair after a most unusual move in an equity proceeding, a motion by Russell Hardy, special assistant attorney general, that the court bar all witnesses from the courtroom.

Charged Perjury

Apparently Mr. Hardy's step was due to the charge made by Louis Phillips of Paramount counsel at the conclusion of his opening statement to the court Thursday that Paramount refused to do business with Harry Arthur or any of his associates because it knew that it was innocent of the conspiracy charge and could only have been indicted through perjured testimony being presented to the grand jury, and that the company would not do business with a man who had endeavored to convict it of a crime it knew it had not committed.

Judge Molyneaux said that his practice has been to grant such a request when it is made by counsel, but, he added, he could not bar attorneys of record or others who might assist in the trial.

The defense earlier had won an important point when Judge Molyneaux declined to quash subpenas duces tecum issued at the request of Warner Bros. for certain leases, agreements, contracts, film leases, etc., held by the Eden Theatre Company, lessee of the Fox theatre, the St. Louis Ambassador Theatre Company, lessee of the Ambassador and New Grand Central theatres, and the St. Louis Missouri Theatre Company, lessee of the Missouri theatre.

Cites Dissatisfaction

At the opening of the session, Jacob M. Lashly of counsel for RKO Distributing Corporation, had devoted considerable time to a recital of his company's experiences with Famous Amusement Company, in which Harry Koplar was interested, and Harry Arthur of Fanchon & Marco in renting feature and short subject pictures for use at the St. Louis theatre, including disputes as to rental.

"Mr. Depinet in March, 1934, certainly was dissatisfied with his customer in St. Louis and when he received a letter from Harry Arthur in which he claimed he had lost $33,303.84 on RKO product shown at the St. Louis he naturally concluded that the customer was also dissatisfied," he said.

He claimed that his company had simply exercised its legal rights and had not conspired with anyone.

The direct testimony of Mr. Dysart was concluded Saturday at 11:20 a.m. but cross-examination by Former United States Senator James A. Reed for Warner Bros. had not ended when court adjourned shortly before 1 p.m. By consent of counsel for both sides Mr. Dysart was then excused until Saturday, January 18.

On direct examination by Mr. Hardy he described the principal differences between the leases closed with Mr. Snyder and the various proposals made to the Bondholders Protective Committees by Warner Bros.

Mr. Dysart again told of how Former Mayor Frederick H. Kreismann at a meeting in the Dysart office had declared that he was tired of hearing threats by Warners and thought the committee should go through with the Snyder deal, and also of the statement credited to

Wood Describes Suits As "Vexatious Litigation" and Calls Associate of Fanchon & Marco "Arch Enemy of Warners"

Hiram B. Morse, largest individual bondholder, to the effect that "we still have an Attorney General in Washington and I believe he will enforce the law." Dysart also touched on another meeting with Mr. Jeffries on April 6, 1934, but on direct examination was not asked about the meeting of September 18, 1933, at which the committee thought it came to complete agreement with Warners.

Unsigned Draft Admitted

But Mr. Reed did not overlook that meeting and immediately upon opening the cross-examination he asked about it. Mr. Dysart said that they thought an agreement had been reached on all except three points, the length the bonds would be cumulative, the question of control and the amount of money to be advanced by Warner Bros. in paying off the expenses of the reorganization and undeposited bonds. He said that I. Levinson of Chicago, attorney for the committee, was instructed to prepare a memorandum of what had been agreed to. The defense contends that Mr. Levinson was really instructed to prepare the actual proposed contract and that he did so. The unsigned draft was admitted as a defense exhibit.

During the proceedings on Monday Judge Molyneaux several times said that the Government had not yet shown that a conspiracy in restraint of trade existed.

Defense Scores Again

The defense scored a point when Judge Molyneaux sustained an objection by Frederick H. Wood of Warner counsel to testimony by J. M. Ulmer, Cleveland, lawyer, concerning remarks he said were made by Herman Starr at a conference in the Warner offices in New York City on August 14, 1933.

Mr. Ulmer testified that he had gone to New York in response to an invitation from Warner officials to discuss a lease on the Capitol theatre in Wheeling, W. Va., and at the conference Mr. Starr had said in effect that the bondholders on the Wheeling property had better accept the Warner proposition as there was nobody else for them to deal with.

During the arguments Mr. Hardy was mildly rebuked by Judge Molyneaux for charging that Mr. Wood was using tactics tending to confuse the court.

The last witness of the day was Clarence M. Turley, former business associate of Skouras Brothers in operation of the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres, and guarantor with them on some of the bonds issued against those theatre properties. He gave testimony concerning an argument between Herman Starr and Spyros Skouras in a room at the Blackstone in Chicago either on February 27 or 28, 1934. Mr. Turley said that Mr. Starr had declared that Warner Bros. had been mistreated and given a "raw deal" in St. Louis.

Upon cross examination by Mr. Reed for Warners, Mr. Turley revealed that Paramount and Warner pictures had been shown in the three theatres after Skouras Super Theatres Corporation had been ousted by the landlord and during the subsequent receivership that preceded the reorganization of the properties after foreclosure sale.

WANGER BLAZING NEW STUDIO TRAIL IN OUTDOOR NATURAL COLOR FILM

Vividly Hued Flowers Promptly Uprooted When They Failed to Fit Into the Scheme of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine"

Hollywood Is Fancying That Producer Has Carved Out Another Milestone in Entertainment from Fox, Jr., Novel

by GUS McCARTHY

Walter Wanger's "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," first natural color picture filmed practically 100 per cent out of doors, scores of miles from the nearest sound stage, is in the hands of the cutters and musical scorers. Advance information hints at something as revolutionary as "In Old Arizona" was in the early days of talkers. Hollywood is fancying that one of its leading producers has succeeded in carving out another milestone in screen entertainment.

Even in black and white, say those who have seen the partially assembled feature for Paramount release, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" would be an important picture, of unusual dramatic strength. In color—color treated as a supplementary adjunct, to the extent of striving to make audiences unconscious of it after the first few minutes—this typical American drama, modernized from the John Fox, Jr., novel of the Virginia feud country, is nearing the nation's screens to provide probably a real test of a new medium as mass entertainment.

Mr. Wanger has produced the industry's first all-outdoor color feature with the best technical resources available. At the same time, to use his own words, he has instructed Director Henry Hathaway to "throw away the color," meaning that the Wanger company has taken advantage of color utilized as naturally as dialogue and sound and not for mechanical effects. Neutral tones alone are promised.

"When we were shooting the picture, vivid hues and distracting combinations were scientifically avoided," Hathaway explained. "If wild flowers or foliage failed to fit into the scheme of things, they were uprooted."

Little or No Makeup

The stars, Sylvia Sidney, Henry Fonda and Fred MacMurray, and featured players, Fred Stone, Nigel Bruce, Beulah Bondi, Spanky McFarland and Fuzzy Knight, wore little or no makeup. Unusual precautions also were taken to garb them in drab material, mostly brown, gray or dark blue.

"The goal we set at the start of production and never deviated from was to hew to the story line and let color fall where it might," Wanger declared. "Our purpose was to make the people and backgrounds blend naturally into out-of-door action as it would appear to the naked eye."

Color in various forms has been tried in sequences of pictures over a period of several years. The new three-color Technicolor process, however, has gone definitely beyond the experimental phase and has become a practicable medium.

During the past year or more producers have been scanning the color situation with a wary eye. The majority concede its proven value in certain subjects, such as cartoon comedies and travelogues, but have adopted a watchful waiting policy on a medium that might detract from "The story's the thing" appeal of feature picture investments running up to $1,000,000 and more.

Mr. Wanger, maintaining an open mind on color, said a year ago that he would face the problem of deviating from black and white if and when he got a story which in his opinion lent itself perfectly to the medium. Several months ago, when he made up his mind to become a pioneer in the color field, he first planned to choose a subject to be filmed almost entirely on sound stages.

John E. Otterson, president of Paramount, sold Mr. Wanger on the idea of making his color bow with a big outdoor subject. The producer then selected "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." The romantic drama of the Blue Ridge mountains, a best seller for years, twice before has served as screen fare. Cecil B. DeMille directed it in 1915, with Charlotte Walker, Thomas Meighan and Theodore Roberts in leading roles, and it was remade in 1922, with Mary Miles Minter, Antonio Moreno and Ernest Torrence. Always a champion of the theory that a truly great story improves with the years, especially a subject dealing with those mountaineers whose basic emotions and style of living have not changed much in more than a century, Mr. Wanger had his scenarist modernize the main plot without interfering with the flavor and tempo of the novel.

Glaring Detractions Avoided

"I believe color as used in 'The Trail of the Lonesome Pine' enhances the dramatic values to a remarkable degree," he said. "For the first time audiences are given the real beauty of sweeping backgrounds blended into story without causing them to focus their attention on scenery or glaring things to detract from what the personalities are doing and saying. In addition, the public will at last have an opportunity to see film stars as they actually are."

To interpret the fictional characters of these strange mountain folk as transferred to the screen, Mr. Wanger commissioned Rupert Hughes to write a foreword.

Most of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" was shot in the heavily-timbered San Bernardino range of the Sierra Madre mountains, about 125 miles from Hollywood.

Construction of sets for the first outdoor color picture opened new fields, and at the same time presented new problems, to the art director, Alexander Toluboff. It was not so much in creating backgrounds with the right colors, as it was blending them into a composite whole, faithful to nature, taking into consideration the power of the camera to intensify certain things unobserved by a casual glance of the naked eye.

The company was on location two months and inaccessible to tourists. A town—the Gaptown of the story—was built in the mountains. A steam shovel and tons of railroad equipment were among the "props" dragged up the trails. A fire, one of the big scenes, had to wait for a light fall of snow before forest rangers would give their assent.

The average person knows that an oil painting, the priceless old masters included, if inspected at too close range, appears merely to be blotches of pigment. As the eye retreats, the painting takes form in the artistic perfection intended. In natural color photography, the screen is the painting, and the hues of the sets must blend into one other, especially in close-ups, and not look splotchy.

Colors "As Nature Intended"

"Color photography in its relation to motion picture art direction opens up new vistas never before possible to explore," said Mr. Toluboff.

"With color on the screen almost exactly the way it is photographed, the art director must design his sets with the color consciousness of the oil painter or the mural artist. Because the public will see things on the screen as they really are, we obviously are creating them for visual reproduction by using colors as nature intended."

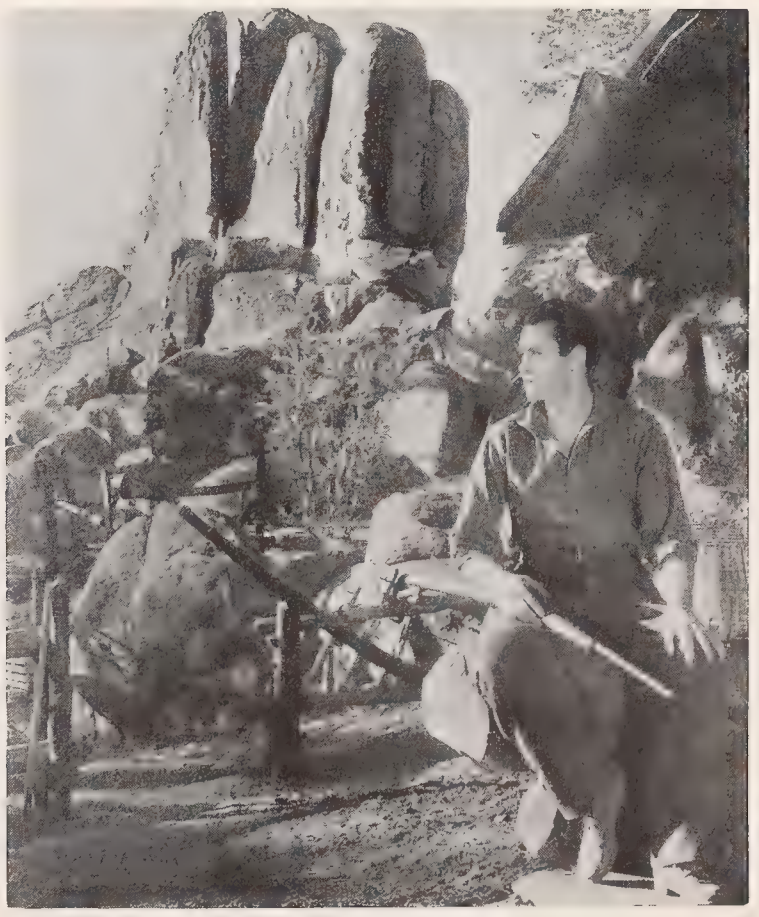
One of the color problems was the photographing of the sky. On seemingly ideal days, it was too blue, giving an artificial hue on the screen. Most scenes were made when at least a few clouds were presnt.

Artificial Lighting Rare

Painted lumber was found to reflect too much light, so weather-beaten lumber from old barns went into much of the construction.

Only in rare instances, or in night work, was artificial lighting used. Color photography, the Wanger cameramen, Robert C. Bruce and Howard Greene, learned, was at its best when the light came from one source, the sun.

A rising tide of color, which appears definitely headed toward Hollywood, holds only one danger for the industry. It may be analogous to Hollywood's "stone age of sound" when studios engaged in a wild scramble to get dialogue, music and noise into pictures, knowing that at the start the novelty of the new medium was sufficient to intrigue millions of fans. Producers didn't have to worry much about stories. As soon as dialogue and sound became accepted as the natural and obvious medium, however, story and production quality again dominated.



The success of color is certain to be based on the same standard. In every instance, first consideration will have to be given to the action in the film, just as has been done in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

Deposit Deadline Feb. 1 For Theatres Equipment

The time for making deposits under the reorganization plan of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., has been extended to February 1, the committee headed by Arthur W. Loasby, announced this week.

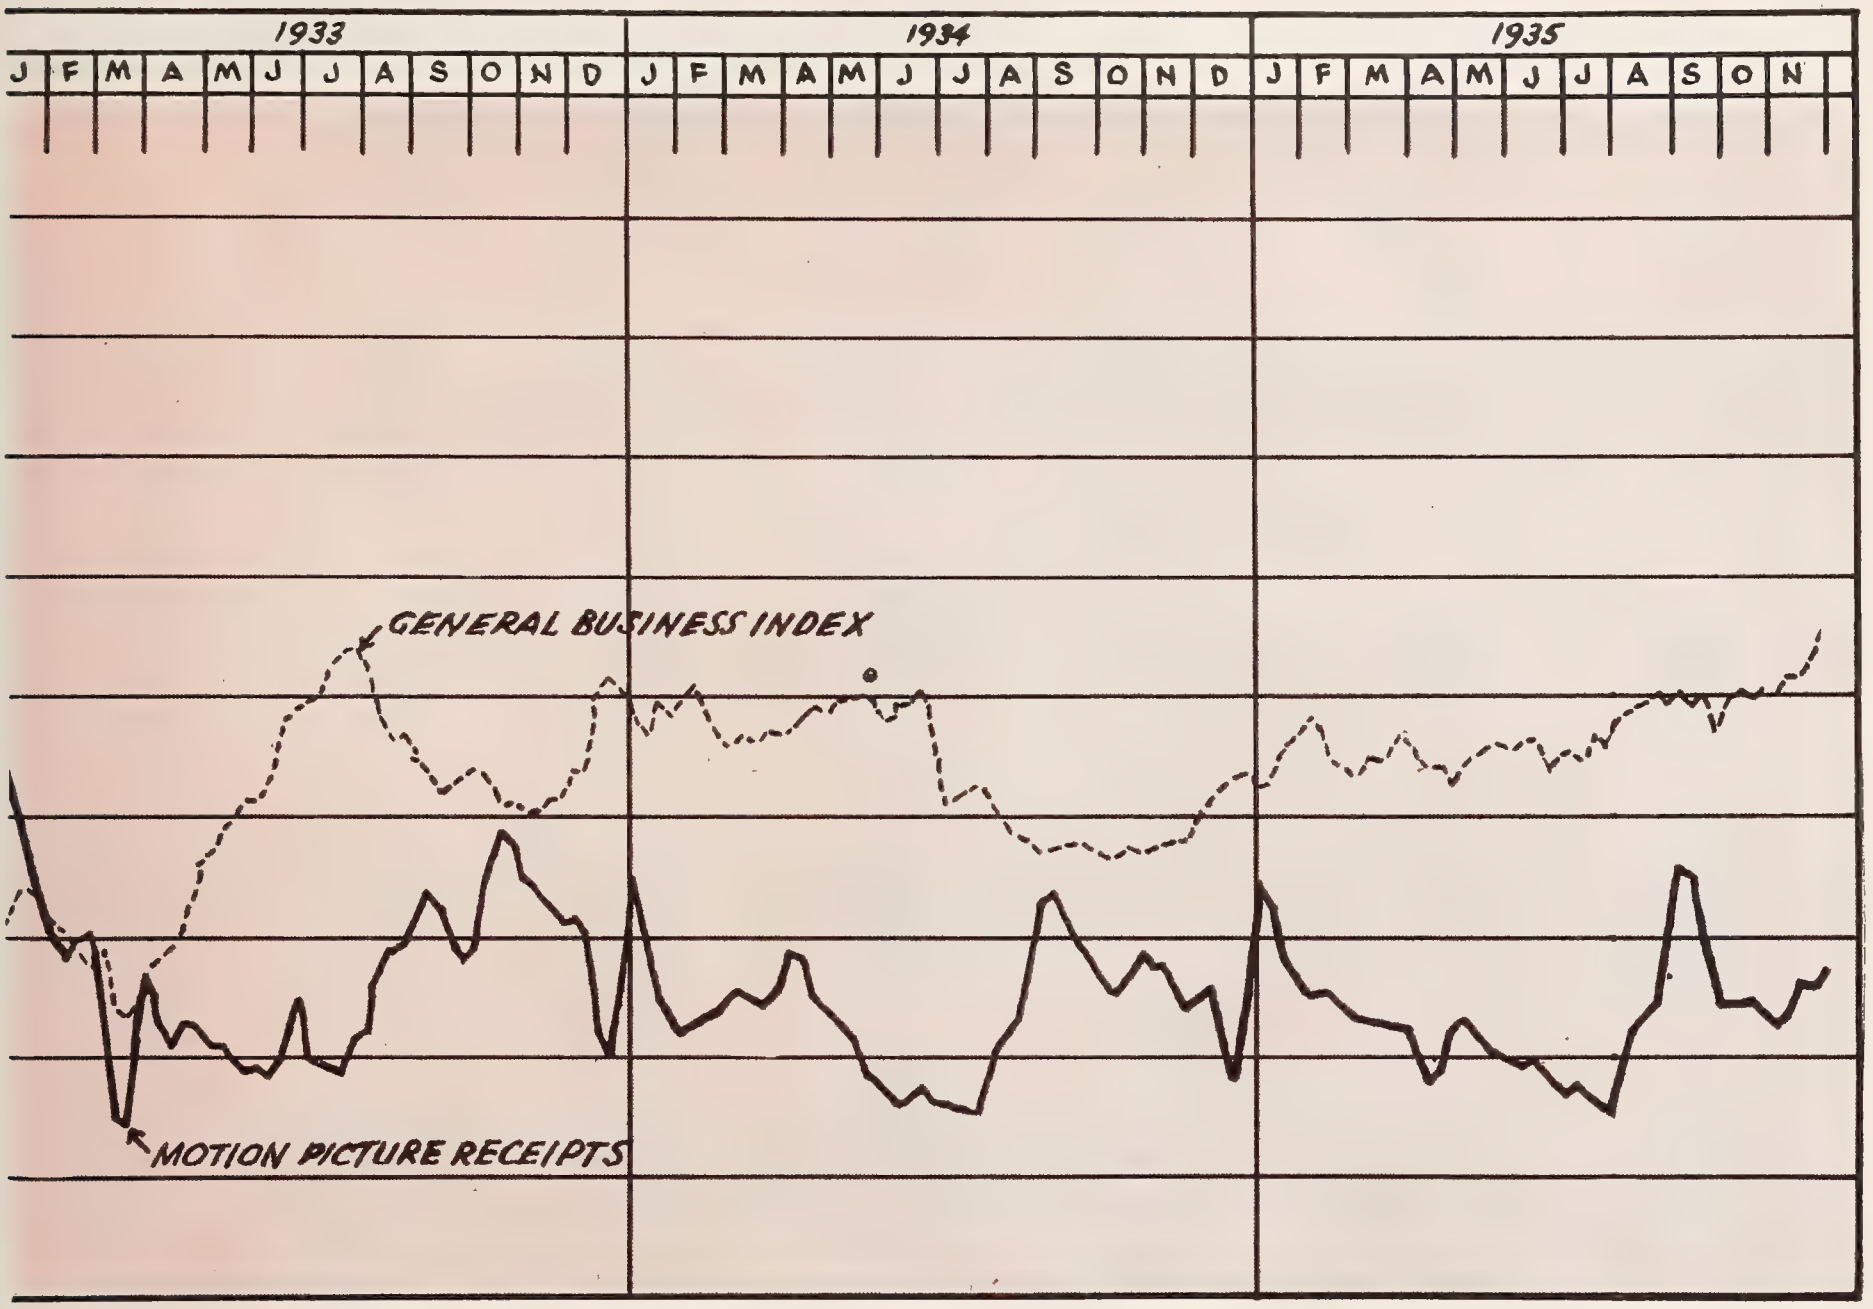
Holders of securities and claims were asked by the committee to deposit with City Bank Farmers Trust Company, depositary, by that date, and only those who deposit are entitled to the benefits of the plan, according to the notice.

More than 58 per cent of the debentures now subject to the plan and holders of more than 90 per cent of the unsecured claims have deposited or agree to deposit. The total of such debentures and claims and of the claims of the Chase National Bank, which has agreed to participate in the plan on the conditions stated therein, is more than 73 per cent of all allowable claims against the company to be adjusted under the plan, it is stated.

It was also declared that the plan has been approved in the chancery court of Delaware and is subject to the continuing supervision of the court, and has been recommended to their subscribers by Standard Statistics, Fitch Investors Service and Moody's Investors Service.

Milwaukee Club to Move

The Variety Club of Milwaukee is taking new and larger quarters on the eighteenth floor of the Schroeder hotel there, which it expects to occupy about February 15th. The club has been located for the past year in the Plankinton hotel. It is planned to hold a dinner dance some time in February at the Schroeder.



Commonwealth Managers Discuss New Drive

Commonwealth Amusement Corporation, which operates 22 theatres in Missouri, Kansas and Iowa, held a meeting of managers in Kansas City Wednesday and Thursday to discuss a new drive, the "1936 History Makers Contest."

C. A. Schultz, vice-president of the corporation, said that in the drive the circuit would use all the good ideas originated by individual managers in a campaign which closed December 28, and such new ones as could be evolved.

Mr. Schultz this week acquired the real estate and theatre premises of the State theatre, Garden City, Kan., from Lester McCoy. Homer Ellison will continue as resident manager for Commonwealth, which will book the theatre.

TO GENERAL BUSINESS INDEX

FACTORS IN VARIANCES BETWEEN GENERAL BUSINESS INDEX AND FILM RECEIPTS. The chart shows that during 1932 the motion picture theatre grosses did not decline as sharply as did the general index, although both reached extreme lows during the bank holiday period. From that date on, however, the line of film receipts does not reflect the pace of recovery indicated in the general index. This was explained by reduced admission prices though more customers were attracted to the box-office. Noted each year in the chart is the customary fall-off of business in the week before Christmas. Cities included in the tabulation are Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Hollywood, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland (Oregon), and San Francisco.

20th-Century-Fox to Repay Issue Out of Treasury

That Twentieth Century-Fox plans to retire its convertible 6 per cent debentures due April 1 out of treasury funds without any new financing was reported this week.

Possibility of reducing the outstanding Fox Film Realty Corporation and Fox Realty Corporation of California first sinking fund 6s of 1942 with a new issue at a lower rate of interest has been discussed. Registration of the parent company under the securities act, in event of such financing, is considered necessary.

The two realty issues as of last March 30 amounted to $748,900 and $1,556,300 respectively. The convertible debentures of Fox Film Corporation were $1,696,600.

Recent overtures by some interested investment companies for the purchase of the Chase National Bank's holdings of Twentieth Century-Fox stock have been reported unsuccessful. Chase as of August 26 held a total of 774,753½ shares of preferred, or 57.01 per cent of the issue, and 387,367¾ shares of common, or 31.58 per cent.

Patterson In New York For Post With Warners

Willard C. Patterson arrived in New York this week from Palm Springs, Cal., where he has been vacationing since resigning as general manager of United Detroit Theatres, and will take over his new post as an assistant to Joseph W. Bernhard, head of Warner theatre operations.

Mr. Patterson will work out of the home office, concentrating on Warner circuit operating policies. His post will be similar to those of Stuart McDonald, Mort Blumenstock and Clayton Bond, who are also assistants to Mr. Bernhard.

Bay State Billboard Battle Appears To Be Nearing End

A billboard battle that began in 1925 and that has had a far-reaching effect on millions of dollars of outdoor advertising in Massachusetts and in other parts of the country seems set for a quick finish. Billboard interests of the Bay State, according to a reliable source, will within a few days withdraw an appeal to the United States Supreme Court on an adverse decision by the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court in 1933 on whether billboards adjacent to highways must be removed.

The waiving of this appeal, of particular interest to the motion picture industry, is expected to result in some 10,000 billboards in this state being moved within the prescribed limit from highways and otherwise changed to comply with State regulations passed in 1924.

HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Makers of Musicals Now Recognize Differences Between Revue and Spectacle — Laughton Wins Guild Honor for December — 10 Films Start, 11 Are Finished

New Musicals

THERE is a definite trend in the big musicals away from numbers with regiments of girls and toward emphasis of specialty numbers in semi-closeup with only a handful of performers, a sign that the screen at last is beginning to differentiate between the revue type of entertainment and the spectacle. At one time "musical" was synonymous with hosts of chorus girls popping out in settings that logically would have been crowded with half a dozen dancers.

Of late, however, producers have been paying a bit more attention to the realistic side of dance routines. Where there are multitudes there usually is a firm foundation in plausibility, and they are introduced credibly in the story instead of being flung in without explanation.

An illustration is in "Rose Marie," which features a spectacular dance routine with hundreds of performers. The occasion, however, is an Indian celebration. The several films based upon amateur hours on the radio are another good illustration.

"Thanks a Million," one of the ace musicals of the year, is based upon the adventures of a small stranded theatrical troupe. The troupe stays small throughout to the definite benefit of the film. From the same studio comes "The King of Burlesque," dealing with the financial ups and downs of a producer of lavish girl shows, and the numbers quite logically show immense choruses.

Showmen will watch this trend, and for such offerings as "The Great Ziegfeld" will emphasize spectacularly staged dance numbers. By the same token, they will not use the same approach for every "musical" released.

Preview Problem

Large studios are experiencing increasing difficulty in handling requests for seats at previews of big productions, the "Four Alarm Previews." Word usually leaks out several days in advance, and queues form at the box-office as early as five in the afternoon. Managers who haven't the heart to turn away cash customers, place on sale several rows of seats reserved for studio use. This means that when the reviewers arrive all seats are occupied. Studio executives seem to feel that it is an injustice to have a picture reviewed without benefit of an audience reaction. And press agents have not yet determined which is the lesser of the two evils.

Laughton Honor

Charles Laughton received the top vote from the Screen Actors Guild for the best performance in December. Laughton received the award through his performance in MGM's "Mutiny on the Bounty." Kay Francis received honorable mention for Warner's "I Found Stella Parrish" and Eddie Quillan for "Mutiny." The Guild voted "Mutiny on the Bounty" the best screen play of the month. The script was written by Talbot Jennings, Jules Furthman and Carey Wilson. Paramount's "So Red the Rose" and "Annie Oakley" from RKO received honorable mention. . . . George Browne, IATSE president, and John P. Nick, vice-president, left Hollywood for the union meeting in Miami. . . . Trem Carr has had offers of executive jobs from two major film concerns in Great Britain. . . . John E. Otterson arrived on the Coast and immediately went into a series of conferences with Paramount studio executives. . . . John Ford has signed with Pioneer Productions to direct a series of probably four color pictures, in an agreement which permits him to do outside pictures. . . . The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences is discussing the results of recent tests on a proposed standard density tablet now being made up under the supervision of its subcommittee on release print quality improvement.

Studios Resume

Recovering from its holiday celebration, Hollywood went to its production work with vim. The first full week in January saw 10 new features started and 11 finished. Among the newly started productions, as well as those completed, are several potentially important attractions.

Putting three pictures each into work, Paramount and Warner Brothers vied for premier starting honors. One of the new Paramount features is a Walter Wanger production, "The Moon Is Our Home." It will present Margaret Sullavan, Henry Fonda, Charles Butterworth, Beulah Bondi and Margaret Hamilton. William Seiter is directing. Directly under the company's auspices, "I Married a Soldier" was put into work. Marlene Dietrich is starred with Charles Boyer. The supporting cast lists Akim Tamiroff, Walter Catlett, Victor Killian, Samuel Hinds, Ted Oliver and Siegfried Rumann. Henry Hathaway is directing. The third picture, "Too Many Parents," will present David Holt, Billy Lee, George Ernest, Frances Turner, Doris Lloyd, Lester Matthews, Porter Hall and Julie Hayden. Robert McGowan is directing.

"Green Pastures" Starts

Probably the most important of the Warner starters is "Green Pastures," seconded by "Hearts Divided." "Green Pastures" is being directed by Marc Connolly, who wrote and directed the stage play, and will present Rex Ingram, Oscar Polk, Ernest Whitman, Frank Wilson, Freddie Archibald, Anna Mae Fritz and George Reed. Marion Davies is starred in "Hearts Divided," supported by Dick Powell, Edward Everett Horton, Arthur Treacher, Charles Ruggles, Henry Stephenson, Walter Kingsford, Etienne Girardot and Clara Blandick. Frank Borzage is directing. Last of the group started, "Murder by an Aristocrat," will present Margaret Lindsay, Lyle Talbot, Mary Treen, Addison Richards, Florence Fair, Eddie Shubert and Lottie Williams. Frank McDonald is directing.

As its initial production effort, the newly formed Pickford-Lasky Productions started "One Rainy Afternoon." The cast includes Francis Lederer, Ida Lupino, Countess Lev de Margret, Georgia Cane, Roland Young, Joseph Cawthorne, Hugh Herbert, Erik Rhodes, Adrian Borg and Angy Norton. Roland V. Lee is directing.

At 20th Century-Fox "Charlie Chan at the Circus" started. Warner Oland is featured, supported by Keye Luke, June Lang, Francis Ford, Wade Boteler, the Brasnos, Drue Layton and J. Carroll Naish. Harry Lachman is directing.

The last of the starting features, "The Show Goes On," is a Sol Lesser production. The cast lists Bobby Breen, Henry Armetta, George Houston, Vivienne Osborne, Grant Withers, Inez Courtney, Spencer Charters and Richard Carle. Kurt Neumann is directing.

Radio Completes Four

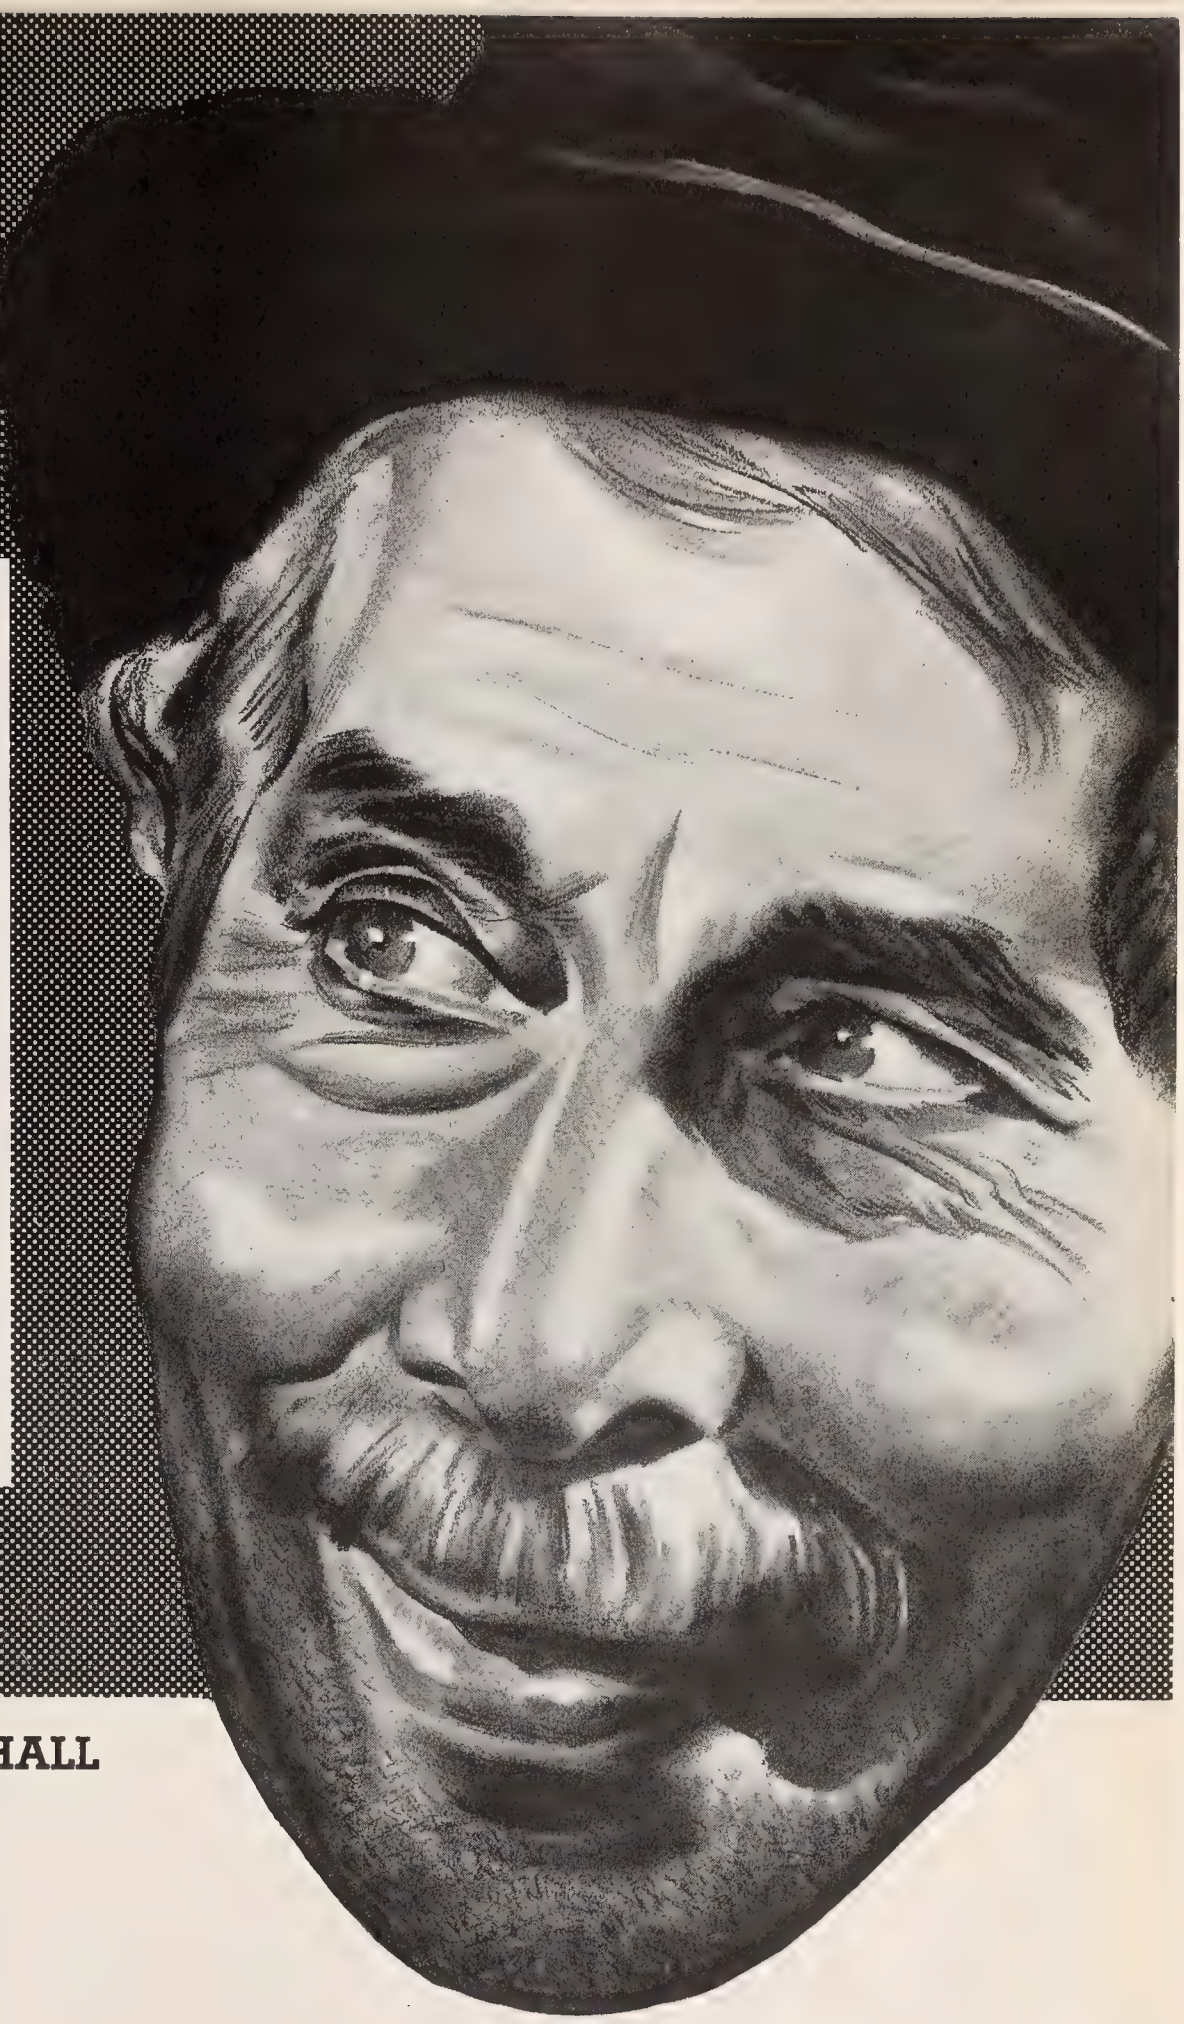
Four pictures were finished by Radio. "Follow the Fleet" teams Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers again. Support includes Randolph Scott, Harriet Hillard, Kay Sutton, Jane Hamilton, Maxine Jennings, Lucille Ball, Thelma Leeds, Eddie Burns, Joy Hodges, Betty Grable and Herbert Rawlinson. Mark Sandrich directed. "Don't Bet on Love" will present Gene Raymond, Wendy Barrie, Helen Broderick, Erik Rhodes, Morgan Wallace, Eddie Gribbon, Guinn Williams, William Collier, Sr., Mary McLaren, Eddie Kane, Addison Randall and Billy Gilbert. Leigh Jason directed. "The Wild West" is a Wheeler and Woolsey with Dorothy Lee, Harry Woods, Ethan Laidlaw, Richard Alexander, Delmar Watson, Nelson McDaniell, Maurice Black, John Ince and Jim Thorpe. Fred Guoil directed. In "Thoroughbreds All" will be seen Moroni Olsen, Louise Lattimer, John Arledge, Ray Mayer, the dog Lightning and Clem Bevans. Glen Tryon directed.

Twentieth Century-Fox completed three pictures. "Prisoner of Shark Island" will present Warner Baxter, Gloria Stuart, Ernest Whitman, John Carradine, Harry Carey, Douglas Wood, Paul Fix, Fred Kohler, Jr., Francis MacDonald, Arthur Byron, O. P. Heggie, Claude Gillingwater, Francis Ford and John McGuire. John Ford directed. The cast for "The Roughneck" includes Paul Kelly, Arline Judge, Mona Barrie, Gregory Ratoff, Sammy Cohen, George Chandler, Halliwell Hobbes, Charles Stevens, Robert Homans, Mischa Auer, Granville Bates, Ernest Alexander, Ed Brophy, Wade Boteler and Stanley Blystone. Lew Seiler directed. The third picture, "Every Saturday Night," will present June Lang, Thomas Beck, Jed Prouty, Spring Byington.

Two Finished at MGM

Two pictures finished at MGM. In "Three Godfathers" will be seen Chester Morris, Lewis Stone, Walter Brennan, Irene Hervey, Roger Imhof, Harvey Clarke, Victor Potel, Willard Robertson, John Sheehan, Robert Livingston and Sidney Toler. Richard Boleslawski directed. "Garden Murder Case" presents Edmund Lowe, Virginia Bruce, H. B. Warner.

Paramount finished "F Man," which will present Jack Haley, William Frawley, Grace Bradley, Sam Flint, Frank Parker, Robert Middlemass, Edward McWade, Billy Bilbert, Norman Willis, Onslow Stevens and Sam Ash. Eddie Cline directed.



Darmour Productions completed "Shadows of the Orient." The cast includes Regis Toomey, Esther Ralston, Sidney Blackmer, Oscar Apfel, J. Farrell MacDonald, Kit Guard and Matty Fain. Burt Lynwood directed.

Rose Marie

(MGM)

Love Drama

Opportunity to present this picture may actually be considered a privilege. Patrons may be expected to consider its showing an event of importance, an occasion of unusual interest and satisfaction, as indicated by the spirited reaction on the part of the paying preview audience. Publicized with a degree of enthusiasm paralleling the intelligence, care and skill incorporated into the picture in its preparation and production, Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy help the production to entertainment value exceeding that which was experienced by "Naughty Marietta," which first teamed them.

In theme "Rose Marie" is human interest love drama, in which the element of beautiful music, finely sung, is an integral factor. It is the romantic story of an opera diva and a Royal Canadian mounted policeman. All but a few short sequences are filmed against natural scenic backgrounds. The commercial value of these equals the worth of story content, the musical appeal or the quality of personal performances. The combination of all should be an inspiration to true showmen.

At the height of a triumph in Montreal, when she knows she may be able to do something about a secret sorrow, the singer learns that her brother has broken jail and the Mounties are out to get their man. Rushing to the North Woods, robbed and deserted by her guide, made to look tragically ridiculous as she attempts to match her artistic talents with those of a honky tonky red hot, she meets, is befriended by, becomes infatuated with and runs away from the Mountie. Saved from drowning by him, love lives anew as he sings the familiar "Rose Marie." It flames intensely—and so does entertainment, as alone with the Mountie in the woods she hears the haunting strains of "Indian Love Call" and love is glorious as first he, then she and finally both together sing its legend. Under the spell of love both thrill to the weird exoticism of the semi-barbaric Totem Pole dance spectacle.

Alone she finds her brother and her happiness is great. A twist of pathos ensues as the Mountie, despite his love, is responsive only to the call of duty and claims his man. It seems that an end has come to a beautiful dream.

The scene shifts to the opera again. Singing "La Tosca's" theme aria, the star hears only the intermittent strains of "Indian Love Call." Collapsing, she is returned to the Northland to recuperate. In the land where her heart is, the haunting melody again comes and with it the Mountie and eternal love.

While the show is essentially romance and drama, and those factors are of the appealing quality that one expects of the prestige of the producing company, director and players, there is no lack of adequate contrasting comedy. While quite often the power of action, dialogue and music may cause tears to flow, occasions for smiles and laughter are not absent. So constituted, the show has definite commercial and entertainment promise. But it seems that, in the long run, the music as rendered by Miss MacDonald, Eddy and in the operatic episodes by Allan Jones will be the dominant factor to amplify the worthiness of the straight theatric ingredients.

Previewed in Westwood Village Theatre, Los Angeles. Localed adjacent to U. C. L. A. campus, Santa Monica and Beverly Hills, word of what was being previewed got out. Lines several blocks long gathered before 6 p. m. and the house was packed to capacity two hours before showing. Salvos of applause, which greeted the title and several times interrupted the preview, may be accepted as the basis for the remarks made in the opening paragraph.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Produced by Hunt Stromberg. Directed by W. S. Van Dyke. Screen play by Frances Goodrich, Albert Hackett and Alice Duer Miller. Based on the stage production of Arthur Hammerstein. From the play by Otto A. Harbach and Oscar Hammerstein II. Music composed by Rudolf Friml and Herbert Stothart. Exclusive Story

(MGM)

Drama

Moving in an ever present but seldom actually seen atmosphere of vicious gangsterism, this production is really a character drama. It treats of a newspaper reporter and his wife, a killer gangster minion, a racketeer boss, an attorney appointed special prosecutor and his sweetheart and a pair of racketeer victims, an humble grocer and his daughter. Built of materials that make scarehead newspaper stories, it is, at various times, tensely dramatic, gayly comic, wildly exciting and tenderly romantic.

The picture opens as a newspaper story. Crusading reporter Higgins is forced to print a retraction of a slimy political graft story. Switching to its gangster complex, grocer Devlin and his daughter, Ann, through the medium of petty "numbers" racketeer Acello, feel the might of organized crime. Appealing to Higgins to tear the lid off conditions, Ann at first is ridiculed. When muscler-in Comos is killed in her home as he is about to make a deal with Devlin to buy his store, Higgins' crusading instincts are aroused. His first story arouses the public and Barton is appointed special investigator. His fear of gangster vengeance, plus the pleadings of sweetheart Tess, leave him unwilling to take any steps despite Higgins' proddings and Ann's scathing derision.

After much that has little meaning but yet is interesting, Devlin sells his store and is given a job, supposedly taking an innocent cargo of paint to Havana. Word flashes that the ship is afire at sea. Galvanized into action, Barton, who is growing to admire Ann, accompanies Higgins on an airplane flight to scoop rivals. Tossed overboard, he parachutes down, is picked up by a rescuing vessel, saves Devlin and radios the exclusive story.

Going hammer and tongs after the gangsters, Barton and Higgins see Devlin killed and Tess kidnaped. Stymied by the power of invisible forces, both are helpless until Ann turns up Acello. Forcing a confession under the threat of being blasted to pieces by an infernal machine, Barton and Higgins get the dope that leads to a raid on Werther's headquarters. At the promise of quick justice to be dealt out to him, Acello and the rest of the gang, Tess surrenders Barton to Ann and Higgins goes home to his wife.

Two bits of work by Calleia, coming off a "dope bat" and cringing in terror before the time bomb, won applause from the audience. Stuart Erwin made the part of the reporter natural and human in relation to his character and family ties as it is not ordinarily seen on the screen. They are the standout performances in which, in relation to the story, patrons are apt to find interest and entertainment.

Previewed in Alexander Theatre, Glendale, suburban first-run house. Preview audience sometimes found itself at loss to understand fully how the story's various segments were being combined, but got real wallop out of suspense packed time bomb finale and the at-sea incidents.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Lady Consents

(Radio)

Dramatic Romance

Modernly keyed dramatic romance, this is an arresting story of worldly desire versus ethereal love. Semi-sophisticated in character, yet possessing the qualities in story content and acting values ordinarily appealing to both class and mass, the picture has the elements of popular attraction, under proper showmanship guidance. Successful selling necessitates intelligent handling lest in some quarters, smaller houses particularly, the show's real entertainment sock may not be appreciated until it is too late. Fundamentally "The Lady Consents" is a story of human beings. It treats of human beings doing what they want, saying what they say, suffering, sacrificing and triumphing naturally and learning their lessons in a natural way. Holding tenaciously to its theme, sticking closely to its premise and the realism of it as it tells of a man in love with his wife but infatuated with another woman, its sole thrill is the real thrill of seeing and studying romance in the raw.

The show's drama, not lacking in comedy contrast, moves to the pace of sparkling dialogue and cleverly contrived situations. Loving her husband dearly, Anne Talbot consents to divorce when Michael convinces her that he is destined for greater happiness with Jerry Mannerly. Married life with Jerry is an empty thing for Michael, as it is totally devoid of all the sympathetic companionship he knew with Anne. Although enjoying a friendly relationship with Michael's father, Jim, in whom is centered the story's comedy contrast, and thrilled to know that another man, Stanley Ashton, wants her, Anne, lives in the belief that "he may be married to her but I am still his wife."

Brought together at Jim's deathbed, Anne and Michael realize that their love is eternal. But Jerry rejects Michael's plea for divorce, first because she treasures the social position and wealth her status as his wife gives her, and secondly because of that age-old determination of a woman to show that she can hold onto the thing she owns despite all competition. Anne, however, is none the less determined and resourceful. With Susan carrying gossip reports, Anne contrives a seemingly compromising situation with Michael that forces Jerry to consent to divorce.

A picture that should make audiences laugh much and maybe sob a bit, it's a story of heartache, sacrifice, frustration and triumph of more than ordinary appeal to women. Negative from any other exploitation angle save that of intelligently prepared advertising and publicity copy in which the worth of cast name and director prestige are not ignored, there should be a dignity and sincerity attached to copy, which in avoiding anything savoring of sugary sentimentality convinces class and mass alike that this is an attraction worthy of their attention.

Previewed at the Pantages Theatre, Hollywood. The theme and class of acting held the audience in quiet attention. Remarks heard in the lobby seemed to indicate the picture was the most suitable Ann Harding has had in a long time, with many compliments voiced for the work of Herbert Marshall and Edward Ellis.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Petrified Forest

(Warner)

Character Drama

Here is a class picture with definite mass appeal. Stepping completely out of any rutted path, its striking power to stir the emotion of every human imagination establishes it as an attraction worthy of the attention of all.

"The Petrified Forest" is a melodramatic character drama in which the substantiating elements of romantic love interest, adventure, comedy, hope and fear, triumph and tragedy and inspirational mental conflict, all held together by rigid suspense and moving to the pitch of sparkling dialogue and nerve tensing action, are intelligently blended. It is directed and played in a manner to give the picture an aura of vivid realism, an attribute that skillfully embellishes its legitimate human interest.

The show gives audiences an absorbing, finely acted story to arouse and hold their attention. Production values, convincingly fixing the atmosphere of its desert gas station-restaurant locale, par the worth of story content. It provides exhibitors countless opportunities to exploit the commercial value of these qualities to the fullest extent. It further affords the name value of two of the screen's foremost dramatic artists, supplementing this factor with the worths of several other outstanding personalities.

Power to stimulate and hold interest is concentrated in the story and the way it is told. Cultured Alan Squier (Leslie Howard plays the role he originated in the stage play) wanders into the desert station. Making a strange friendship with Gabrielle, he arouses the jealous fury of ambitious suitor Boze. Touching heart interest and laughable comedy, made poignant by the antics of Gramp and Jason, follow hitch-hiking to an unknown destination in the Chisholms' car, Alan's departure brings sorrow to Gabrielle. The party is held up by escaped killer convict, Duke Mantee. Escaping, Alan trudges back to the station to be made prisoner with Gabby, Gramp, Boze and later the Chisholms, by Mantee.

Ensues a suspense packed series of sequences. With all at the mercy of Mantee's guns, Alan sees in Gabby a kindred artistic spirit in whom might be carried through to fruition the noble dreams so tragically denied him. Dialogue carries the theme, though threats of desperate action menace and occur alternately to provoke laughter and throat tightening pathos. The two mental opposites, Alan and Mantee—the scholar and the killer—make a deal. Writing his will making Gabby the beneficiary of his insurance policy, his sole earthly possession, Alan proposes that Mantee kill him.

Dynamic suspense breaks into gun-roaring action as a posse rides up to surround the station. Fighting for his life and escape, Mantee is a demon of destruction. Quietly but with just as vivid force Alan seeks to insult him into firing the fatal bullet. Desperately barring the door to a desperate man's one chance to freedom, Alan is shot by Mantee. He dies in Gabrielle's arms, triumphant in the realization that he has assured to her funds to enable her to complete her education and carry on in the paths he had hoped to walk.

Previewed in the Warner Beverly theatre, class neighborhood house, the picture quickly swept the audience into its mood. Action and dialogue, several times interrupted by applause in which the paying customers as heard from a seat high up on the balcony steps seemed more enthusiastic than the studio crowd, gave conclusive evidence that under guide of intelligent showmanship the picture has potential popularity with both class and mass.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Comedy Drama

Problems presented to the exhibitor in this dramatic romance are several. Story construction and development are beclouded, with resultant hop-skipping in the action, a shortage of smash sequence, labored dialogue, and overstrained performances, with the exception of that of Cary Grant. Out of these obstacles the most plausible direction of showman endeavor would seem to be emphasis upon the selling name of Katharine Hepburn, coupled with the fact that the subject matter is from Compton Mackenzie's popular novel.

It is the story of a girl who, to help her erring father, turns boy and abets him and a chance acquaintance in rascalities until a sizeable job, which involves theft of jewels from a duped maid, shows her that her heart is not in the business, whereupon she organizes the four of them into a traveling small-time show troupe, and finally meets, and gets, the right man.

The story opens with Katharine Hepburn donning boy's clothing to get out of France in a hurry with her father, Edmund Gwenn, whose accounts are under suspicion, and justifiably so.

Cary Grant's is the most convincing performance, in a role which is fresh, and at the same time contributes something toward stabilizing the action, a fact which may be of value in shaping the course of showmanship.—Rovelstad, New York.

Special

In this third dimensional short, seen through the red and green glasses, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has introduced a real novelty to the screen. Without the colored glasses it is a curious double exposure variegated color film, but seen through the lenses it has the striking effect of producing illusion. For instance, in this first of the series, a man throws a baseball seemingly at the camera, the ball appears to come right from the screen and into the audience. A pistol fired, a trombone player working the slide, the squirting water from a seltzer bottle and a girl on a trapeze produce the same result, of illusion. Audience reaction was decidedly favorable when the short was screened before a capacity house at the Capitol theatre in New York. Pete Smith had described the use of the glasses and the showing began. The audience laughed, howled, ducked and throughly enjoyed it.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The March of Time

(RKO Radio)

Of Interest

The tenth issue of "The March of Time," while lacking the punch of several previous issues, touches on two important news events of the day, of the three episodes shown. One of these is the country's most ambitious undertaking in regional planning, the Tennessee Valley program of flood control, improvement of navigation on inland streams, and soil erosion prevention, and its harnessing of vast electricity. Another concerns the secret settlement of three barren islands in the Pacific, hitherto claimed by Great Britain, and which are to be used as bases for the new United States airline to Australia. The third episode presents the only pictures ever made of Anatole Diebler, who represents the third generation of a dynasty of French executioners.—Running time, 20 minutes.

DEATH TAKES GILBERT, ROXY, CARR, SENNWALD, MORRIS & ROBERTSON

Showmen, Star Players, Newspaper Writers, Composer and Executive Among Personalities Who Passed On in a Week

Death took a heavy toll this week from the ranks of the motion picture and allied theatrical activities, as follows:

Samuel Lionel Rothafel, pioneer motion picture showman.

John Gilbert, actor

Andre David Sennwald, motion picture newspaper critic.

Harry Carr, newspaper columnist, author and former production supervisor.

William Morris, actor.

Ian Robertson, actor and producer.

Margot Early, actress.

William Rudolph, pioneer press agent.

Theodore Augustus Metz, composer.

Nathanial T. Moody, Erpi executive.

Dr. Ronald George Canti, pioneer in scientific films.

Harry E. Otey, theatre manager.

Mrs. L. L. Devereaux, exhibitor.

Louis R. Buckholz, exhibitor.

Michael Saks, talent manager.

Samuel Schwartz, manager Apollo theatre, Atlantic City, killed in plane crash in Arkansas.

Samuel L. Rothafel

In sharp contrast to the brilliance of his career in the motion picture theatre, Samuel Lionel Rothafel—known to millions as "Roxy"—died unexpectedly in his sleep, in his suite at New York's Gotham Hotel, on Sunday. His wife, Rosa, was slumbering in an adjoining room. He was found by the family's maid, dead from a heart attack, as she attempted to awaken him at the orders of Roxy's secretary, Mrs. Hope Williams, widow of J. D. Williams.

With his years fast waning—Roxy was 57 years old and Minnesota born—the intrepid Mr. Rothafel—Rothapfel, it earlier was spelled—was planning to take over the management of two Broadway theatres, it was said, and stage "Roxy Comes A-Calling," radio program.

Mr. Rothafel's scintillating, all but fabulous career, which skyrocketed upward from obscurity to burst into brilliance, is recounted on page 13.

Funeral services were held Wednesday morning in the Central Synagogue, Lexington Avenue, New York. Burial was in Linden Hills Cemetery, Brooklyn.

Crowds viewed the body as it lay in state at Stephen Merritt's funeral chapel. United States Marines were the escort to the Synagogue where Rabbi Jonah Wise conducted services. The Marines blew taps at the cemetery and fired a volley over the grave.

John Gilbert

Members of a Hollywood fire department inhalator squad tried for hours to revive John Gilbert, dapper screen lover, as he lay stricken by a heart attack on the floor of his home on Tower Grove Drive, on the outskirts of the film colony.

Mr. Gilbert died relatively young, in his 39th year, and although he slipped from stardom in recent years, he will long be remembered for his part in the historic dramatization of America's contribution to the winning of the World War, in "The Big Parade," where he reached stellar heights, epitomizing the youth of America.

John Gilbert, who was born Jack Pringle, in Logan, Utah, had his first professional experience on the stage, starting, in films, some 20 years ago, in "Apostle of Vengeance," for Thomas Ince. Outstanding among his starring vehicles—for First National, Fox and long for MGM—were: "Heart of the Hills," "Count of Monte Cristo," "He Who Gets Slapped," "The Merry Widow," "The Big Parade," "His Glorious Night," "Hollywood Revue," "Redemption," "Fast Workers," "Queen Christina," and last year he appeared in "The Captain Hates the Sea."

He was planning a screen comeback in London upon recuperation from an illness which had kept him in bed since Christmas, during which he had suffered two previous heart attacks.

First Role When a Year Old

Born of theatrical parents, Jack Pringle's first stage part was in an Eddie Foy production at the age of one. He was a rubber goods salesman in Seattle, a newspaper reporter of a sort in San Francisco and stage manager in Spokane of the Baker Stock Company. He was fired the first night on the job for running down the curtain on "Alias Jimmy Valentine" ahead of time.

In 1915 he arrived in Los Angeles with little cash and lots of ambition. Taking an extra's job at $30 weekly with William S. Hart, then western king, he next played opposite Enid Bennett and Louis Glaum, big stars of the times, but, despairing of becoming a successful actor, he turned to scenario writing, making good at $60 a week. He returned to the screen, however.

Mr. Gilbert and Greta Garbo once were the most popular romantic players on the screen, appearing together in "Love," "Flesh and the Devil" and "A Woman of Affairs." Miss Garbo forged further ahead. Gilbert did not, because, so it was said, his voice was pitched too high. He spent a fortune trying to remedy the handicap, but he never attained the heights he had reached in silent pictures.

John Gilbert Was Star of "The Big Parade"; New York 'Times' and Los Angeles 'Times' Writers Die

From Hunger to $400,000

Wealth and fame, apparently, were as naught, according to a short account of his life written by himself some years ago. In that autobiography, the man who had married and divorced four celebrated beauties—Olivia Burwell, Leatrice Joy, Ina Claire and Virginia Bruce—revealed that he had had a miserable childhood and that he had, at times, "been hungry enough to eat out of garbage cans." He left "around $400,000 or perhaps a half-million," Peyton Moore, one of his attorneys, said, and the will named Virginia Bruce, his fourth wife, as beneficiary. The actor also bequeathed $10,000 to Leatrice Joy Gilbert, 12 years old, his daughter by his second wife, Leatrice Joy. When Miss Bruce dies, the will stipulates that the residue shall go to their daughter.

The time and place of the funeral, held in Hollywood last Saturday, had been kept secret to avoid crowds. Only a few close friends were admitted, by card, to the chapel, where the Reverend Neal Dodd read the Episcopal burial service.

Andre D. Sennwald

The death of Andre Sennwald, in a gas explosion that rocked the apartment building where he lived, was considerably more violent than the quietness of the career he had pursued along Broadway as motion picture critic of the New York Times.

"Probably suicide" was the tentative verdict of authorities Monday, after an investigation by assistant medical examiner Milton Halpern, who said that Mr. Sennwald, a youngster at 28, had died of asphyxiation by illuminating gas before the explosion wrecked the penthouse apartment and jeopardized the lives of dozens of neighbors.

Mr. Sennwald was apparently happy, and in the front rank of his profession. But intimates on Broadway disclosed that he suffered from insomnia and an eye disease which threatened his sight.

Graduated from New York University and the Columbia School of Journalism, he joined the reportorial staff of the New York Times in 1930. In September, 1934, Mr. Sennwald was unexpectedly catapulted into the motion picture editor's chair that had been left vacant with the resignation of Fred Mordaunt Hall. Mr. Sennwald's appointment to that position on the powerful Times was considered quite an accomplishment at 24. Subsequently he gave considerable expression in his Times writings in praise of Soviet films.

Ironically, his last review, appearing in Saturday's Times a comparatively few hours before his death, was on "The Ghost Goes West."

The funeral took place Tuesday morning at the Funeral Church of Frank E. Campbell, Inc., on Broadway, and burial was in Ferncliff Cemetery, Westchester.

Mr. Sennwald is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Andre Sennwald, of the Bronx; his wife of less than two years, the former Yvonne Beaudry, and by three brothers, Herbert, of the United States Marine Corps, Raymond and Stanley. He was of Swiss-Welsh descent, born in New York, and was voted by his high school classmates as the "most likely to succeed."

Harry Carr

Death wrote "30" for Harry Carr, on Saturday night in Los Angeles, the victim of a heart ailment.

Mr. Carr, wellknown along the California coast as the conductor of "The Lancer," a column in the Los Angeles Times, was an author who for forty years mirrored in words the world's passing show. At one time he was a writer and supervisor of stories for David Wark Griffith, Cecil Blount DeMille, Mack Sennett and Jesse Lasky.

Survived by his widow, two children and three grandchildren, Tipton, Iowa-born Harry Carr was 58 years old. He started as a cub reporter on the Los Angeles Times 39 years ago, was a World War and foreign correspondent for the paper, a director of its publishing company, and vice president of the League for the Preservation of San Juan Bautista. He wrote "Old Mother Mexico" and "The West Is Still Wild."

HARRY CARR

William Morris

William Morris, stage and screen actor, father of Chester Morris, motion-picture actor, died of a heart attack at his Hollywood home Saturday. He was 75 years old.

Mr. Morris went to Hollywood six years ago. He had appeared in several motion pictures and in 1932 played in the stage play, "The Vinegar Tree," in San Francisco.

Surviving, besides Chester Morris, are his widow, the former Etta Hawkins, actress; two other sons, Adrian, an actor, and Gordon Morris, a writer, and a daughter, Willi Morris.

The stage career of William Morris extended over 52 years. He made his first appearance in Boston in 1876 in "Ferreol" and thereafter appeared in a new play almost every year until 1924. His last appearance on the Broadway stage was in "The Unknown Warrior" at the Charles Hopkins Theater in 1928.

He had appeared with W. H. Crane, Augustin Daly, Helene Modjeska, Olga Nethersole, Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske and was a former partner of the late Edward E. Rice.

Mr. Morris was born in Boston, the son of the late Henry and Maria Lloyd Morris. Soon after his debut, made at the Boston Museum, he appeared with Mme. Modjeska in "Odette."

Mr. Morris was a member of The Players.

Ian Robertson

Ian Robertson, actor and producer, died at Farnham, Surrey, in England on Sunday, at the age of 78. A brother of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, he was stage manager of all Sir Johnston's productions since he first took over the management of the Lyceum theatre in 1895. He spent ten years in the United States playing engagements with Modjeska, Edwin Booth, Kyrle Bellew and Charles Frohman. As stage manager of the Boston Museum Theatre, he produced 30 plays, including many Shakespearean dramas.

Ian Robertson was a son of John Forbes-Robertson, author and art critic.

Margot Early

Margaret Ehrlich, 18 years old, motion picture actress known on the screen as Margot Early, was killed Sunday in Hollywood in a motor car crash as she was returning from a party at the home of Marion Davies, actress.

Mary Grace, also 18, an actress under contract to Warner Brothers Studio, who was driving the car, suffered a possible skull fracture and internal injuries. She was at the Santa Monica Hospital.

The car in which the girls were riding struck an abutment on Roosevelt Highway. Witnesses told the police an approaching car apparently forced them from the road.

Miss Ehrlich, a graduate of Santa Monica High School, appeared in "Operator 13" and "Naughty Marietta." She recently was placed under contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

William Rudolph

William Rudolph, 60 years old, once publicity agent for Clara Kimball Young and numerous other stars of the silent pictures, died of a heart attack in New York.

Theodore A. Metz

Theodore August Metz, who ushered in the jazz era half a century ago with his composition "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," died Monday at Montefiore Hospital in the Bronx. The 87-year-old violinist, composer and minstrel had been at the hospital since Dec. 18, suffering from a progressive ailment.

At his desk at the Edward B. Marks Music Publishing Company in the RCA Building, he added in the last two years two songs to the long list of compositions that had gone before. One was a march in honor of President Roosevelt, the other a lilting love song called "There's a Secret in My Heart."

He had nothing but a Guarnerius violin when he arrived in New York in 1879 and got a job as a druggist at $2 a week. He was born in Hanover, Germany, March 14, 1848, undertook a course in pharmacy, but abandoned his studies to become a bandmaster in the Franco-Prussian War.

A funeral service was held Tuesday at the Riverside Memorial Chapel, New York.

Nathanial T. Moody

Funeral services were held Sunday, at Detroit, for Nathanial T. Moody, 38, for the last eight years divisional superintendent there for Erpi, who died Friday in Highland General Hospital of pneumonia after an illness of only three days. Burial was at Portland, Conn., the home of his father and mother. He is also survived by his widow. Previously, Mr. Moody was for several years with Erpi in St. Louis.

Dr. Ronald G. Canti

Dr. Ronald George Canti, a pioneer in making films for scientific research, notably on cancer, died in London at the age of 52. He was one of the first to apply the film technique to microscopy for demonstrating changes in the bacteria in living tissues. He himself made the machines for this work, and showed his films before the Royal Society in London and similar organizations in other countries.

Harry E. Otey

Harry E. Otey, 79, until recently manager of the Grand Opera House, died at a Robinson, Ill. sanitarium Sunday following a lingering illness. He was born in Terre Haute, but went to Robinson in 1863. His business career began in 1882.

Mrs. L. L. Devereaux

Louis R. Buckholz

Louis R. Buckholz, owner of the Rialto theatre, Nekoosha, Wisconsin, died at his home in that city.

Michael Saks

Michael Saks, 56, for more than 20 years a leading figure in the Yiddish theatre field, died Thursday of pneumonia in the Beth Israel Hospital, New York. During his career he managed such stars as Molly Picon, Boris Thomashefsky, Aaron Lebedeff and Leon Blank.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

As the echoes of the gruesome Hauptmann case start to die away in America, another story of doom approaches its close in France. In an obscure house in the Paris suburb of St. Cloud, behind closed shutters and barred gates, lives a grim, lonely old man, the most mysterious man in all of France. Few Frenchman know him by sight, for he is seldom seen. Few know his true name—Anatole Joseph Francois Diebler—yet the whole nation is aware of him as "Monsieur de Paris."

A half century ago, after four unhappy years in the French army, Monsieur Diebler resigned to learn the trade of his father and grandfather, to become the official executioner of France. Now March of Time, current release, No. 10, in the only motion pictures ever taken of "Monsieur de Paris," shows him today, feeble, stooped, with a weak heart. An ailing old man, he still carries on his inherited profession, the solitary career he tried desperately to avoid. In a long black wagon he drives through Marseilles, now through Ajaccio in Corsica, to behead France's condemned criminals. He is the only man who owns the guillotine, the only man in all of France who has a right to use it and collect its fees. For 35 lonely years he has executed every criminal condemned to death in France. Hundreds of men and women have lost their heads under his sharp and heavy ax. Now comes news that the old man is going to do what no French headsman has ever done before, give up his hereditary office and his role as "Monsieur de Paris," to spend his few remaining years as Anatole Diebler, private citizen of the Republic. His reason: Fear that he will, like his father before him, go mad.

Josef Ranald, widely recognized hand-reading "scientist," describes in his new book, "Your Hands," his findings on the palms of America's great and near great. The hands of John Barrymore, he says, show "an extraordinary powerful imagination in which the consciousness of his own self is lost in the re-creation of the character which he represents." But Mr. Barrymore, as everyone else knows, never loses consciousness of his own self long enough while acting to forget to insist on the filming of his left profile, his best beauty profile.

And of Carl Laemmle, Junior, Monsieur Ranald says, "Instinctive showmanship is found underneath the third finger, denoting keen instinct as a showman that helps him to choose so many successes." Universal will immediately proceed to the lines underneath Mr. Laemmle's third finger.

For years publicity men and all who deal with paper stock and printing have been allured and intrigued by the sample books in which paper makers display the gala array of the colors of their materials. It remained for Joe Weil to find out what to do about it. He took the sample book scheme with twelve colors of stock and printed a booklet on "Magnificent Obsession," with a different color to each page. The result is terrific, positively terrific.

To Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation's home office publicity department we are deeply indebted for the information that "the quintuplets' influence" resulted in 19 more baby births in Ontario in 1935 than in the preceding year.

DOUGLAS ELTON FAIRBANKS, SENIOR, returned to these shores the other morning from six months of galavanting 'round Europe. With a dramatic swish of his cloak and a thespian-ish flicker of eyelids, he announced to the press and public that he will appear in no more pictures, but henceforth will produce. "I have decided," he bellowed in his best philanthropic manner, "to give the younger element a chance." (Mr. Fairbanks is 53 years old, or shouldn't we mention it.)

Gone forever are the days when Doug the pole-vaulter expressed with gusto and swinging limbs the notion that in a motion picture one had to keep in motion.

Doug's beginning in the movies, with David Wark Griffith, was marked by frequent excursions over studio fences and climbs up church steeples at unexpected moments not prescribed by the script. Mr. Griffith was not one bit pleased with Mr. Fairbanks' athletic tendencies and once sarcastically advised him to go into Keystone comedies. Intentionally, or otherwise, Mr. Griffith dubbed Mr. Fairbanks' first picture "The Lamb."

But it was really Bennie Zeidman, then a zealous press agent, and now an independent producer in Hollywood, who raised Doug from the ranks to the status of big class. It happened this way: When Charles Chaplin arrived in Los Angeles with the crowning fame of his great $670,000 starring contract in 1916, Fairbanks began to be seen about with the comedian a great deal, although Douglas still was small fry. And when shortly thereafter Mary Pickford signed her $1,000,000 contract with Adolph Zukor it happened that Charlie, Mary and Doug were often together. Benny Zeidman, an office boy of the old Lubin concern, then grown into ruthless ingenuity, represented Mr. Fairbanks. Which explained why usually there was a still camera about whenever Doug was in the company of either Chaplin or Miss Pickford or both. A good deal of copy went forth along with those pictures and in the news press and trade publications one read almost daily about how "Doug will soon be in the same class with Charlie and Mary." Fairbanks frequently grew offended at Zeidman's enthusiasm and fired him every time on the spot. But Benny paid no attention to that and continued to get Doug's pictures in the papers.

The master strike of the Benny Zeidman campaign for Mr. Fairbanks was a result of an impromptu athletic match between Mr. Fairbanks and Mr. Chaplin alongside the studio fence. They frolicked and broad-jumped and leap-frogged to Fairbanks' delight. (That was long before Mr. Chaplin became a genius.) On the other side of the fence was none other than young Benny Zeidman with a cameraman. They made a half reel of film which quickly went into non-commercial circulation among exhibitors and movie magnates. It carried ocular argument that Doug and Charlie were intimate, therefore inferentially box office equals.

And Benny probably got fired again for that. But it did not interfere with his salary. Fairbanks made good on Benny's campaign. Doug was, indeed, soon in the star class with Charlie and Mary. That got him into Zukor's Artcraft.

Little wonder that Hollywood is known far and wide for its eccentricities. Writer Al Martin gave a party in the Lido Room of the Hollywood Knickerbocker in celebration of the third birthday of his dog Scrip. All of the guests had to bring a dog, dog biscuits were passed around, and each guest received a paid up insurance policy against dog bites.

Forty-five chorus damsels at Warner Brothers Burbank studio were asked by Charles Randolph, maculine etiquette expert, what they disliked most in men. The answers: Picking teeth in public, wearing sleeve bands, loitering on street corners and eying pretty lasses, drinking, cigaret and pipe smoking, using snuff, forgetting to shave, unpure pasts, eating soup noisily, exposing their chests, chewing raw hamburgers.

They showed him all the sights that are guaranteed to take the breath away, winding up at America's greatest theatre, the Music Hall at Rockefeller Center in Radio City. The size and luxury left him cold; the marvelous sunburst ceiling aroused nary an emotion; the gigantic orchestra majestically arose out of nowhere and he said nothing, and when a regiment of female legs danced in striking precision across an acre of stage, he wasn't even slightly interested. Rather, he seemed terribly bored and looked skyward in casual inspection.

ITALIAN NEWSREEL SERVICE COVERS WAR IN ETHIOPIA WITH FOUR UNITS

200,000 Feet of Negative and 3,000 Stills Shot; Eight Special Short Subjects Edited by L.U.C.E.; Details of Units

by VITTORIO MALPASUTTI
Rome Correspondent

An Italian Newsreel Service is now busily covering the war in Ethiopia, following establishment by the Marquis G. Paulucci di Calboli Barone, president of the Istituto Nazionale L.U.C.E., with Comm. Luciano de Feo, president of the Istituto Internazionale Films Educative, and Comm. Corrado d'Errico.

It was upon instructions from His Excellency Mussolini himself in September that the president of L.U.C.E. undertook the organizing of the motion picture service in Oriental Africa, in collaboration with the operating staff of the Colonies, War, Navy Air Offices, and Black Shirts Commands.

The Marquis, after having organized in Rome a technical committee formed by the representatives of those Ministries and Commands, of the Ministries of Press and Propaganda and of the Istituto L.U.C.E., sailed for Asmara with Comm. Luciano de Feo, in order to establish head offices in that town.

Comm. Luciano de Feo, who was in immediate charge of the Service at the beginning, had to be recalled, and his place was taken by Comm. Corrado d'Errico, a personal friend of H. E. Galeazzo Ciano, Minister of the Press and Propaganda Office, now a captain with the Air Force in Africa, an energetic and capable organizer with considerable experience in the cinema field.

The organization, having its head office at Asmara, is divided into four groups, one for each Army, so that there are three in Tigrai and one in Somaliland. Each group consists of two cameramen, two assistant cameramen, and four to six soldiers as grips, with two complete equipments, one motor transported and one mounted on mules.

Every equipment unit has one Debry camera, one Avia camera of Italian manufacture, special for air photography, two hand cameras for incidental work, and a still camera. Six motorized units are parked at the head office at Asmara together with one sound truck.

The film from the various groups is sent to the nearest military center and from there by the quickest possible means to the head office at Asmara, where it is developed and sent to Rome. The developing is done in an uptodate laboratory capable also of printing 1,500 still photos a day. Each group is also equipped with a small laboratory for developing whatever material may be needed for military purposes.

The chief cameraman of all the Service is Lieut. Arnaldo d'Agostino, of the Ministry of War. Other members of the staff are

ITALIAN CAMERAMAN IN ETHIOPIA

Major Ernesto Carnevali, who is Comm. d'Errico's assistant, Captain Giulio Santangelo, Captain Angelo Agrippa and Captain Tabanelli, who have control of the different sections, together with the Capi Manipolo of Black Shirts La Bolla Antonio, Saggiotti Rodolfo, Savatini Carlo, Bonvini Cesare.

Among the cameramen, Signor Mario Craveri and Signor Renato Sinistri have long African experience. Signor Craveri has been all through Abyssinia with Baron Franchetti, the Italian African explorer who died last summer at Cairo in an air crash, together with the Italian Minister Razza. Other very capable cameramen are Signori Guido Albertelli, Umberto Perticari, Francesco Martini, Renato Cartoni, Mario Dannicelli, Leone Viola, Guido Giovinazzi, Renato del Frate, Leone Alberti. Signori Craveri, Sinistri and Perticari are experts in air photography.

Up to the first of December the L.U.C.E. service in Oriental Africa had used up to 200,000 feet of negative and taken more than 3,000 still photos. Since October African war scenes have been regularly inserted weekly in all four editions of the L.U.C.E. newsreel journal. This journal is projected daily in all the Italian cinemas.

Eight special short subjects of great interest already have been edited by L.U.C.E. in addition to the newsreel work. These are: The March from the Border to Adua; From Adua to Aksum; The occupation of Amba Augher; With the Italian soldiers in Tigrai; The Port of Massaua; Red Cross assistance to natives; The occupation of Makale; and the Italian Navy in Oriental Africa.

Other subjects on aviation, artillery and other branches are in the cutting room, and material has been collected for preparation of a complete picture showing the general military movements in all the war territory. This newsreel service is now the highlight of every picture show.

Sanctions Aid Production

The rumpus over League of Nations sanctions against Italy has proved a big stimulus to Italian films. Since September, the start of the 1935-36 season, these films have been out-grossing imported films here in Rome, and this is true of cities in other parts of the country. Newspapers are helping to stimulate interest in the home product.

Government efforts are directed at fostering home production, as French and English films are barred here at present and about four-fifths of the market is open to American films. Some of the recent Italian successes have been "Casta Diva," "Scarpe al Sole," "Aria del Continente" and "Passaporto Rosso."

Best of the recent American films has been "The Merry Widow," which grossed $34,113 at the Barberini. Next best have been "No Greater Glory" and "After Office Hours," with other U. S. films trailing well behind.

Control of Italian production has rested with the Direzione Generale per la Cinematografia, supervised by Luigi Freddi.

Hopes for American producers or distributors lie in cooperation with Italian producers. The first American company to take advantage of this is M-G-M, which will distribute "Aldebaran," produced by Giulio Manenti, with Alessandro Blasetti as director.

A part of the profits of world distribution will go to the Italian producer.

The Ente Nazionale Industrie Cinematografiche (ENIC), new governmental agency for distribution of Italian pictures, under control of the Institute Nazionale, controls a circuit of 26 houses, the most important of which are the Supercinema, Volturno and Cola di Rienzo in Rome, the Ambrosio and Vittoria in Turin, Corso in Milan, Nazionale and Fenice in Trieste, the Modernissimo and Rossini in Venice, Medica in Bologna, Excelsior Savoia and Modernissimo in Florence, Augusteo and Modernissimo in Naples.

About 50 Italian films will be produced during 1935-36. Among these are: "Non e' Una Cosa Seria," from Pirandello's play; "Musica in Piazza," "Arma Bianca," "L'Ambasciatore" and "Fanny Ballerinia."

Minnesota Gross $31,326

The gross receipts of the Minnesota theatre in Minneapolis were $31,326 for the week ended January 3d, instead of the $12,000 incorrectly recorded in the "Theatre Receipts" tabulation. On the screen was "The Bride Comes Home." Burns and Allen headed the stage show.

U.S. STARTS WPA STAGE PROJECT WITH SHOW TOURING 44 SOUTHERN CITIES

Other Troupes To Go Out from Chicago and Los Angeles If Plan Proves Successful; Pay Boosted

Hailed as one of the most important steps to date in the Government's attempt to revive national interest in the legitimate theatre, a federal project touring company was announced this week which will present a play about Jefferson Davis, president of the Confederacy through the Civil War, in 44 cities in the southeastern states.

If this plan proves successful, other troupes will be sent out from Chicago and Los Angeles to cities which do not have resident WPA theatre companies. This fits in with the Government's original intention to blanket the nation with a network of theatre companies to provide for actors and other stage workers on relief.

The scope of Uncle Sam's stage producing program, which already has made its public bow in Los Angeles, is further indicated in figures released by the New York regional office showing that almost 4,000 persons qualifying as professionals, including 2,400 actors, are employed in the area and that six theatres with a total seating capacity of more than 8,000 have been placed under lease.

Allied to Consider Problem

Official cognizance of potential competition in the WPA theatre project will be taken at the annual meeting of the directors of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, to be held in Washington February 4 and 5.

The board will receive reports as to whether the Government sponsored stage program is proving, or is likely to prove, "unfair competition in fact as well as in theory," according to the announcement.

Those attending will be asked to report on plans for WPA theatricals in their respective communities.

More Than Equity Minimum

Held up for months by red tape, the plan for traveling companies of major caliber finally has been made possible by approval of Washington authorities of a "maintenance" allowance up to $3 a day for food and lodging. With the salary of $103.40 a month, the maximum sustenance allowance of $90 monthly will bring the total compensation to considerably more than the $40 weekly minimum set by Actors' Equity Association for actors not on relief. The Government also pays transportation expenses.

The first troupe is scheduled to open in New York early in February, later beginning its tour at Chapel Hill, N. C., under sponsorship of the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

Increased activity is noted in the field and in New York, where between 15 and 20 units, from classic drama to foreign language groups, are preparing for showings. Both Broadway "legitimate" managers and motion picture theatre circuit heads are observing potential elements of competition.

U. S. As a Producer

This season will signalize a new phase in the Broadway theatre, the advent of Uncle Sam as a large-scale producer with about half of the approximately $7,000,000 allocated nationally available for New York alone. More actors already are employed there than appeared in Broadway's commercial theatre during the season of 1932-33.

Los Angeles stole a march on New York with a production at the Wilshire-Ebell theatre which grossed an estimated $1,200 at two shows New Year's Eve. The admission scale ranged from 25 cents to 50 cents top. Salaries were paid by the Works Progress Administration and the box office "take" defrayed the cost of house rent, royalties and other operating expense.

Advertising in opposition to commercial theatres was adopted in Los Angeles without serious objection, but in New York the managers object, and WPA officials have deferred decision.

Four of the theatres leased in New York are in the borough of Manhattan, one is in Brooklyn and one in the Bronx. Elmer Rice, regional director, is considering another house in Queens.

Newsreel Patronage

New York's news reel theatre patrons—estimated at 60,000 weekly at the three theatres—are depended upon to make "The Living Newspaper" project a financial success. This project is scheduled to open January 22 at the Biltmore, in the heart of Broadway. It is sponsored by the New York Newspaper Guild and supervised by Richard Watts, Jr., film critic of the Herald-Tribune.

The American Federation of Labor has forged an alliance with the federal theatre project through use of the Princess theatre in New York for WPA productions. The Princess has been leased by Labor Stage, Inc., recently organized drama project of the AFL and is controlled by representatives of leading AFL unions. Only one production will be staged this season by the unions, on March 1. The first offering will be Ibsen's "An Enemy of the People."

The motion picture division of the WPA theatre program has organized five circuits in New York state, each consisting of five Civilian Conservation Corps camps. The opening of the program at Camp Wawayanda with a unit show of Universal's "Diamond Jim" and short subjects was attended by state education and military notables.

"These programs are being watched very carefully not only by other WPA divisions but by educational organizations throughout the nation as they embody a new principle combining recreation and education," said a statement by Universal Pictures.

Members of Actors' Equity Association employed in the projects are excused from paying dues, and the association has issued 1,000 excuse cards to actors in arrears.

An early production will be that of a Yiddish drama group, and "Everyman" is being prepared by the Classical Theatre unit for production during the Lenten season.

The Dramatists' Guild has formulated a contract which must be adhered to in permitting the federal theatre project to stage members' plays. The contract calls for payment to the playwright of a weekly rental fee, stipulated in advance.

The next dramatic production in Los Angeles is scheduled for January 23 to 25 at the University of Southern California auditorium. Vaudeville units are touring CCC camps and institutions in Southern California.

Seattle Variety Shows

In Seattle, the WPA plans to take over a large downtown theatre for variety shows to be given once monthly, with no admission charged. It is also planned to present minstrel shows in Seattle and outstate, and dramas of Negro life at the Repertory Playhouse. George Hood, formerly Klaw-Erlanger representative and manager of the Metropolitan in Seattle, has been named state director for theatre projects.

A repertoire of a half dozen plays is to be presented in Kansas City and territory, especially for persons who cannot afford theatregoing or picture shows, it was announced.

In St. Louis only 17 of 30 called for an audition reported, said H. B. Stone, WPA supervisor, and most of them are vaudeville actors.

May Engage City Auditorium

The New Orleans municipal auditorium may be engaged by the WPA for a big production at roadshow prices, but popular prices may prevail.

In Syracuse, N. Y., the program has been stalemated by lack of a theatre, the management of the Empire refusing to surrender the house, at present on a film policy. In downstate New York, however, an initial opening at White Plains will be followed by a road tour which will include several cities.

The first production for Hartford, Conn., has been selected. It is "Barbara Frietchie," with prices at 25-35-50 cents.

A dramatic club has been formed in Clinton, Ind., to give plays in local theatres under the supervision of Dale Purcell, WPA recreation director.

Three dance units have been formed in the Municipal Theatre division of the New York federal project region.

THEATRE OPERATOR RIDING A DILEMMA

Philip Bloomberg, who operates three theatres in Salem, Mass., for Salem Realty Company, has been named an executive of the WPA theatre project in that state.

"In other words, you're appointed to compete with yourself," an observer remarked.

"That's just what I'm going to take care not to do," Mr. Bloomberg replied.

MAE WEST LEADS IN TALENT INCOME LIST

Bing Crosby Also Among Highest Paid Players in U. S. Treasury Reports on Salaries

Many persons in the motion picture and allied fields are shown to have received salaries in the higher brackets in 1934, according to initial reports of the United States Treasury to Congress on corporation officers and employees paid $15,000 or more a year.

Mae West, Paramount contract player, appears to lead the list of Hollywood's professionals, with an income of $339,166. Bing Crosby, also a Paramount player, was one of the highest paid actors with an income of $191,000 for the year. Al Lichtman, as vice-president of United Artists, received $161,089, and Charles Chaplin $143,000. There were a number of other executives, producers, directors and actors whose income ran considerably in excess of $100,000.

While it is not indicated whether film income was included, William Randolph Hearst was reported to have received $500,000 salary from Hearst Consolidated Publications, Inc. Mr. Hearst owns Cosmopolitan Pictures, releasing through Warner, and controls Hearst Metrotone News, affiliate of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Marion Davies, listed as president of Cosmopolitan, reported an income of $104,000.

The compilation, released by the House ways and means committee, came under the Revenue Act of 1934 through a requirement which went unnoticed in the "pink slip" repeal agitation of last year. The law calls for reports by corporations on remuneration to personnel, with the Treasury required to turn the data over to Congress. The reports would not list all the income of the individuals mentioned, only the compensation by the employer for "personal services."

Congressional leaders are planning another attempt to ban publication of salaries in a bill this session.

The report was sent to the ways and means committee without recommendation, but it was considered probable that it will be made the basis for demands by Congress members limiting the individual earnings of corporate officials.

SEC Opens Books

At the same time the Securities and Exchange Commission threw open its books on 22 companies, 15 of which protested the action. Two companies are legally protesting the SEC disclosures, through injunctions.

Among the data made public by the Commission is that David Bernstein, vice-president and treasurer of Loew's, Inc., made a gift of 10,000 shares of the common stock of that company on November 2, when it closed at $48.50 on the Stock Exchange, making the gift worth $485,000. Mr. Bernstein retained 1,890 shares. This is the largest single gift listed in the latest reports to the Commission, covering transactions of November.

It previously had been reported that on October 26 Mr. Bernstein disposed of 2,000 shares of common stock as a gift, valued at $98,000. At the same time Isidor Frey, director and attorney for Loew's, Inc., acquired 100 shares, increasing his holdings to 400 shares, and John R. Hazel, director, also acquired 100 shares.

The Commission report for November also showed that J. Robert Rubin, vice-president of Loew's, Inc., and MGM, sold 1,000 shares in two transactions and purchased 1,500 shares, with a net gain of 500.

Another transaction reported was the purchase of 10,200 certificates of deposit of General Theatres Equipment debentures by Seton Porter of New York, a member of a GTE protective committee.

Columbia Pictures, in a registration statement filed with the Commission, stated that Jack Cohn, vice-president, during June purchased seven shares of his company's common stock and added 11 shares through the voting trust agreement. He increased his holdings to 321 common and 55 preferred in direct ownership, plus 25,089 shares of common held through a trust agreement.

The company's application showed Harry Cohn received an aggregate remuneration of $182,020, exclusive of expense allowances, and Jack Cohn $104,220 exclusive of expenses, during the fiscal year ended June 29.

A. Schneider, treasurer and director, received $35,600 and Nathan Burkan, director and counsel, $27,180. Samuel J. Briskin, general manager of the studio and assistant secretary, who resigned last June, received $139,750 for the period.

ARTISTIC PRETENSE CLOGS FILMS' TRUE FUNCTIONS, SAYS CULLMAN

Divesting Pictures of "Esthetic Humbug" Would Allow for Treatment As Frankly Commercial Article, Students Told

Artistic pretentiousness is nothing but an obstacle in the path of the motion picture, because films are mass entertainment and not art, in the eyes of Howard S. Cullman, operating receiver of the Roxy theatre and, incidentally, commissioner of the Port of New York Authority since 1927.

"I would like very much to see the movies divested of their esthetic humbug," Mr. Cullman told the School of Education, New York University, last Thursday. "If this could be done, the average motion picture would be treated as the frankly commercial article it is, and it might even be possible some day to develop a cinematic art endowed by the limited few who might crave and enjoy it."

Experience has taught the showmen these basic rules which are readily followed, the students were told:

"To the average American, thinking is the direct antithesis of entertainment. . . The film, therefore, which in one week is to entertain a hundred thousand or so New Yorkers must be readily understood by the lowest as well as the highest intelligence in the audience."

" . . . although mass entertainment should not necessitate thought, it must cause emotional excitation of some sort" and "all this emotional content must be set forth in the clearest kind of black and white."

"Techniques of acting, direction, dialogue and even story have been steadily on the upgrade during the past decade."

Artistic self-consciousness has had equally disastrous effects upon critic and producer alike, Mr. Cullman said.

"Once the producers take their eye off the box-office and start thinking about higher things, they muff the ball completely," the Roxy operator declared. "This has been brilliantly demonstrated by two of the leading exponents of the artistic film. These gentlemen, in the course of their excursions and experiments in alleged higher fields, have from time to time produced films so bad that no one could even try to sell them to exhibitors, much less to the public."

A Word on Critics

As for the critics:

"Nowhere does the pretentiousness of the films assume more absurd, and at the same time ruinous, proportions than in the columns of some of our motion picture critics. One member of this fraternity, in the interests of craft dignity, fosters the illusions that a movie created on the mental level of the millions can be reviewed with the same solemnity as a play written for the diversion of the literate thousands. Thus he devotes a tremendous amount of newsprint and energy to railing at a product for not being something it never set out to be. The constant anomaly of the task of discussing an industry as an art had, in fact, resulted in this instance in a disease which I think should be known as 'the movie critic's neurosis.' The root of the malady lies in a colossal sense of inferiority arising from identification with what the critic, in his own mind, regards as an ignoble branch of the arts. One system of the disease is a persistent petulance and the well known phenomenon of over-compensation.

HOWARD S. CULLMAN

"Critical Amnesia"

"At times," Mr. Cullman went on, "the malady takes a different form, which appears to the outsider as a form of critical amnesia, or total loss of judgment. Those afflicted with this phase of the ailment purvey a perpetual and over-blown enthusiasm which is quite as out of proportion as the condemnations of their more soured confreres. The Pollyanna critic has thrown all standards to the winds and concentrates on producing, at all times, the glowing and quotable phrases which will look well when used either in blowups or in advertisements, where, naturally, the critic's name also appears in type of equal size."

But Mr. Cullman found that the blame for the critics' vagaries lies with the producers themselves, who, "because their wares are expensive, insist that they be regarded as something important," and "have invited criticism on a highbrow basis for products which actually do not rate more than the cursory attentions of a reporter.

"Over-Blown Enthusiasms" of Pollyanna Critics Called Out of Proportion As Condemnations of "Soured Confreres"

There is a "certain wholesome candor" to the industry "with its hair down, as seen in its trade papers," said the showman, and went on to illustrate from MOTION PICTURE HERALD's "What the Picture Did for Me," which he termed an open forum for exhibitors, interpreting product "in a financial rather than a spiritual sense.

"Many refreshing bits of earthy wisdom can be gleaned from this column," he said. "I would like to quote one sample. Concerning a current release, a Missouri theatre owner placed himself on record as follows: 'If the picture is a flop and the public does not like it, the producers call the picture a piece of art. This picture is the biggest kind of art we have seen in many a day.'"

Mr. Cullman told of an experience of a year ago, when the Roxy was showing "Little Friend," which he called a "beautiful production, sensitively directed, with real human values." When the second week's intake exceeded the receipts of the first week, he had thought at first that the public actually was "cognizant of the artistry of this product." But while going over petty cash disbursements he noticed an item for ping pong balls and pinochle decks. Calling the manager to task Mr. Cullman was informed that the expenditure was not for the amusement of the ushers or Roxyettes but solely to keep the stage headliners, Dizzy and Daffy Dean, occupied between shows.

"I then realized," Mr. Cullman went on, "that the second week's receipts on this artistic film were due not so much to public appreciation of art as to the inexplicable curves of the heroes of the St. Louis Cardinals. In other words, the rise in admissions was definitely traced to Dizzy and Daffy's drop."

Answering a critic's comment that "the year proved . . . that the American screen is the most backward and the least independent of the arts," Mr. Cullman said, "Certainly, the screen is a backward art—a super tabloid for young and old, moron and genius. Her sister Muses are the comic strips, the pulp magazines, the radio and all other forms of entertainment based on democratic rather than esthetic principles. No one, so far as I know, wastes much time deploring the fact that Mickey Mouse is not patterned along classic Greek lines."

"Producers cannot fulfill their functions as business executives if a great percentage of their time is spent with bankers, lawyers, and reorganization committees and satisfying and adjusting past due mortgages.

A National Plan of Affiliated Distributors

Here is our definite plan of production for 1936, based on a solid foundation of finance and organization:

Each feature of first run calibre, adaptations from well known books and plays, or outstanding showmanship ideas—pulsating entertainment with a load of selling angles.

Our franchise plan compels us to stand or fall on the merits of our releases—each production will be of important calibre—without the hall-mark of factory formula.

Our franchise will establish permanently on a firm footing each territorial distributor who can qualify on three grounds:

First: Proven ability to distribute major grade attractions

Second: Proven record for square dealing with exhibitors

Third: Proven stability

WE REQUIRE NO OTHER COMMITMENT—JUST HONEST EFFORT AND SERVICE TO THE EXHIBITOR

Our plan embraces continuous national advertising, exploitation, and sales cooperation.

OUR SUCCESS—and THAT of OUR FRANCHISE AFFILIATES DEPENDS on BETTER PICTURES—MARQUEE NAMES—BETTER SERVICE

In cooperation with our franchise affiliates that is our plain pledge to the exhibitors.

DRIVE ON AGAINST CHAIN-OWNED STORES; MAY INCLUDE THEATRES

Oil Distributors' Association Seeks Support of Independents in All Industries for Bill to Cut Down "Big Business"

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Bureau of the HERALD

A new drive against producer-owned filling stations, chain grocery, drug, cigar, five-and-ten and other stores, but broad enough also to cover distributor-owned theatres and branch exchanges, is being sponsored by independents in the oil industry.

Taking as their warrant the announced ambition of the Roosevelt Administration to decentralize industry and bring about the disintegration of "big business," officials of a national oil distributors' association are seeking to enlist the support of independents in all industries in which distribution is to any extent controlled by producers for a plan which they declare would restore the market to the independent.

The gravest drawback to the plan is that it involves the enactment of legislation by 48 states. But according to officials of the association, Congress is helpless to deal with the situation because it involves intrastate commerce.

"Creatures of the State"

The basis for the plan is the argument that corporations are creatures of the state, that a state is supreme over the corporations to which it grants charters, and that a state is under no obligation to permit a foreign corporation to operate within its borders.

While a state cannot interfere with interstate commerce, it has been held that interstate commerce ends when the merchandise reaches a destination within a state in the original package; from then on, manufacture or distribution within the state is intrastate commerce and subject to the state's authority.

So far have the studies of this association been carried that concrete legislation has been drafted, to be submitted to the various state legislatures through local associations which would benefit by its enactment.

A copy of the proposed bill, obtained this week by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, reads as follows:

"Hereafter no foreign corporations, except common carriers and insurance companies, shall be licensed to carry on intrastate business in this state.

"From and after the effective date of this act the licenses heretofore granted to foreign corporations, except common carriers and insurance companies, to carry on intrastate business in the State of ——— are hereby revoked and canceled, and thereafter it shall be unlawful for any foreign corporation to carry on or transact any intrastate business in ———.

"No domestic corporation shall hereafter be granted a charter, or a renewal of a charter, to do business in the State of —— unless at the time of filing and annually thereafter it certifies to the Secretary of the State that it is not controlled directly or indirectly by any other corporation, or corporations, through stock ownership or contractual arrangement. The Secretary of State may at any time cancel any charter of a domestic corporation upon ascertaining that such corporation is under control directly or indirectly of another corporation or corporations. Each domestic corporation granted a charter shall annually on the first day of July file with the Secretary of State a list under oath of its stockholders and the amount of stock held by each.

"No domestic corporation shall hereafter be granted a charter to engage in both manufacturing and distribution of the products so manufactured, except that a manufacturer may sell his products on the premises where manufactured or make shipment therefrom through carriers not under his control."

A clause providing penalties for violations of the act and provisions for putting it into effect are to be added.

Doubt AFL Support

Officials of the American Federation of Labor have been approached with the suggestion that they support the measure. The proposal was met with a counter suggestion that if the legislation was amended to guarantee to labor the right of collective bargaining it would be considered. However, it is not believed the heads of organized labor will be willing to support so broad a measure, which might seriously affect the major manufacturing industries which provide a large proportion of the nation's employment.

It is probable the bill will first be introduced in one of the more liberal agricultural states, the major argument for its acceptance being the charge that money earned by foreign corporations goes out of the state, which thus loses taxable income. It is generally accepted that the manufacturing states would not favor such legislation, but it might go over in those states where agriculture is predominant. At any event, those back of the bill hope for adoption by enough states to seriously impair the success of the national chain organizations and predict that once the benefits are seen in a state which has adopted the plan others will be quick to fall in line.

Hearst Buys "Black Cargo"

Contract was signed between Dave Hampton, New York representative of Julius Klein, and J. V. Conolly, general manager for King Features (Hearst), for a 90-day option on "Black Cargo," which was written by Julius Klein and C. Court Treatt. The purchase price was fixed at $25,000 for the motion picture rights.

"Black Cargo" was sold December 12, as a serial to appear in the Hearst papers. First paper selected to start publication is the Chicago Evening American (publication date February 1, 1936).

Coppock Resigns From Pix Theatres

E. S. C. Coppock, who has been in charge of theatre operation for Pix Theatres, Inc., which opened its first house a few weeks ago in White Plains, N. Y., has resigned from that organization. He said that he is considering several offers but has not made any decision concerning them as yet.

Coppock joined Pix Theatres last summer when White Plains, New York suburb, was selected as the location for the initial theatre in a group of small houses uniquely designed for low-cost construction and operation. Prior to this affiliation he was in charge of theatre development work in Bermuda and manager of the Paramount in Stapleton, Staten Island.

Millerfilm Recording Shown to Engineers

Members of the Atlantic Coast Section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers heard and saw a demonstration of a new type of sound recording system, the "Millerfilm," at their meeting Wednesday night in the auditorium of the Electrical Association of New York City, Grand Central Palace.

The demonstration and lecture were by J. A. Miller of the American Mechanographic Company, who has developed the new sound system. This is not a photographic process but depends on a novel method of mechanically recording sound on the edge of the film. It was first demonstrated before the Spring Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers last year in Hollywood.

Members met in the offices of Eastman Kodak Company for dinner before the demonstration.

Burroughs-Tarzan Expands Activities

Eighteen exploitation features and two serials to be produced by Burroughs-Tarzan Pictures, Inc., for distribution through exchange franchise affiliates, will shortly be announced through the medium of an extensive advertising campaign conducted in motion picture publications. The company will maintain its own divisional sales staff under the supervision of Harry Rathner, sales manager, operating out of the company's New York office.

Willard Mack's "The Drag Net" was acquired by Burroughs-Tarzan through Colonel William N. Selig, as its first feature release. Dearholt, Stout and Cohen, producers of the current serial, "The New Adventures of Tarzan," starring Herman Brix, have re-signed him for an additional five years.

O'Brien Succeeds Berg

Ken O'Brien has succeeded Herb Berg in charge of trade paper publicity for United Artists. Mr. O'Brien has been assistant to Gregory Dickson, handling advertising. Mr. Berg resigned to join the Blackstone advertising agency.

MPTOA INTERPRETS SECURITY ACT; HOW IT WILL AFFECT EXHIBITORS

by EDWARD G. LEVY

General Counsel, MPTOA

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America commissioned Edward G. Levy, of New Haven, its general counsel, to interpret the new Federal Social Security Act of Congress in the language of the laymen and to report on its effect on theatre owners, each employer of eight or more persons being liable to the provisions of the act, the purpose of which is to pay federal old age and unemployment insurance benefits. Mr. Levy's conclusions are presented herewith for study by all exhibitors and others similarly affected.

Title

Social Security Act, as approved by Congress on August 14th, 1935.

Administration and Personnel

The Federal Social Security Board, Room 6111, Department of Labor Building, 14th St. and Constitution Ave., Washington, D. C., John G. Winant, chairman.

Structure of the Federal Act

The law is divided into two primary subjects, (1) unemployment compensation or insurance, (2) old age pensions or benefits. Both are to be financed by a tax on payrolls: (1) the excise tax on payrolls of employers of eight or more for unemployment insurance is imposed on and after January 1, 1936, (2) but the old age benefit payroll taxes imposed on both employers and employees do not start until one year later, i.e., January 1, 1937, hence require no immediate attention.

Federal Old Age Benefit Payroll Taxes

This act inaugurates a system of federal old age annuities to provide for old age security. The cost is to be met by two types of federal taxes levied under the act: (1) an income tax upon employees, to be deducted by the employer, and (2) an excise tax on employers, both taxes being based upon wages paid.

The federal old age benefit payroll taxes have no relation to a state or the federal unemployment insurance law.

This federal tax for old age pensions does not start until January 1, 1937, and may be disregarded until then. However, it should not be confused with state tax laws for old age pensions as several states have such laws now in effect.

Federal Unemployment Insurance Payroll Tax

The federal tax in connection with unemployment compensation (imposed by Title IX, Sec. 901-910, of the Federal Social Security Act) on employers of eight or more is levied on the entire payroll regardless of the amount paid to any employee. For the year 1936 the tax will be 1 per cent of the total payroll of the employers subject thereto. This will be increased to 2 per cent for 1937, 3 per cent for 1938.

The employer is credited for the amount of contributions, if any, which he may have paid into a state system of unemployment insurance that has been approved by the federal authorities. In no event may the credit exceed 90 per cent of the federal tax.

No person is relieved from payment on the ground he is engaged in interstate commerce.

Who is Subject to Payroll Tax

The federal payroll tax for unemployment insurance imposed on employers of eight or more is in the nature of an excise tax on the privilege of employing persons. It is imposed on any employer who has eight or more persons in his employ at least one day a week for 20 weeks during the taxable year. The taxable weeks need not be consecutive. The employees, who need not necessarily be the same people, need not be employed at the same moment during the day. No discrimination is made as to the type of business in which the employer is engaged except as certain services are not subject to the tax.

Payment of the Federal Unemployment Insurance Tax

The federal unemployment compensation payroll tax is to be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and is to be paid into the Treasury of the United States by each employer subject to the tax as internal revenue collections. It is collected annually after the end of the taxable year in similar fashion to the income tax, thus the 1936 tax will not be paid until sometime in 1937.

Exhibitors subject to the tax should set aside reserves and be prepared to pay it when due next year, however, as the penalties for nonpayment of the Federal Revenue Act of 1926 apply to this act. Quarterly payments may be permitted, the first quarter with the filing of the return and the others at three months' intervals.

Records and Reports

In connection with the federal unemployment compensation payroll tax each exhibitor subject to the tax is required to make a return of the tax for each taxable year not later than January 31st next following the close of the taxable year. Thus the first tax return will be due not later than January 31, 1937, for the calendar year of 1936.

Each tax return is to be made under oath and filed with the Collector of Internal Revenue for the district in which the principal place of business of the employer is located. The return is to contain such information and is to be made in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may by regulations provide. Forms will probably be available at the office of the Collector of Internal Revenue by the end of the year.

It is apparent that bookkeeping systems must be broadened to cover the requirements of the new laws. Since the taxes are levied primarily on payrolls, these should be kept in such detail as will indicate the total wages paid to each employee. Since the federal law provides that wages include also the cash value of all remuneration for employment paid in any other medium than cash, as, for instance, rent, board, etc., those items must be shown. Employment does not include domestic service in a private home nor casual labor not in the course of the employers trade or business, nor agricultural labor.

It would include bonuses and commissions paid salesmen and agents if they are not clearly independent contractors, and probably includes tips. Drawings or salaries of partners will probably be held to be a distribution of profits and not wages.

The second type of record necessary, it seems, would be a detailed account of each employee's employment as well as detailed records as to the exact dates of employment (especially if the work is irregular), whether the work is steady or temporary, and the reasons for discontinuing employment.

Since some employments are exempt, it seems advisable to show the nature of the work done. For the purpose of some of the state laws, it seems necessary to show where the contract of employment was entered into and where the work was actually done.

Purpose of the Federal Social Security Act

The Federal Social Security Act was enacted to provide for the future welfare of the American people and to spread the cost more equitably than existing relief methods. This Act provides for pensions to old people, compensation for unemployed people, and sundry other benefits.

Tax Rates

The law becomes effective January 1, 1936, and taxes industrial and commercial payrolls somewhat as follows:

	Payable by Employers		Payable by
	Old Age	Unemployment, etc.	Employees
1936	0 %	1%	0 %
1937	1 %	2%	1 %
1938-1939	1 %	3%	1 %
1940-1941-1942	1½%	3%	1½%
1943-1944-1945	2 %	3%	2 %
1946-1947-1948	2½%	3%	2½%
1949 and thereafter	3 %	3%	3 %

Old age taxes as shown above will be applicable to all business concerns while the unemployment tax will be levied only on those concerns having eight or more employees during part of any twenty weeks of a calendar year. The old age tax will be limited to the first $3,000 earned by an employee in any one year. Employers will be held responsible for employee tax payments—the tax being withheld from employees' pay envelopes and turned over to the government.

(*) Lump sum payment of $52.50.

To take care of the aged, who are needy but have not qualified, the federal government will make grants to the various states equal to one-half the amounts paid by the state to its needy aged, but not in excess of $15 per month for each individual.

In the case of an employee who has contributed to the old age pension fund who dies before reaching 65, the law provides for payment of certain lump sums to the estate of the deceased. When a pensioner receives pensions adding up to more than his contributions, then the government will claim such excess from the estate of the deceased, if any. On the other hand, if he collects the pension for only a short time, his estate will collect the balance due him from the government.

From the above comments, it can readily be appreciated that the old age pension section of the act is really compulsory employee insurance with the employer and employee each paying one-half of the cost.

THE SECURITY ACT—WHAT IT MEANS

Unemployment Compensation

The administration of the unemployment compensation law will be done by the various states and not by the federal government. Each state has to have its own unemployment act in order to be eligible for the federal grant. If your own state has no state unemployment act at present, it will (like all other states) undoubtedly fall in line in order to get back from the federal government the money its own citizens pay into the federal fund.

The federal act provides for state unemployment taxes by allowing their deduction from the federal tax with the proviso that such deduction be not more than 90 per cent of the federal tax. Thus a $7.00 state tax would be deductible in full from a $10.00 federal tax, leaving only $3.00 to be paid the federal government; but out of a $12.00 state tax only $9.00 could be deducted from a $10.00 federal tax, so that the federal government would still collect $1.00.

Most states that have already passed unemployment tax laws have decided to favor with a lower rate those concerns which operated more than the average number of days worked in their particuar industry. For example, factory "A" operating 160 days in 1936 would pay the standard rate in its state of, say, two per cent; whereas, factory "B" which worked 250 days (above average) would pay only one per cent. Nevertheless, the federal law will allow both factories the same deduction from their federal unemployment tax, the reason for this being that employees of "B" will need less aid than those of "A."

Additional Information

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Federal Social Security Board in Washington will, no doubt, promulgate and issue rules and regulations from time to time during the year. These may be available at the office of the Collector of Internal Revenue for your district. This special bulletin is intended to point out concisely its main tax provisions that are now imposed upon most theatre operations. The act may be amended by Congress or modified by court decisions during the year.

Old Age Benefits or Pensions

Old age pensions commence January, 1942, and are payable to every taxable employee upon his reaching the age of 65. The rate of pension paid is determined by the amount of money the pensioner has earned, and on which taxes were paid, during the years before he reached 65. We reprint below a chart (taken from the report on the Social Security Bill by the House Committee on Ways and Means) illustrating the monthly federal old age pensions:

1,000 at Banquet of Variety Club at Philadelphia

by A-MIKE VOGEL
Chairman of Managers' Round Table of Motion Picture Herald

Donated by local members of the Philadelphia Variety Club, a gift of $1,000 to be used for treatment of four child sufferers from infantile paralysis was announced at the first annual banquet of the club, held at the Bellevue-Stratford hotel on Sunday night. On hand for the event were more than a thousand Philadelphia film men and guests representing various branches of the industry, out of town Variety Club members and prominent city officials.

Among those present were: Mayor S. Davis Wilson; State Senator Frank Harris; Revenue Secretary Jack Kelly; Judge Harry Kalodner; John H. Harris, national Chief Barker; Al Schacht, of the Boston Red Sox; Andrew Emanuel, director of public safety; Ted Schlanger, Warner Brothers Philadelphia Theatres division manager; Jack Cohn, Mark Hellinger, George Jessel, Bob Hall, James Balmer, Charles C. Pettijohn, Louis Nizer, James P. Clark, Earl Swigart, Jay Emanuel, Reverends Sylvester McCarthy, D. C. Colony, and William Fineshriber; Mort Blumenstock, Arthur W. Kelly, James M. Gerauld, Motion Picture Daily; A-Mike Vogel, Motion Picture Herald.

Among the film and stage personalities were Ken Murray, Nils "NTG" Granlund, Herbert J. Yates, Jules Levy, Jack Connolly, Arthur Lee, George Weeks, Abe Montague, Albert Greenfield, Harry Thomas, Ralph Rolan, Mayor White of Atlantic City, Jimmy Wilson, manager of the Phillies, Senator Clifford R. Powell, Dave Weshner, Joseph Altman, Daniel Debrier, David Palfreyman, David Barrist, William L. Pizor, Sam Wheeler, Harry Goldberg, Jeff Keene, Jimmy Foxx, G. R. O'Neill, Sidney Lust, A. Julian Brylawski, Sam Lefko, Frank Durkee, J. Louis Rome, Abe and Louis Sabolsky, State Senator Harry Shapiro, Lewen Pizor, Herb Copelan, Sid Blumenstock, A. J. Vanni, I. J. Hoffman, L. S. Schlessinger, Clayton Bond, Herb Given, Harold Rodner, Frank Gravatt, Eddie Corcoran, Monty Salmon, Edgar Moss, Eddie Grainger, Frank Buhler, Morris Mechanic. Governor Earle who had been scheduled to appear, was injured slightly in a plane accident and sent his regrets.

The ballroom was decorated in the traditional Variety Club circus manner with raised ring in the center serving as a stage for the acts and orchestras. The foyer through which guests passed to the "Big Top" was given over to a mechanical freak side show.

Stage entertainment was divided into two parts. Ken Murray acted as first master of ceremonies. Following the speakers Nils "NTG" Granlund went into action. George Jessel, toastmaster, was introduced by Jay Emanuel.

The speakers included Mayor Wilson, Jack Kelly, Senator Harris, Judge Kalodner, Mr. Pettijohn, Al Schacht, Mr. Nizer and Dr. J. Norman Henry. Dr. Henry, one of the three pediatricians selected to treat infantile paralysis sufferers, explained how the children were chosen and said that after a year of treatment it was expected they would be well on their way to recovery.

On behalf of the Club, James P. Clark, newly-elected Chief Barker, presented a chest of silver to Earl Swigart, retiring Chief Barker.

Before the festivities started, the assemblage stood while prayers were offered for deceased Variety Club members, Michael B. Comerford and H. Bart McHugh.

THREAT OF MINIMUM COST CLAUSE ON FILMS ALARMS MANY IN ENGLAND

Proposed New Quota Provision Would Endow Producers of the "Quickies" and Penalize Brains, Opponents Declare

by BRUCE ALLAN

(London Correspondent)

Recently the Advisory Committee under the Cinematograph Films Act completed a report on the working of the Act and on various suggestions which have been made for its amendment, and forwarded its conclusions to the Board of Trade, the official department responsible for the administration of the Act.

There is universal curiosity as to the character of the report, but to questioners in the House of Commons the president of the Board has returned the invariable reply that it is a confidential document. The inference is that opportunity to criticize the Committee's suggestions may not arise until, and if, the Board decides to introduce legislation amending the Act on the lines of the recommendations.

There is considerable alarm in various trade quarters at this prospect, due largely to persistent rumors that the committee has recommended the addition to the Act of a clause imposing a minimum cost in regard to every British film registered for quota. If the opportunity to criticize this provision is to be postponed until it is part of a measure of legislation, it will be of very little use to the objectors, for a government measure will certainly be forced through by an obedient government majority.

The British production industry is today very closely organized and is in very effective contact with official departments. Its Film Group, a part of the Federation of British Industries, is believed to favor a minimum cost clause stipulating £10,000 ($50,000) for a feature. This may not be a unanimous decision, since it is generally known that big concerns like Gaumont-British are beginning to think that the quota has ceased to be a necessity to British production and may become a menace by encouraging and continuing enterprises which would not survive free competition.

Further to qualify the current nervousness is the fact that the recommendations to the Government have not come from the Federation but from the Advisory Committee, on which sit representatives of exhibitors and of the general public as well as producers. Also, the Board of Trade request was for a policy agreed to by all sections of the trade, which leaves a possibility that the imposition of a minimum cost may be qualified by a reduction, perhaps temporary, in the existing 20 per cent quota.

Fear Advantage to "Quickies"

The real truth about all these matters is known to only a few persons and it is natural that, failing definite information, alarm should center about the possibility of "£10,000 quickies." It is not only the American importers who would be hit by this provision. They have, in fact, both the resources and the ingenuity to turn it to their advantage. Even more seriously threatened are those small but enterprising British units which, with brains as their chief capital, hope to make money and reputation by producing real entertainment for "quickie" cost or less. This type of organization is not recognized by the advocates of a minimum cost clause, to whom economy is not a virtue in the studio.

England may not have produced many films comparable to "The Salvation Hunters," but it seems a pity to insure that it never shall by legal enactments saying, in effect, that if you are silly enough to go hungry and to work 24 hours a day in order to make your film inexpensively you shall not call yourself "British."

Another objection centers on an almost opposite viewpoint. Whereas the poor but enterprising producer may establish himself by making a good but inexpensive film on a distributor's advance, the real case-hardened producer of "quota footage," already in an enviable position, will, it is thought, be very unfairly endowed if the £10,000 minimum becomes operative.

The present modus operandi of these gentlemen is beautifully simple. With a contract to make a 5,000 or 6,000 feet subject for an American company, at a complete price of £1 per negative foot, they have a production proposition which may well make Hollywood mouths water. Story, cast, production schedule are all shaped to show a total studio cost which may be £3,500, or may be less or more; the certainty is that it will be considerably less than the £5,000 paid by the distributor—some of it in advance. And all the production factors can be and often are, decided with practically no regard at all to entertainment merit. Alone of all the producers in the world the "quickie" manufacturer is sublimely indifferent to the box-office; he is making negative for quota, not positive for the theatre.

It is this state of affairs which has produced the demand for a minimum cost clause, the argument being that if a distributor has to pay so much he will see that he gets bookable films. The flaw in this admittedly not altogether unsound argument is that it evades the very real dangers that a producer of "quickie" footage who has failed to produce even occasionally usable entertainment for £5,000 is probably incapable of producing it for twice the money.

To such opponents the flaw in the quota law, in this detail, is not that it permits the production of films at a price rendering entertainment values unlikely, but that it permits the production of footage for profit irrespective of value.

American companies, already aware of the quota "quickie" ramp, and fully aware that they are as often as not getting a £3,000 film for their £5,000, will certainly mitigate the worst effects of the £10,000 minimum, if it comes, by producing their own quota films, where they can. They cannot all do so, however, and the possibility of having to pay £10,000 for a film made on a time schedule carefully framed to reconcile the producer's need for profits with the letter of the new law is one which the smaller distributors may well find alarming.

It is curious that, in all the discussion about this principle of cost in relation to British films, no one has made the obvious point that the value of a film is determined at the theatre and not at the studio.

A film costing £3,000 which grosses £10,000 may reasonably be classed as acceptable entertainment; one that costs £10,000 and grosses £3,000 is a failure, and all the laws in the world cannot make it anything else. Yet, if the minimum cost advocates have their way, the first will be refused registration as a British film and the second will be granted it, although the exhibitor and distributor both lose money and the only profit be that of the demonstrably inefficient producer.

Test Questions

The sincerity of a great number of very vocal advocates of British production can be very easily tested, it is pointed out, by asking their replies to a few perfectly simple questions:

"If you desire a £10,000 minimum for the purpose solely of insuring British films fit for exhibition, are you willing that the clause should operate only in favor of films answering that description?

"If your answer is 'yes,' are you in favor of a further new clause in the Act making the payment of the £10,000 to the producer conditional on the film booking to £20,000?

"Alternatively, would you support a clause making it obligatory for all contracts for the production of registered British films to provide that registration shall be cancellable in the case of films failing to book to, say, £20,000?"

There are quite a number of persons in and about Wardour Street who would find this type of question inconvenient, if not impertinent. It is more curious that, so far as can be ascertained, no attempt has been made to bring the same type of argument before the possibly more receptive official mind.

Standard Contract Draft Stipulates Three and Three-Fourths Hours Maximum Program; Television Start Is Limited

UA Seeking European Films

Continuing the policy so successfully followed in the United Kingdom, United Artists is on the point of completing contracts with producers in the chief Continental countries which will give them native product to distribute in all these markets.

In Paris Murray Silverstone has made a deal with Bernard Natan and another with new interests backed by the Havas news agency. Similar contracts will give United Artists products in Spain, Czechoslovakia, Italy and Belgium. These subjects will be for native release.

Contract Draft Published

The draft of the proposed Standard Contract was published last week. A subject of negotion between the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association and the Kinematograph Renters' Society for the best part of 1935, the Contract was, in the first instance, an attempt on the part of theatre men to codify distributor-exhibitor trading relations, and to remove grievances due to the fact that the practice of different distributing concerns has varied rather widely. As a result of KRS suggestions, it also has been made to cover a number of comparatively recent changes in trading methods initiated by that Society and, not always willingly accepted by exhibitors.

The draft, which has been before the branches of the CEA, will come before the

BRITISH STUDY NEW CONTRACT DRAFT

Council of that body in the near future. No doubt amendments will be suggested, and there is a possibility that the KRS will also have further suggestions to make. It seems, however, that the Standard is likely to be eventually adopted, in principle.

The revolution which has taken place in the British industry since the introduction of sound, and the consequent introduction of percentage, is reflected in many clauses. That, concurrently, blind booking has been rendered impossible in the United Kingdom market by the provisions of the Films Act is also obvious in many clauses, but this measure of legislation has had less direct effect than the fact that flat rate bookings are now the exception; indirectly the booking restrictions clauses of the Act have helped the development of percentage and higher prices. Their influence on the Standard is the negative one that it is a document covering the booking of one film for one date in one theatre and that it cannot legally be anything more.

Apart from this fundamental difference between the American and the British contract, the features of the Standard which first catch the eye are the clauses which limit programs, a 3¼-hour duration maximum being imposed, the provisions registering the distributor's right to the fullest details of receipts; he may have access to the box-office at all times, and the exhibitor must furnish a daily return of takings; recognition is given the distributor's right to embody special terms of payment, and television of a film is prohibited until three months after cinema exhibition.

Separate Contracts

The Standard as a whole, and these clauses in particular, give an interesting picture of the British market, particularly if it is remembered that the draft in almost all its details simply gives formal recognition to methods of trading which have been practiced for a long time past. Instances are the 3¼-hour program limit and the application of restricted credit in the case of certain theatres; both have been operated by the KRS, in the first case at the request of the CEA and in the second in the face of heated criticism from members of that body.

The picture presented is therefore one of a market in which every feature is booked on a separate contract, for a period not more than six months ahead. Payment is in most instances by percentage of receipts after the deduction of Entertainment Tax. The exhibitor mails a daily report of his takings (quoting serial ticket numbers for all classes of seats) to the distributor and recognizes the latter's right to enter his box-office and check tickets and takings at any time during the run. Rentals are payable seven days after the end of the run, but the contract may be endorsed varying this to payment five days, fortnightly or monthly at the discretion of the distributor. If delivery of the film is stopped by the distributor through fault of the exhibitor, the latter must pay an "average" rental; if the distributor defaults he must similarly compensate the exhibitor. The exhibitor pays carriage charges to and from the theatre. An arbitration clause provides for disputes to be referred to representatives of the CEA and KRS, who can, if they disagree, appoint an independent umpire.

BRITISH FEATURE MAKING STABILIZED

How the production of features in the United Kingdom has become stabilized, while at the same time footage of short product has increased as compared with imports, is reflected in official figures issued by the Board of Trade, listing details of British and foreign films registered under the Cinematograph Films Act in the period January 1 to December 31 of 1935, with comparative figures for 1934 added:

FEATURES: (3,000 feet and over)

Nationality		Number	Footage
British		198	1,277,857

	(1934	277	1,283,841)
Foreign		1114	4,090,538
	(1934	1170	4,004,867)

GRAND TOTALS:

Foreign films include all imports but the great majority are American.

It will be seen that the increase of the distributor's quota to 20 per cent, in April, 1935, has not been followed by any appreciable increase in British feature footage, but it should be noted that the quota year does not end until March 31.

Apart from the fact that in the Standard, existing practices will be recognized and stated in an intelligible form and that the exhibitor will be free of the danger of variations among the practices of distributors, it does not strike one as an "Exhibitor's Contract," but there has never been any real prospect that the type of ideal contract pictured by CEA left-wingers would even be considered by distributors. The British trade is very firmly governed by the KRS and any practicable uniform contract was bound to recognize that cardinal fact.

Executives of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association met editors of the newsreels here to discuss means of controlling the transmission of news items by television. Skouras-Fox Action Is Again Postponed

Trial of the Skouras Theatres breach of contract action against RKO 81st St. in New York and Twentieth Century-Fox, which was scheduled for January 13, was postponed to March 2 by agreement of both sides. Meanwhile, an examination before trial of the defendants which was to have been begun several days ago has been postponed to February 4.

In its action, which was brought in New York state supreme court, Skouras alleged that the terms of its franchise with Fox had been breached when the latter closed a deal with the RKO 81st St. which permitted the house to play Twentieth Century-Fox product day and date with three Skouras houses in the same neighborhood. The complaint alleged that the operators of the 81st St. were aware that the terms of the franchise held by Skouras gave the company's houses one week protection in the neighborhood when they induced Fox to make the deal with the 81st Street.

48 Stars in Show of Press Photographers

Mayor La Guardia and other prominent officials, together with many radio, stage and screen notables, will join the news cameramen at the seventh annual ball sponsored by the Press Photographers Association of New York, at the Hotel Commodore, Friday, January 24th.

The committee on arrangements is preparing a program which will star 48 movie, radio and stage players, among them:

Harry Hershfield, Fifi D'Orsay, Gertrude Niesen, Eddie Cantor, Rudy Vallee, Phil Baker, Artie Auerbach, Willie and Eugene Howard, John Charles Thomas, Parkyarkarkas, Rex Weber, the Nordstron Sisters, J. C. Flippen, Edward G. Robinson, Nils T. Granlund (N. T. G.), Lois Ravel.

Lily Pons, Phil Baker, Lanny Ross, Morton Downey, Frank Fay, Eleanor Powell, Jane Cooper, Gracie Barrie, Vera Van, Molly Picon, Abe Lyman, Roscoe Ails, Vivian Segal, Sid Gary, Blanche Yurka, Louise Sherry.

Eddie Garr, Jimmy Durante, Paul Whiteman, June Knight, James Melton, Harriet Hilliard, Ozzie Nelson, Estelle Taylor, Shirley Booth, Jimmy Wallington, Jerry Baker, Jan Peerce, Gloria Grafton, Lillian Carmen, The Key Men, Frances Stevens.

There will also be dancing 'till dawn, by Eli Dantzig and his orchestra.

Silverstein to Supervise

David Silverstein, writer, has been promoted by Nat Levine to supervise "The Harvester" for Republic. Mrs. Wallace Reid, former story editor for Monogram and later writer at Republic, also has been advanced to the supervisorial ranks. She will be in charge of "The House of a Thousand Candles."

Guthrie In King's List

Sir Connop Guthrie is promoted to a baronetcy in the King of England's new year list. He represented British shipping in the United States during the war. Currently, he is associated with Prudential Life Assurance Company and is a director of United Artists.

ESSANAY STUDIOS RETURN TO WORK

Wilding Pictures Opens Remodeled Plant; Will Make Many Non-Theatrical Pictures

by BILL CROUCH
Chicago Correspondent

Cameras once again are turning at the old Essanay film studios at 1333 Argyle Street. This time the pictures will be talkers, most of them for other businesses.

Wilding Picture Productions, Inc., of Detroit, has remodeled the old Essanay plant and already a one-reel picture is shooting, this one for entertainment purposes solely. Charles R. Walgreen, chain drugstore operator, is financing the production, based upon the poem by his friend, Edwin Markham, "Lincoln, the Man of the People." Markham, now 84 years of age, will recite the lines against a background and atmospheric shots that deal with Lincoln's life.

Initial plans called for release the week of February 12 but it won't be ready by that time, according to Cullen Landis, the former screen star who is now a director for Wilding.

Other productions underway are slide films for the Independent Grocers Alliance, the Curtis Publishing Co., National Chemical Mfg. Co., and Sears, Roebuck & Co. One picture, "The Community Cupboard," filmed in Technicolor, will be given its first showing at a canners' convention at the Stevens hotel, January 20th.

A new grill, expanded office, and the very latest type of sound stage have been opened at the studios and more stages will be made ready soon. Five companies are shooting in Hollywood for the Wilding concern and three in the East.

Business in the Loop is the best in years, say theatre managers. The Chicago, with Burns and Allen on the stage last week and "Whipsaw" on the screen, was well over the $50,000 mark. This week with Veloz and Yolanda on the stage and "The Bride Comes Home" as filmfare the business is even better, and, the program will be held over. At the Oriental Olsen and Johnson are packing them in. "Magnificent Obsession" at the Palace is doing excellently and looks good for two or three weeks. At the United Artists "Captain Blood," backed by a heavy advertising campaign in the Hearst newspapers, is doing the best business the house has seen for some time, with the exception of the six week run of "Mutiny on the Bounty."

Legitimate stage attractions in town also report business very good. "Anything Goes," "Personal Appearance" and "The Great Waltz" are the leaders. "Children's Hour" has been banned by the Mayor's office. "Boy Meets Girl" comes to the Selwyn this week.

Peter "Dynamite Pete" Cunniff, who once boasted that he had laid 200 bombs, was found guilty of conspiracy to bomb and sentenced to from one to five years in the penitentiary by Judge Joseph Burke of the criminal court.

Cunniff, one time union organizer for the late Thomas Maloy, was arrested in connection with a plan to bomb the Bobby Burns school for operators. He was then associated with the International Motion Picture Operators Union rival of Maloy group which is now under the supervision of George E. Browne. The bomb plot was exposed by Thomas Kohler in a confession.

Mae Tinee (Frances Kurner), film critic of the Chicago Tribune for the last 23 years, startled cinema minded Chicagoans last week when she called "The Bride Comes Home" "one of the worst pictures I've ever seen." Despite her review—and it was broadcast over WGN in the news report—the Chicago theatre is breaking records for attendance. Other critics were elaborate in their praise.

Al Lichtman and Felix Feist spent several days here last week attending to sales matters with Felix Mendelssohn at the MGM exchange and conferring with circuit heads over product.

George Batcheller and Eddie Golden of Chesterfield pictures spent some time here arranging a deal with Henri Elman of Capitol Film exchange.

Mr. and Mrs. John Balaban are enjoying a few weeks of rest and sunshine in Mexico City. They will return about February 1st.

Arriving or departing on The Santa Fe Chief the past week were Irving Berlin, Edward G. Robinson, Randolph Scott, William G. McAdoo and Billie Burke.

Randolph Scott, en route to visit his father who is seriously ill in North Carolina, stopped over a day or so as guest of Townsend Netcher. Scott visited the Paramount exchange and threw the office in a turmoil when all the lovely ladies left their work to get an autograph.

The Chicago Tribune has two film contests running. One is to name the persons pictured in a series of cartoons, the other to match faces in a set of cutouts. Film editors outside the Tribune staff are being besieged by contestants.

The Key smoker of the Chicago Amusement Publicists Association was held at Harry's New York Bar banquet room, Thursday night. Many stage celebrities were present as guests.

One of the best pressbooks we've ever seen was that made up by Myrtle Collins of Jack Miller's office on the Movie Christmas Basket Parties.

C. B. O'Neill of Quigley Publications and Walter Brown of Ross Federal Service were two Chicagoans who spent last week in New York.

Gloria Swanson, en route east, stopped over in Chicago. She arrived on the California Limited.

Jack Goldhar, United Artists sales manager, was in Chicago for a few days. He said that even without the B & K houses using UA product this season, the total revenue amassed will be as big or bigger than last year. Essaness theatres and Warner houses have the first releases outside the Loop for UA product.

At a recent meeting of the International Committee of Judges for the Fire Prevention Week competition, the Chicago Film Board of Trade was awarded second place, judged from the reports filed by A. S. Dickinson, director of conservation of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. This information was received here by Miss Emma Abplanalp, secretary of the local board.

The Villard theatre in Villa Park will be reopened the first of the month by the new managers, Sam Horowitz and Sam Myers. Horowitz was formerly manager of the UA exchange here while Myers is owner of the Teatro Del Lago in Wilmette. The house was purchased recently from George Meyers.

A record was established Saturday at the Chicago when 24,600 persons attended the theatre. This is an all-time record at the Chicago and breaks the mark of 23,000 set two years ago when Amos and Andy and Sally Rand appeared on the stage.

The Price Theatre Premium Company held an elaborate opening in its new quarters at 815 South Wabash Monday afternoon and evening. The new offices and showroom are exceptionally attractive.

Joseph Bernhard, Warner theatre executive, was here conferring with James Coston. At a special meeting of the managerial staffs of the theatres he told them they were one of the high ranking divisions. Mr. Bernhard addressed a similar meeting in Milwaukee.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

First National

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Joe E. Brown at his best. Running time, 83 minutes. Played December 8-9.—C. C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown—One of Joe's best. Everyone pleased and plenty of laughs. Joe has many admirers in this town. He is one of the best liked comedians and they are anxiously awaiting another. Running time, 83 minutes. Played November 28-29.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

BROADWAY HOSTESS: Winifred Shaw, Lyle Talbot—Just an ordinary picture, but did S. R. O. business both nights. Everyone enjoyed it and much favorable comment on same at the door. Running time, 9 reels. Played December 27-28.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

GOOSE AND THE GANDER, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent, Genevieve Tobin—Some said fair, some good; about as reports on most pictures. Played January 1-2.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

I SELL ANYTHING: Pat O'Brien, Ann Dvorak, Claire Dodd—This one went over better here than it would outside, probably because most of the men here are well acquainted with the background and action depicted in the film. The "Better Business Club" could use this very handily as a weapon against the numerous "fake auctions" one runs into. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 4.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

IN CALIENTE: Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien—Above average program picture. A fine musical which is Warner's specialty.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA: Josephine Hutchinson, Pat O'Brien—Good picture. Pleased all who came to see it. Running time, 93 minutes. Played December 28-29.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—A fine picture. Close on the heels of any Keeler-Powell production ever made. Did a splendid business and everyone liked it. Running time, 10 reels. Played November 28-29.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Couldn't have been better. A dandy from every angle, story, music, production and cast. Played December 22-23.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Liberty

OLD HOMESTEAD, THE: Mary Carlisle, Lawrence Gray—I didn't know whether it was the title or the day that brought them out to see this one. It was a very interesting little picture, but I cannot account for the masses which came out to see it. Running time, 8 reels. Played November 26-27.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March—Worst Sunday-Monday business and dissatisfied patrons since I came here last August. Running time, 95 minutes. Played December 22-23.—C. C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March, Freddie Bartholomew—This type picture is no good for us, and did not do average business. Garbo is through here. Had several walkouts on this. Running time, 95 minutes. Played December 14-15.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—This team gets the laughs. No story, plenty of comedy, average business, so why complain? Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 25.26.—C. C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Pulled and pleased better than any Metro picture this year. Our crowd likes comedy, if yours do, use this any day.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Eleanor Powell, Jack Benny—Cold weather and school play kept grosses low. This picture is sure-fire. Running time, 103 minutes Played December 18-19.—C. C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Eleanor Powell, Jack Benny—A good show with lots of real entertainment, but for some reason it did not do as well as it should have at the box office. Running time, 103 minutes. Played December 13-14.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell—The last word in musical shows and entertainment. Didn't draw so big, but our patrons are still talking about it.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—Good in every respect. Running time, 89 minutes. Played December 11-12.—C. C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—Good picture to fair business. Wallace Beery not so good in this picture, but it is a good show. Played December 8-9.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

ESCAPADE: William Powell, Luise Rainer—Very good program to poor business. Running time, 9 reels. Played December 22.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—Just a good program picture that seemed to go over in a big way with our patrons.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—Good entertainment. Should stand up two days in any town. Played December 25-26.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne, Frank Morgan—Light but entertaining, with Frank Morgan, the doting daddy, stealing the show; fair business and satisfied customers. Running time, 99 minutes. Played December 29-31.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—Joan Crawford is very good in this one. Had many favorable comments.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—One of Joan's best. She is one of our best bets. They go for her in a "big way." Brian Aherne won many new girl admirers in his role. Joan gorgeous as ever. I thought the picture splendid entertainment. Running time, 99 minutes. Played December 8-9.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel—An entertaining program picture with many laughs. Our patrons are much in favor of pictures of this type. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 19-20.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

MAD LOVE: Peter Lorre, Frances Drake—Pleased about 50 per cent and only played this one day. If your patrons like horror pictures, it may be O. K. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 17.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

MURDER MAN, THE: Spencer Tracy, Virginia Bruce—This is a good picture for Friday and Saturday date. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 20-21.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clark Gable, Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone—A very good picture. Ran into bad roads and weather, but the picture satisfied all who saw it.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clark Gable, Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone—A wonderful production and a good draw at the box office. Men will appreciate it more than the ladies. Too cruel for them, but play it. Splendid acting by entire cast. Running time, 133 minutes. Played 22-23.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

NIGHT IS YOUNG, THE: Ramon Novarro, Evelyn Laye—A fine picture, but no business getter. Played in opposition to Keno parties. Starved to death.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Here is a picture that pleased both old and young. Everyone enjoyed it as much as "The Champ," I believe. Running time, 88 minutes. Played November 24-25.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

PERFECT GENTLEMAN, THE: Frank Morgan, Cicely Courtneidge—Not a bad picture for one day, if you can get by with the English brogue. That killed it here. Played December 31.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PUBLIC HERO NO. 1: Chester Morris, Jean Arthur—Good picture, but not as good as "The G Men." Played November 29-30.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

PURSUIT: Chester Morris, Sally Eilers—A very good program picture of the melodrama type. Has plenty of action.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell, Rosalind Russell—A real spy story that is better than all the rest because it contains lots of fun outside its main theme. Plenty of action. Played December 29-30.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker, Russell Hardie—Excellent; one of those pictures that pleases almost 100 per cent. Clean and entertaining from start to finish. Running time, 71 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Paramount

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: All Star Cast—The only thing big about this was the film rental that the producers charged us.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Jack Oakie, Burns & Allen—A nice box office attraction, but personally I did not care much for the picture. Too much alike and the most interesting things few and far between. Running time, 97 minutes. Played December 5-6.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

COLLEGIATE: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Frances Langford—Personally I thought it a great show but it failed to do extra business at the box office. By the way, what happened to the duck?—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

CORONADO: Jack Haley, Johnny Downs, Betty Burgess, Leon Errol—Light and frothy, but excellent entertainment for the small town. Moves at a fast pace, no part too long, just right. Johnny is some dancer, and a good singer. Miss Burgess has a bright future. Played January 1.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

CRUSADES, THE: Loretta Young, Henry Wilcoxon—Wonderful picture. We had many compliments on this one. For your best days. Played December 29-30.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

CRUSADES, THE: Loretta Young, Henry Wilcoxon—A massive colossal flop. We made the great mistake of roadshowing this at an increase in admissions. If we had only played it regularly, I am sure it would have made us more at the B. O. Running time, 134 minutes. Played December 8-10.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

EAGLE'S BROOD, THE: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—Seldom depend on ordinary run of westerns to hold up a show, preferring them on midweek duals; took a chance on this one for weekend following New Year's, and was not disappointed. Bill Boyd has found his niche. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 2-4.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

FOUR HOURS TO KILL: Richard Barthelmess, Joe Morrison, Helen Mack, Gertrude Michael—Very bad. Brutal killing and some boob always talking about himself or wife going to have a baby. The very things to disgust any audience. Am sorry I used it and ashamed of Paramount offering such as this. No excuse for it. No wonder poor Dick Barthelmess has lost his following. Running time, 79 minutes. Played December 28.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West—They like Mae here so we did business. If they don't like Mae, there is nothing left.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: George Burns, Gracie Allen—Plenty of hokum blended into a very pleasing and entertaining picture. Running time, 65 minutes. Played December 17.—C. C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

LITTLE AMERICA: Admiral Byrd—The greatest travel picture I ever saw. Did a splendid business both nights, and everyone liked it very much. Running time, 52 minutes. Played December 13-14.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE: Sylvia Sidney, Melvyn Douglas—Here is a grand little picture which will be a good B. O. attraction all over the country. People like it and do a lot of talking about it. Give us more like it, Paramount. Running time, 83 minutes. Played December 15-17.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

MILLIONS IN THE AIR: John Howard, Wendy Barrie—We played this picture two days and received more compliments on it than any other picture we have played during the two years we have operated the theatre. This picture hasn't a star in it but when your patrons see it they will become stars. The picture is filled with very clever and lively comedy. In many situations I feared our patrons would tear the roof off. The producers have the right idea when they produce pictures with a cast of young people who can make you laugh. Keep up the good work, Paramount. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 3-4.—B. L. Smith, Liberty Theatre, Quinton, Okla. Small town patronage.

PETER IBBETSON: Gary Cooper, Ann Harding—A grand picture which did not draw at the B. O. It is distinctly a class picture and certainly not one for general patronage. Could have done better at the B. O. with almost anything. Do not give it preferred playing time if you expect to clean up on it. Running time, 83 minutes. Played December 29-31.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

SCROOGE: Seymour Hicks, Donald Calthrop—Ran this for free matinees for kiddies in the morning and pay matinee in the afternoon. This is very good for adults if you have exceptionally good shorts to help it over. Played December 25.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

SHIP CAFE: Carl Brisson, Arline Judge, Mady Christians—In this Brisson was liked by my patrons and the best thing I can say about it is it gave us Arline Judge, who is a show girl from the top of her independent head to the bottom of her jittery feet. The picture was well cast throughout and makes good entertainment, but sorry to report very unsatisfactory box office.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theare, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott—A dandy picture, expertly produced and should appeal to most audiences. We made a mistake in using it on a Friday-Saturday, though, as it isn't rough and tumble stuff such as is expected by the week-end patrons. Margaret Sullavan gives a charming portrayal. Played December 27-28.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott—A fine little picture but did not click at the B. O. Just ordinary business, but those who did see it were pleased. Running time, 8 reels. Played December 23-25.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

TWO FISTED: Lee Tracy, Roscoe Karns, Grace Bradley, Florence Lake—Played this one as the last half of a double feature with Pat O'Brien in "I Sell Anything." Pat talked fast. Tracy talked faster, but Florence Lake made them both sound like a couple of mummies. Boy, oh! boy, can that dame talk! You won't burn out any bearings in your brain thinking about this one, but it has plenty of laughs, lots of action, and, of course, TRACY! Running time, 65 minutes. Played January 4.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—I cannot say very much for this picture only it is terrible for Bing. I trust they give him a better break next time. It disappointed his fans here. Nothing to it except his singing and it is not up to his standard. Running time, 60 minutes. Played November 26-27.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

VIRGINIA JUDGE, THE: Walter C. Kelly, Marsha Hunt—An exceptionally good program picture. Better than expected.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

Republic

FRISCO WATERFRONT: Ben Lyon, Helen Twelvetrees—A swell little picture which certainly did well for us here. Did S. R. O. business both nights and everyone pleased. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 18-19.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

MELODY TRAIL: Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford—Something a little different. Western fans seemed to go for it.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

TUMBLING TUMBLEWEEDS: Gene Autry, Lucile Browne—This is my first report to "What the Picture Did for Me" in quite a while. These Autry westerns are the outstanding pictures of the season. They are tops in all ways. I am also referring to "Melody Trail" and "Sagebrush Troubadour." Give these pictures your preferred playing time and watch the crowds roll in. As business getters these pictures are ahead of Cantor, Astaire and Rogers and a lot of the big stars. Republic sells these pictures at a just rental so as to leave you a profit. I had more profit left on "Tumbling Tumbleweeds" than I did "Top Hat." And that is saying a-plenty. People came to see this picture that I never seen in the theatre before. And all left satisfied. Running time, 57 minutes. Played January 5-6.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. General patronage.

WESTWARD HO: John Wayne, Sheila Mannors—This is a top notch western picture but I failed to do any business with it. Possibly the Christmas season had something to do with it, as business was very slow for a while at that time. I don't think there was enough music in this one to carry it along. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 19-20.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—Pleased those who braved zero weather to attend. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 29-30.—C. C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck Preston Foster—My audience liked this one very much. Smooth production made it zip right along and you did not get tired out watching it.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix, Margot Grahame—Good western picture with plenty of action; they all get killed except Richard Dix. But, this is the kind of western they like. Running time, 7 reels. Played December 27-28.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Virginia Weidler, Carol Stone—Very good family picture. Running time, 72 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HI, GAUCHO: John Carroll, Steffi Duna—I set this for the last three days of the week and found that I should have set a good western instead, and paid for this and put it on the shelf. It may be good, but just try and get anyone into your theatre to see it. So far this year, RKO has failed to produce many box office pictures and produced many box office flops.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

HI, GAUCHO: John Carroll, Steffi Duna—Played to the poorest Saturday business in more than two years. RKO doesn't do things half way; their pictures are either excellent or bad.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

HIS FAMILY TREE: James Barton, Maureen Delany—Only fair. No stars or anybody in this that our patrons ever heard of and pleased only about 50 per cent. Running time, 7 reels.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

HOT TIP: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—Good show all the way through and finishes with a bang. Business fair. Running time, 7 reels. Played December 27-28.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson, Bob Steele, Tom Tyler—A picture full of action which will please all Western fans. Running time, 71 minutes. Played December 20-21.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Hoot Gibson, Boots Mallory, Harry Carey, Bob Steele, Tom Tyler—While this leaves nothing to be desired in a shoot 'em up and drag out western, it did a very poor Sunday and Monday business. It is a better Friday and Saturday western. The musical western is what is bringing in the money at the present time. They sold me this picture in their top allocation, which is entirely out of reason for it. It is the kind of western the ladies won't go to see. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 29-30.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. General patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Average Wheeler and Woolsey picture. Average business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played December 1-2.—C. C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

SYLVIA SCARLETT: Katharine Hepburn, Cary Grant—This is the bunk. Surprised that Hepburn would play in such a picture. Best crowd I have had since Christmas and hid when the show was over. To add to it all, it's practically all English speaking. Have had some pretty bum pictures lately, but this takes the cake. Played January 3.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

STRANGERS ALL: May Robson, Preston Foster—Very good picture to poorest business for two years 'cause before Christmas business always bad. Running time, 8 reels. Played December 18.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Walter Abel, Paul Lukas, Margot Grahame, Heather Angel—This type of picture never goes over very good. The patrons in a small town just don't care for this type.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TO BEAT THE BAND: Helen Broderick, Hugh Herbert—Sixty-five minutes of film. Played December 31.—C. C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—This one is all to the good and gave us very close to our biggest gross receipts for the past two years. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 27-28.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix—A below

average western picture for us. Buck Jones is our favorite.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BAD BOY: James Dunn, Dorothy Wilson—We played this for a Saturday midnight show and it was well liked. An entertaining picture. Running time, 56 minutes. Played December 21.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S SECRET: Warner Oland, Henrietta Crosman—A good mystery drama that satisfied my midweek crowd.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple, John Boles—Surely is "tops." Played December 28-29.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple, John Boles—No use of saying anything about Shirley. Had bad weather on Christmas. Didn't do as good as previous pictures.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple—Best show for Shirley to date, but losing popularity. Business poor; Holiday season. Running time, 8 reels. Played December 24-25.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

DANTE'S INFERNO: Spencer Tracy, Claire Trevor, Henry B. Walthall—Show is great, but the photos are off, and keep the business out on the street or send them to the other theatre. Hide the photos when you play this feature and play up Tracy and Claire Trevor. They will be satisfied if you can get them in. Story of interest to adults. Running time, 11 reels. Played December 29.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers, Billie Burke—Although this was not Will Rogers' best picture, it did business and got lots of laughs.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HARD ROCK HARRIGAN: George O'Brien, Irene Hervey—A pretty good western with some comedy in it; not near as good as some of his others. Running time, 60 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

HARD ROCK HARRIGAN: George O'Brien—This is a real action picture for western lovers and non-westerners. Play it. It's OK.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—Did not do the business I should have on account of playing just before Christmas. But, at that, had a lot of people who never turn out. Picture was just a natural for us.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye—Excellent! Should rate as one of the very best musicals made this year.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

METROPOLITAN: Lawrence Tibbett, Virginia Bruce, Alice Brady—Not an audience picture. Had a few musical patrons who appreciated it. Had several walkouts and plenty were dissatisfied.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

METROPOLITAN: Lawrence Tibbett, Virginia Bruce, Alice Brady—If you still have this one to run I extend to you my deepest sympathies. 99 per cent of my patrons claimed it the poorest picture of the year. This is one of those "furnace room pictures;" you make a run to the furnace room just before the show is over.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

MUSIC IS MAGIC: Alice Faye, Ray Walker—A light musical picture that pleased our folks, that is, those who were with us. Unfortunately, this one drew only a poor crowd for us. Maybe title is at fault, as the players are popular. Played December 31.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MUSIC IS MAGIC: Alice Faye, Ray Walker—Nothing big, but it seemed to please. Alice Faye seems to be well liked here.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Claire Trevor, Ralph Bellamy—Swell navy picture. Just what my patrons like. Everybody pleased on way out.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—Only fair, not her best. It did not receive the high praise like "The Little Colonel," or "Baby Take a Bow," etc. Did only fair business, lower than expected. Picture was all right but just did not seem to pull. No dancing in it and only one song. People want to see Shirley dance and sing like in "Curly Top." Played January 2-3.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Children patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles, Dixie Lee—A very good musical attraction. Business fair. Running time, 9 reels. Played January 5.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles, Dixie Lee—Poor. Did not please at all. Looked like a bunch of amateurs had tried to put on a show and didn't know how.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY: Rochelle Hudson, Cesar Romero, Bruce Cabot—Marvelous crook picture. Fine acting by entire cast, including the little Scotty dog. You can't go wrong on this one. Trailer could have been better.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers, Anne Shirley—Good picture and pleased 100 per cent. Drew best business of any Rogers picture. Played November 23-25.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers, Anne Shirley—Very good; best business in three years. Running time, 9 reels. Played December 15-16.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers, John McGuire—A very nice little picture that gives Jane Withers a good opportunity to show her ability. Better than "Ginger," but still we hope Twentieth Century-Fox Film keeps on getting this little girl material that will be better. She deserves it and can maybe build to a good box office star. Played December 25-26.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THUNDER MOUNTAIN: George O'Brien, Barbara Fritchie—Good action picture. Pleased our Friday and Saturday fans. Running time, 6 reels. Played December 13-14.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

YOUR UNCLE DUDLEY: Edward Everett Horton—A good picture for one day. However, Horton will be killed as a good feature player, that is, if he is to carry the whole load, as in this one. Played December 27.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

BARBARY COAST: Miriam Hopkins, Edward G. Robinson, Joel McCrea—Good acting by entire cast and picture well received. A pretty good draw at box office. Edward G. Robinson had a well suited part as our patrons like to see him in this type role. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 1-2.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

LET 'EM HAVE IT: Richard Arlen, Virginia Bruce—Didn't do the business "G Men" did but received many favorable comments. Did average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MELODY LINGERS ON, THE: Josephine Hutchinson, George Houston—An English picture, not very entertaining and hard to understand in places.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

MELODY LINGERS ON, THE: Josephine Hutchinson—A flop for us at the box office. Some did not care for it. Not very many comments either way. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 15-16.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

RED SALUTE: Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Young—Many comments on this picture. Play it and boost it, many laughs. Cliff Edwards very good. Would certainly like to see him make more pictures. He is well liked here. Others in cast fine. Running time, 78 minutes. Played December 12-13.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

SPLENDOR: Miriam Hopkins, Joe McCrea—We played this production on the Christmas date. Most everyone pleased, but didn't make any money. Running time, 77 minutes. Played December 24-25.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

Universal

AFFAIR OF SUSAN, THE: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell—Nothing to it. Harmless, however.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes—Outstanding picture, so different from the regular run that should be appreciated. My business poor. Running time, 10 reels. Played December 30-31.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

IVORY HANDLED GUN: Buck Jones—Too poor business after Holiday slump, that is all we can account for. Show very good; of the Buck Jones type. Running time, 6 reels. Played January 3-4.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

STORM OVER THE ANDES: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—A picture worthwhile. Good Friday and Saturday show. Running time, 9 reels. Played December 20-21.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

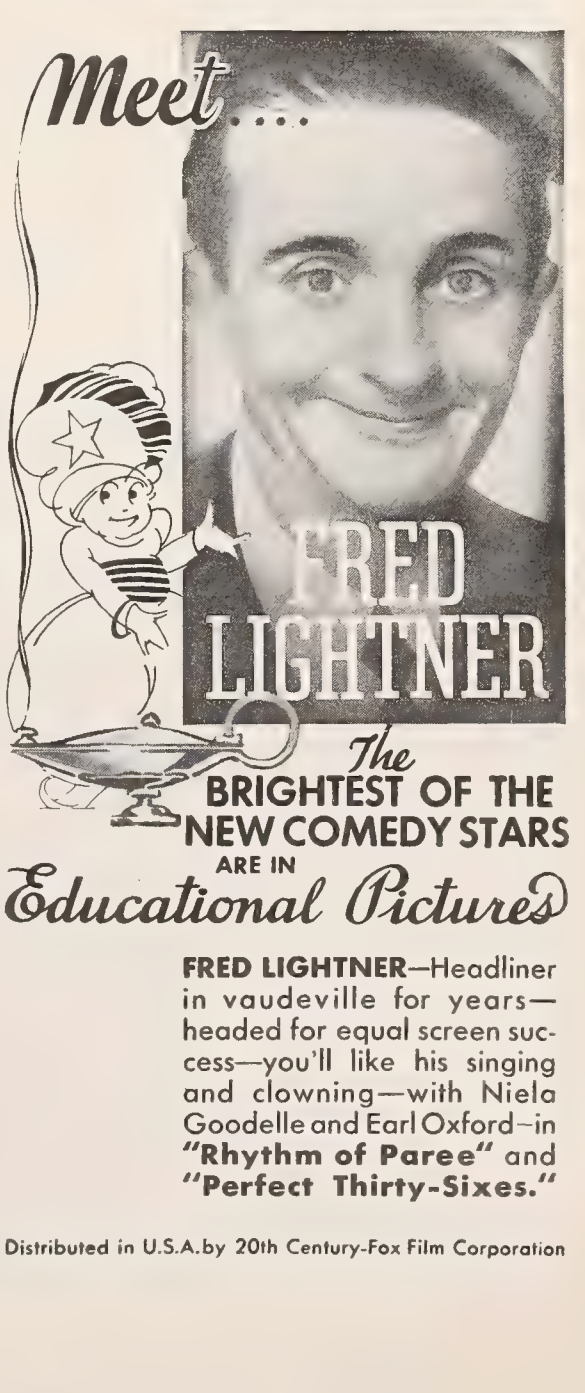
THROWBACK, THE: Buck Jones, Muriel Evans—One of Buck's weakest. Too much riding. Not enough acting. Story rather depressing. Not worthy of Buck's name.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

TRANSIENT LADY: Gene Raymond, Henry Hull—Fair picture. Nothing startling. Just average.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Not as good as some of Dick Powell's other pictures, but pleased most of our patronage. Played December 25-26.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

DR. SOCRATES: Paul Muni, Ann Dvorak—Another fine characterization by Paul Muni makes this otherwise average gangster story important. Lots of action and audience enjoyed it. But Muni deserves real drama and the best of story selections. Business average. Played January 1-2.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.



DR. SOCRATES: Paul Muni, Ann Dvorak—As usual Paul Muni did his stuff. Did S. R. O. business and made both patrons and "We-uns" happy. This is a picture that should please any audience. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 1-3.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

GOING HIGHBROW: Guy Kibbee, Zasu Pitts—Good comedy drama. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 7 reels. Played December 24.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

LITTLE BIG SHOT: Sybil Jason—Dandy picture. She's not a Shirley Temple by any means; her old acting hasn't "It."—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien, Mary Astor—Patrons very disappointed in Powell and comments were that Marion Davies was worse than ever before. Picture lacked the usual Powell pep. Business bad. Running time, 95 minutes. Played December 4-5.—C. J. Hubley, Cameo Theatre, Tallulah, La. Small town and rural patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien—Good picture, but far from being the special it is sold to be. Running time, 92 minutes. Played December 4-5.—C. C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

SPECIAL AGENT: Bette Davis, George Brent, Ricardo Cortez—A lively gangster picture that will probably please the majority. Good performances by a lengthy cast of wellknown players. Played December 27-28.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—Picture went over big. It sure is a great comedy.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Educational

ALL FOR ONE: Young Romance Series—Nothing to this one; can it and go fishing. Running time, 22 minutes.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

AMATEUR HUSBAND, THE: Star Personality Comedy—Good comedy. Running time, 2 reels.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE CAPERS: Song and Comedy Hits—A very good one reeler with good dancing and music. Play it. Running time, 10 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

EAR FOR MUSIC, AN: Tom Howard—Splendid work from Tom; keeps 'em laughing. Running time, 22 minutes.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

E-FLAT MAN, THE: Buster Keaton—Buster good, as usual; his acting very outstanding. Running time, 22 minutes.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

FOOTBALL: Paul Terry-Toons—A very good black and white cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HAYSEED ROMANCE: Buster Keaton—A good comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

HE'S A PRINCE: Coronet Comedies—Not many laughs in this one. Educational has some good one-reelers, but very few good two-reelers. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

HILLBILLY LOVE: Song and Comedy Hits—I find all of the Song and Comedy Hits good. Running time, 10 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

KING'S DAUGHTER, THE: Paul Terry-Toons—Very well done and liked by children more than adults. On the idea of the fairy story, "Jack, the Giant Killer." Running time, 6 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

MOON OVER MANHATTAN: Young Romance Series—Only fair.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

STYLISH STOUTS: Tom Howard—A good comedy. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

SUNDAY SPORTS IN MEXICO: Treasure Chest—A fairly good subject. The title explains what it is.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patroage.

TIME OUT: Tom Howard—A dandy comedy with laughs from start to the finish. Running time, 22 minutes.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

TIMID YOUNG MAN, THE: Buster Keaton—Good enough comedy, but Buster can make better.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WAY OUT WEST: Song and Comedy Hits—Good singing and dancing; excellent short for weekend.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

YE OLDE TOY SHOP: Paul Terry-Toons—It's been done before, but it still is good for a few minutes fun.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WANTS MANY MORE AIRPLANE PICTURES

"Is there any way to impress producers with the fact that we need four times as many airship stories as they now produce?" asks H. J. LONGAKER of the Glenwood theatre at Glenwood, Minn. "We can say the same for football and baseball stories. A few more 'Top Hats', a lot of vaudeville shorts such as Universal's Mentones are needed.

"Producers are intimating they likely will produce a lot of costume pictures of the past two centuries. Who wants them? Nobody. Also why are the producers producing so many cockney brogue persimmons? We exhibitors can stand them, maybe, but our patrons cannot and walk out sore as a boil.

"There are easily a hundred themes for A-1 pictures that have never been in pictures, and I suppose if some one gave them those synopses they would change it over to the old run-of-the-mill sameness I have been using for 20 years. Effort and novelty are needed if patrons are to be held."

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BUM VOYAGE: Todd-Kelly—Good short subject. Running time, 22 minutes.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

FOOTBALL TEAMWORK: Sports Parade—A very fine football reel showing the Chicago Bears in some fancy passing.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

FOUR STAR BOARDER: Charley Chase—Good comedy. Running time, two reels.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

GREAT AMERICAN PIE COMPANY: MGM Miniatures Series—Only fair. Too much talking about pies and not enough action. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

GYMNASTICS: Sports Parade—A very good sport reel and an excellent filler.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GYPSY NIGHT: Musical Revue—Only fair; not as good as some of the other musical comedies. Running time, two reels.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

HONOLULU, PARADISE OF THE PACIFIC: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—One of the prettiest short subjects I have ever seen. Would like to see it again; it is beautiful. Running time, 10 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

LITTLE SINNER: Our Gang—The Gangs please them all. This one average.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE SINNER: Our Gang—One of the best from "Our Gang." They always please. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

PITCAIRN ISLAND TODAY: Oddities—Not only a swell build-up for "Mutiny on the Bounty," but rates top spot on its own merit as an instructive and interesting short. Running time, 10 minutes.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

POOR LITTLE ME: Happy Harmonies Series—As good as any in this fine series of cartoon frolics. "Poor Little Me" is a little skunk who bemoans the fact that no one will play with him for reasons generally known.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THICKER THAN WATER: Laurel & Hardy—Not so good, but better than average comedy. Running time, two reels.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

TWIN TRIPLETS: Todd-Kelly—One of the best from this funny team. It's a rotten break for all concerned that death should separate them. This series has been one of our most reliable laugh-getters.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TWIN TRIPLETS: Todd-Kelly—A good comedy with this pair; lots of laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

WATER SPORTS: MGM Sports Parade—An interesting short subject. Running time, 10 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

WHEN THE CAT'S AWAY: Happy Harmonies Series—Nice and clever colored reel. Running time, 10 minutes.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

Paramount

BROADWAY HIGHLIGHTS NO. 4: Paramount Varieties—Poorest short I've had from Paramount, and the plug for "Crusades" doesn't improve it any; pass it unless you have "Crusades" bought.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Nash. General patronage.

CAVALCADE OF MUSIC, THE: Headliners—This one is fair. Paramount one-reelers do not seem to be as good as last year. Running time, 10 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

LUCKY STARS: Paramount Varieties—I call this a very bad short subject. Running time, 10 minutes.

—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL NEW SERIES, NO. 10—Good. Running time, nine minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

SONG OF THE BIRDS: Color Classics—A very interesting and pretty subject in colors. Many comments. Running time, 10 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

SPINACH OVERTURE, THE: Popeye the Sailor—One of the best Popeyes; laughs from start to finish. Running time, 10 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

SYMPHONY IN BLACK: Duke Ellington and His Orchestra—A very draggy short; not what I call good. Running time, 10 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

RKO-Radio

BRIDAL BAIL, THE: Blonde and Red Head Series—A very good comedy. Running time, two reels.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

CAPITAL IDEA: Easy Aces—An interesting and educational one-reeler. Running time, 10 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

DRAWING RUMORS: Headliner Series—It is a dandy and the dance is great. A musical short outstanding. Running time, 22 minutes.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO ZERO: Clark & McCullough—A typical Clark & McCullough comedy with much slapstick. OK for Saturday. C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MAJOR BOWES' AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR: No. 5—The best of this series to date; play it. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

METROPOLITAN NOCTURNE: Radio Musical Comedies—I can truthfully say this is about the worst short I have ever seen. Film wasted; do not play it. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

NIGHT LIFE: Gene Austin—Do not fail to play this just to see and hear Gene Austin; his music and singing beats them all. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

QUIET FOURTH, A: Smart Set Series—Plenty of laughs in this one. Will please. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

SOUTH SEASICKNESS: Edgar Kennedy Comedy—Some exciting moments; plenty of laughs. Running time, 22 minutes.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

FOX NEWS: No. 23—Very good, but a little too much football in the last part of the reel. The Newsettes are always appreciated very much, indeed. A good reel still; tops them all. Running time, 12 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

HAZARDOUS OCCUPATIONS: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman Series—Good filler.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

NIGHT LIFE OF EUROPE: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman Series—A good short subject; very entertaining. Running time, 10 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

United Artists

GODDESS OF SPRING: Silly Symphonies—Very good. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

THREE ORPHAN KITTENS: Silly Symphonies—One of the best of the Disneys. Enough said.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

BRONCO BUSTER: Oswald Cartoons—Some very good music in this cartoon and plenty funny. Running time, seven minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

FATHER KNOWS BEST: Sterling Holloway—A fair short comedy drama. Running time, 22 minutes. Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

OLD AGE PENSION: Henry Armetta—Most exciting comedy we have run for some time; full of laughter. Running time, 22 minutes.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

STRANGER THAN FICTION SERIES: Very interesting.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

TID BITS: Doane Musical No. 2—Universal has some good two-reel musicals. This one is a knockout. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

CAMERA HUNTING: Paul Douglas—Some very fine and interesting animal pictures. Too high class a reel to spoil by an announcer with what he thinks are wisecracks.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DUBLIN IN BRASS: Morton Downey—Good. Naturally Downey does quite a bit of singing. There is also some good dancing. Running time, 20 minutes.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

FIFTY DOLLAR BILL: Eleanore Whitney, 12 Aristocrats—We played this on our New Year's Eve Midnight show and it is great; plenty peppy and good dancing. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

HUSBAND'S HOLIDAY: Hobart Cavanaugh—Very good. Running time, two reels.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

KEYSTONE HOTEL: Old Timers—The old Keystone Cops in a pie-throwing contest. House in an uproar.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LADY IN RED, THE: Merrie Melodies Series—Good. Running time, one reel.—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

VITAPHONE CASINO: Buster West, Radio Rubes—These vaudeville shorts are excellent.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

VITAPHONE MUSIC HALL: Ray Hurling and Seal, Harry Burns and Company—Excellent single reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

VITAPHONE VARIETE: Louis Prima and Orchestra—Very good single reel that pleased. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WISHING STONE, THE: Dave Apollon and his orchestra—An okay number with Dave Apollon and his company doing their stuff. Several good pieces with orchestra in appropriate costume.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Serials

Mascot

ADVENTURES OF REX AND RINTY: Rex, King of Wild Horses, Rin Tin Tin, Jr.—This serial has held up pretty good. Have played 10 episodes and find the grownups like this about as good as the kids. Running time, two reels each—E. D. Luna, Cozy Theatre, Wagoner, Okla. Small town patronage.

MIRACLE RIDER: Tom Mix—A very fair serial. Went over very well all the way through. Running time, 15 chapters.—L. H. Mills, Dixie Theatre, Olive Hill, Ky. Small town and rural patronage.

MIRACLE RIDER: Tom Mix—The "Miracle Rider" is off to a good start and is pleasing my patrons, especially the kiddies. — Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Universal

GREAT AIR MYSTERY: Clark Williams, Jean Rogers—Have run nine chapters so far. Too much talk in foreign language. Can't understand. Running time, 12 chapters.—L. H. Mills, Dixie Theatre, Olive Hill, Ky. Small town and rural patronage.

ROARING WEST: Buck Jones—Worst Jones serial made, in my opinion. Glad it's over.—C. C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

Dear Herald:

The chief of police allowed us to spend considerable time in the city. We are very glad of that, because it gave us the privilege of meeting some very excellent people whose friendship can't be measured by dollars and cents, among them being Mr. and Mrs. Green. Mr. Green has charge of the FEPCO Theatre Advertising Company. This company prints show heralds, programs, calendars, window cards and hangers and they ship their product into about every state in the Union.

They invited us to their home to dinner some time and assured us that we would meet some very delightful people and would have a good time. There was no doubt about that in our mind, but unfortunately we have no dinner clothes, and an evening dress suit would feel about as comfortable on us as pajamas on a Berkshire at a Sunday school picnic. We always have a better appetite in Oshkosh B'Gosh overalls. Well, anyhow, we hope to meet them again some time.

Middlewest News Reels

We also met Mr. Chennewith of the Chennewith News Reel Company. The Chennewith News Reel Company covers about all the important events in the middlewest and these news reels have become a prominent feature throughout this western country. Mr. Chennewith is a very fine gentleman to meet and we are glad he gave us an opportunity to meet him. You have no doubt seen many of his pictures in some of the news reels of the day.

Mr. Martin. Chicoine is the news representative of the HERALD and he furnishes the HERALD with all the important theatrical news in this part of the Middlewest. His work is very similar to that of Mr. Haskell of the Pacific States News Agency. Mr. Chicoine came down to the hotel and called on us; otherwise we probably would not have met him. We had a very pleasant visit with him.

We used to see the blue pelicans pasted in all the stores and on auto windows all over the country, but now we seldom ever see one. Must be that the poor birds have gone south to escape a cold winter. These cold winters are hard on their "constitutions."

M. Bemond owns two theatres, one at Ord, Nebraska, and the other one at Loupe City, Nebraska. We met Mr. Bemond here in Omaha and he gave it as his opinion that his operator of the Loupe City house would be much better informed and could run the theatre better if he had the HERALD. We told him that he couldn't get an argument out of us on that matter and so now his check is on its way to the HERALD in New York City. It beats all what excellent judgment these exhibitors have.

Speaking of Stockyards

They tuned in the radio last night and Bill Smith gave us first-hand information about his quick starting and anti-knock gasoline and Bertha Pokedott told us of the excellent qualities of her face lotion, how it beautifies the skin, etc., etc., etc. Then we got the lowdown on certain brands of soap for the complexion.

You can hear more bull on the radio than you can in the Union Stockyards of South Omaha. Then between times they will put on a love-song crooner who sounds like a Gurnsey calf bawling for its mother. Gosh, we love the stock yards.

There is no denying the fact that business at the theatres is very much improved. This may be due to better financial conditions, but our guess is that it is due in a very large measure to the Legion of Decency demanding clean entertainment. The fact is that the American people want cleanliness in their entertainment, and the fact is also that the producers have recognized this fact and pictures are getting better and better all the while. Thanks to the Legion of Decency.

Hyper-Cautious

Walter Creel helps his father operate the Beacon theatre out on the north side of the city. For some years now Walter has been trotting around in single harness in spite of the fact that a lot of the north side girls have tried to put a collar on him and hitch him up in double harness. Bob Ballentyne says that Walter never looks at a girl unless he has on smoked glasses. What's the sense of a fellow being so particular, Reno isn't so very far away.

The other day we saw a screening of a picture, the title of which, as we remember it, was "If She Could Only Cook," a picture with a lot of entertainment and much better than a lot of them.

The title of this picture called to mind what we have often heard about "the oldfashioned girl," and the oldfashioned girl, as we recall her, was one who'd sooner hear the song of the tea-kettle on the kitchen stove than the whine of the violin in the dance hall. The girls of today who paint their cheeks, lips and finger nails with red barn paint, and who would sooner smell a bottle than they would an apple pie, are not the girls who become the mothers of statesmen and builders of empires, not by a damcite. The men of today, the same as yesterday, want wives and mothers rather than rose geraniums or beauty parlor canaries. Thank God for the oldfashioned girl. She's the hope of this nation.

They Came Right Back

We've got a dog that reminds us a whole lot of the League of Nations. When she hears a dog outside she will prance around and bark and when we let her out she will make you think she is going to tear that dog all to pieces, but if he don't run, she will whirl around and come back into the house like the devil was after her. The League was going to slap Japan's ears down if they didn't let China alone, but she went right on and they all ran back into the house and took a drink. Then they were going to punch Italy in the nose if she didn't let those Ethiopians alone. They stuck their horns in the ground and pawed up a lot of sand and bellered, but Mussolini stood still and didn't run, so they whirled and ran back into the house and they all took another drink. If you know of a bigger joke than the League of Nations we wish you'd tell use about it.

Kidnaping seems to have become the national outdoor sport. What this country needs is fewer spineless courts and more electric chairs.

We have just received a letter, with a check, from Mr. J. C. McQuistan of the Star theatre at Bloomfield, Nebraska, asking us to renew his subscription to the HERALD. Mr. McQuistan says he can't operate his theatre without the HERALD. Thanks, Mr. McQuistan, we'd be glad to do it. Hope you will be at home the next time we call.

And thanks to you all for your good wishes for the New Year.

Universal Transfers Wittman

Sieg Wittman has taken over Universal's Cincinnati and Cleveland offices as a part of his eastern division. In exchange for them, Mr. Wittman, who makes his office in New York, gave up the Buffalo office, which will join with Albany in the New England division, under supervision of A. J. Herman. Mr. Wittman's district will now include New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington, Cleveland and Cincinnati.

Cleveland Club Elects

I. J. Schmertz, Fox branch manager, was elected president of the Cleveland Variety Club last week. He succeeds Nat Holt. Other officers included Nat Wolf, first vice-president; Dave Miller, second vice-president; J. S. Jossey, treasurer, and F. H. Boyd, secretary. New directors are Harry E. Long, Jack Shulman and Nat Holt.

Pioneer Signs John Ford

John Ford has signed with Pioneer to direct a series of color pictures. These probably will total four. The contract allows Mr. Ford to do outside pictures. His first assignment will be the second picture on the Pioneer series for this season. It has not as yet been titled.

Rose Promoted in FD

James Rose, who has been manager of the First Division Albany exchange, will have additional duties as salesman out of the Buffalo office in conjunction with his managerial position in Albany.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

POISON—SLOW BUT SURE

He has held good managerial jobs with top circuits, been on his own, is well seasoned, and makes a nice appearance. But Mrs. Fortune gave him the chill, so the Round Tabler we speak of, and who has just paid a visit to this sanctum, today holds down a very minor job in the theatre.

Recently offered a job as manager of a house doing a very good business, at a salary of $20, hours from 10 in the morning to midnight, seven days a week, he refused it, saying:

"I'll take a job that pays $10 for $10 but starve before I take a $50 job for twenty."

Few weeks back, editorialized on this page under the heading "Cut Yourself a Piece of Throat," were set down some illuminating informations on how delicately a certain species of theatreman goes about landing the other fellow's job. One of our readers replied saying that "it was a great editorial but did not suggest a real solution." He favors a guild along the lines of the one now functioning in the newspaper field and invited your Chairman to lead the movement.

Unfortunately, the reader "forgot" to sign his message.

There is always something over which to become indignant in this business of ours and a good place to unload these indignations has been and we trust will continue to be, the pages of Motion Picture Herald. Recently the reader-writers have concerned themselves with the efforts of faulty picture publicity, inroads of radio publicity in the newspapers. These are pointed out as virulent growths upon the body of the motion picture and demands are made that they be removed immediately before their poison does its worst to the box-office.

We agree, gentlemen, that uncontrolled picture and radio publicity is not doing this business any particular good. But these things fade to comparative insignificance while the industry tolerates a condition in the theatre that makes it possible to hire managers for $20 to work 14 hours daily, seven days a week.

The question of paying a man what he is worth is not involved at this writing. That there are capable men working for less than they should receive is no sudden discovery. But these cases are not to be confused with managers forced to sustain themselves and dependents upon any such pitiful sum as $20 and work only two hours less than 100 a week to earn these "salaries."

There can be only one solution for the alleviation of such inconceivable working conditions and that is the support of the entire industry. And by "entire" we also mean the managers themselves. Until these conditions are corrected it goes without saying they are bound to endanger the positions of better situated theatremen.

If indignation is to be registered, let it be in this direction first, for here is a spot over which really to become indignant. And let protestants identify themselves for anonymous communications are blank cartridges and plain noise has yet to win any battle.

The $20, 100-hour-a-week manager's job must be eliminated for the good of the industry itself and the future of every responsible manager. And for this purpose, no guild is needed. Let this elimination be supported by managers in every classification and there is no doubt but that scores of sincere independent exhibitors and circuit executives will fall in line to wipe out an evil slowly eating away the very roots of the motion picture structure.

"At times or others I have always built working cutouts or advertising displays and found that these animations always drew the public's attention more than any other kind of advertising."—PAUL VALLIERE, Manager, Capitol, Quebec.

GIVING AWAY HIS JOB

Whatever the merits or demerits of one or all of the give-aways now current in the theatre is neither here nor there but this department goes on record once more against the habit of certain showmen who give away a whole heluva lot more than they should on what appear to be giant tieups.

For instance there's that lad who hooked up a stunt with a national advertiser, part of the deal being a special showing on one of the year's big pictures with over 2000 reported in on the cuff. And there is also the exploitation minded publicist who promoted(?) a newspaper contest and gave 600 theatre tickets as prizes.

Special showings and previews do belong in the pattern of showmanship when used judiciously and as a means to an end. But the manager who allows himself to be talked into giving away more than he should on a tieup will wind up eventually by giving away his job.

LAST 1935 WINNERS

Six Contests Build "Mutiny" for Hart

Thirty-one separate items are illustrated in Ed Hart's plaque-winning campaign on "Mutiny" at the Strand, Plainfield, N. J., not the least of which were being six individual contests as follows:

Tiein with Philco football score guessing contest, heralds given out at the theatre and essay contest in tiein with local community drive for guest tickets. Third was a motion picture slant with camera taking shots of shopping crowds, those faces encircled when picture was shown being guested likewise. With this last, Hart worked out a Gable, Laughton, Tone Club idea advertising for girls who could dance to interpret the Tahitian girls in the story.

Then followed contests for naming ship's parts, sailor's chanteys, local and national ship building contest. For the last Hart promoted a regular shipbuilder to work in the lobby (see photo) on model of the Bounty with man in costume adding further atmosphere. Paper tied in on contest, as did YMCA, Recreation department and others who furnished ship's models for lobby display. Match holders, dolls, radios were some of the prizes in the contests.

Six Sea Scout units cooperated standing guard nightly and marched in Hart's torch light parade on opening night. Parade included large model ship on truck, used also in lobby, circus riders, American Legion fife and drum corps and sound trucks.

Publicity also was well handled for in addition to the contests, local and county papers ran columns of stories and art. In addition, Hart promoted planted cartoon strip, serialization and two co-op pages. For a special theatre four-page news, seven merchants were promoted to underwrite for the expense. Post cards were mailed to all adjoining towns.

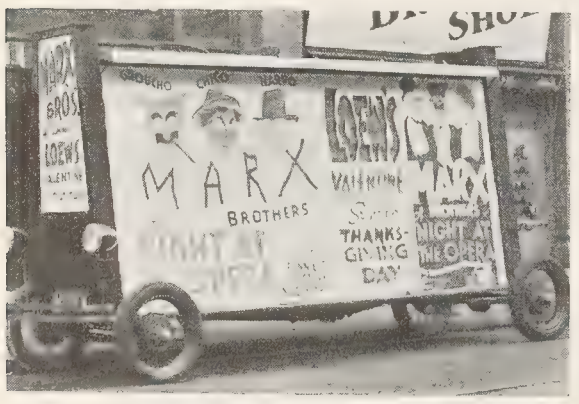
Stunts and Contests Feature "Opera" Date

Folks who have that irresistible itch to change the features on poster pictures with the addition of mustaches, beards, etc., were invited to do their durndest by Wally Caldwell, Loew's Valentine, Toledo, in a newspaper contest in keeping with the atmosphere of "A Night At the Opera." Paper ran face photos of Clark Gable, Franchot Tone and Bob Montgomery, one a day, and to those changing them to best resemble either of the mad Marxes, guest tickets were awarded. Gag ran for five days ahead.



Contest number two had also to do with marks, with paper runing various printer's and punctuation marks, readers requested to identify them properly and to include in their answers three additional marks in addition to those printed. This last was added to avoid any conflict with postal laws on guessing games. Contest called Marks-Marx was an original reports Wally and drew extremely well.

Stunts were many and diversified, such as for instance a new idea in street bally being a traveling perambulator, 12 feet high by 20 long, built on a Ford chassis posted on four sides (see photo) with driver seat on top. Bally carried horns and bells. This was used in addition to another sound truck playing hit tunes and laugh record.

Wally also had Marx impersonators making the rounds pushing a peanut cart from which was distributed imprinted bags of peanuts. Sugar barrels painted white with hoops in red and blue and covered with chicken wire were planted on prominent corners with "please do not feed" copy and interior carrying Marx cutouts and copy.

Boys in hospital uniforms carrying stretcher and dummy with "this man died from laughing" copy also commanded attention, as did man with fur overcoat, straw hat and summer shoes, palm leaf fan, his back banner reading "if you think I'm nuts, see the Marx Brothers, etc." Photo vending weighing machine tieup gave guest tickets to those receiving photos of the Marxes. Laugh insurance heralds also were distributed.

All-Night Service

The Boston Elevated Railway system announcing that all-night service would be given on New Year's Eve, Harry Browning, M & P Theatres ad head, suggested to managers in the Boston area that they have one-sheet lobby posters made up with this information for patrons coming in to attend.

Book Angles Stressed for "Obsession"

Befitting the book's best-seller background, Universal exploitation chief, Joe Weil, suggests a number of book slants in the "Magnificent Obsession" gold-and-black covered press book. These include tieup with publishers and mat available at exchanges for printing of book marks. Special show for book reviewers and use of giant cover for lobby and branch boxoffice are other ideas.

FURTHER AWARDS ENDORSEMENT

HARRY ARTHUR
Vice President
Fanchon & Marco

. . . Showmanship, the very life blood of our business, needs healthful stimulants like these. I dare say, were a careful checkup made of the additional grosses which have accrued to theatres, producers and distributors through these great drives for business stimulated by the Quigley Awards, the figures would be staggering and would of themselves stir the industry to get behind this Quigley movement to the utmost.

I look forward eagerly to again sitting on your Committee of Judges and to the privilege of being able to see at first hand the thousands of examples of superb showmanship which your most meritorious movement is inspiring.

H. D. BUCKLEY
Vice President
United Artists Corp.

Please be advised that I shall be very happy to serve as a member of your 1936 Committee.

I regard the Competition which is developed among theatre managers throughout the country, by the Quigley Awards, as extremely beneficial to the industry at large. . . . We here in New York often lose sight of the resourcefulness and ingenuity displayed by theatre managers and press agents in the smaller cities and towns, and I have been amazed at the scope and thoroughness of the campaigns it has been my pleasure to judge while serving on the Committee of Awards.

NED E. DEPINET
President
RKO Distributing Corp.

I will be glad to serve as a judge whenever I can and, truthfully, I think the Quigley Awards have done a great deal to inspire showmanship in exhibitors.

S. CHARLES EINFELD
Dir. of Adv. & Pub.
Warner Bros. Pictures

I am very pleased to accept your invitation to serve as a judge on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1936.

I have no doubt but that your system of Quigley Awards have served as an important stimulus for showmen over the country and has in many cases resulted in increased grosses. Numerous men have been promoted to better jobs in the field because of their activities in competing for Quigley Award honors. You should be congratulated upon the great strides evidenced in the Managers' Round Table and the Quigley Awards.

"I COULD NOT HAVE BEEN MORE JUBILANT"

". . . With all the usual handicaps of the small town situation, I had always considered the Quigley Awards out of my realm. Many times I have made photographs, saved heralds, tear sheets, etc., and after I had assembled them the entire campaign seemed so small and insignificant I would throw them in the wastebasket. Finally, in September, I made my first stab in the competition. When I learned that my campaign had rated an Honorable Mention, I could not have been more jubilant had it been the coveted Silver Plaque.

"1935 has been good to me, bringing many things to add to the joy and pleasure of life. The Quigley Honorable Mention ranks high among those things."

THOMAS J. SIMMONS
Manager, Dunlap
Clarksville, Ark.

WILLIAM K. JENKINS
Secretary-Treasurer
Lucas & Jenkins

It will give me pleasure to serve on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1936 for I would like to do what I can to encourage continuation of the Awards, as I feel they are of great assistance to us in our efforts to sell our product to the best possible advantage.

S. BARRET McCORMICK
Dir. of Adv. & Pub.
RKO Radio Pictures

Thank you for your invitation to act again as one of the judges for the Quigley Awards. It will be a pleasure and a privilege to act. I have watched with great interest the fine results in advertising and exploitation and am sure that the encouragement and recognition by the Quigley Awards for work well done are in no small measure responsible for their general excellence.

CHARLES C. MOSKOWITZ
General Theatre Executive
Loew's, Inc.

Certainly, I'll be glad to serve as a Quigley Award judge for 1936. The coming year should be an important one in the exploitation field, which you are encouraging. With more important pictures and improving conditions, the Quigley Award should play an important part.

HARRY F. SHAW
Poli N.E. Div. Mgr.
Loew's Theatres

It is a mark of distinction for any manager in any community to win any one of the various Quigley Awards. I, personally, feel that the honor of winning these Awards is still greater if the manager does it without going hay-wire and spending a lot of money . . if it is won on his ability to sell an attraction without going overboard, then he has really won an Award that means something.

STANLEY G. BARR
Manager, Capitol
Winchester, Va.

I think the Quigley Competitions are swell! They stimulate the mind and showmanship ability. I know they certainly have in my case. I have had the pleasure of receiving an Honorable Mention and it has made me feel . . . well, if I can come that close I should be able to win a Silver.

AL BECKERICH
Manager, Hipp
Cleveland, Ohio

Any kind of a merit system as sponsored and handled as properly as this appears to be, is bound to have marvelous reaction and inspire men in the field, who possibly never receive recognition of their efforts any other way. Keep up the good work.

LES BOWSER
Manager, Harris-Warren
Warren, Ohio

I think the Quigley Awards are a good pep builder and help to keep a fellow from getting stale. I appreciate my Honorable Mention very much and will continue to try and win a plaque during this year. I think the best thing about winning an award is the feeling a fellow has that he has done his job well.

FREDDY JABLONS
Pub. Dir. Loew's Valencia
Jamaica, L. I.

The Quigley Competition has definitely developed a more intensive picture selling activity among theatre men. It is an excellent medium for recognizing ability, discovered in showmen who are hesitant to act as their own ballyhoo agents. In spite of what many think, a great deal of our best showmen refuse to give themselves top billing or any billing for that matter.

DON NICHOLS
Manager, Broadway
Charlotte, N. C.

Personally I like the Quigley Awards. I also think the whole proposition is more than worthwhile. You as we, well, as everyone who has a finger in the pie, is due a great big hand.

WINDOW TIEUP. Entire window display of sheet music and stills was promoted by Jack Stewart, Capitol Theatre, Peterboro, Canada for "Redheads on Parade."

TEASER 24'S. Sample of the posting on the "Captain Blood" date at the Branford, Newark, N. J., by Warner zone publicist, Bob Paskow. Teasers were up two weeks ahead.

FLORAL DISPLAY. Julius Lamm promoted local florist for this posie display on "Orchids to You." Special lighting was arranged to play on the orchids.

REAL MONEY. M. F. Nixon, Crim Theatre, Kilgore, Texas, attracted a lot of attention with new dollar bills to decorate his front on "Brewster's Millions."

Received plenty of advance stories and radio announcements, as worked stunt in cooperation with Dallas 'News and Journal', radio station WFAA and Western Union. Stunt was definitely box office on this day. Received cooperation of Paramount advertising department in securing pictures of S.M.U. squad being greeted by members of cast of "Collegiate" on their arrival and during their stay in Los Angeles. Also special photos of featured players in poses with different members of squad hitting the local papers with large cuts and plugs on picture. These two items of exploitation featured in a very fine campaign on the picture.

Tom Cleary
Princess, Montreal
Col. "If You Could Only Cook"
G.-B. "Mr. Hobo"
Universal "Remember Last Night"
Col. "Feather in Her Hat"

"If You Could Only Cook"—ran contest on cooking recipes in leading French newspapers, prizes for best recipes; best ones were printed in newspaper next day with name of sender. Tied up with gas stove company and Frigidaire's newspaper ads for George Arliss in "Mr. Hobo". Christmas week had 20,000 seals printed and distributed all over town, George Arliss picture with title of picture in middle of seal. Result, all parcels floating around town on or before Christmas Day were carrying our ad. "Remember Last Night" ran for four days in order to open on Christmas Day with new show. Had cards reading "You! 'Remember Last Night'" and had them placed in all drug stores; most of them were placed next to Bromo Seltzer bottles on fountain. "Feather in Her Hat"—Columbia made arrangements with hat feather company here to supply, free, 40,000 feathers, small and large ones, pinned to a card reading "If you visit the Princess it will be 'A Feather in Your Hat'."

Better Theatres
1790 BROADWAY NEW YORK

Excellent job of Christmas selling was the above striking display used by Manager Stanley Chambers over foyer door at the Fox-Uptown, Kansas City, Mo., to announce date on the new Temple picture. House artist Ralph Kimsey did the art work, especially noteworthy being Shirley as Santa Claus descending the chimney.

Round Tablers Report Holiday Activities

Various campaigns from the field on holiday tieups have been forwarded recently and are reported herewith. Some of the stunts may be adapted to current situations or other coming holiday celebrations and of course also filed for this year's Christmas business buildups.

Boucher Goes "Temple"

For "Littlest Rebel" at the Paramount, Lynchburg, Va., Frank Boucher tied local department store to plug Shirley Temple dresses, suits, dolls, etc., store taking two-column full ad to announce these and also picture and date. Ad was topped by two-column face cut of starlet.

Deering's Cameraman Stunt

Co-up idea that pulled nicely was Manager Francis Deering's tiein with local merchants in Houston, Tex., two weeks ahead of Christmas wherein motion pictures were taken in participating stores by "Loew's State Cameraman," circles drawn around heads of those photoed shopping in each spot and cash prizes given to patrons identifying themselves when the film was shown at the theatre.

Stunt was stimulated by co-up page with full-page streamer reading "Loew's Movie Cameraman To Snap Lucky Christmas Shoppers Today. Cash Prizes To Winners." Theatre ad was spotted prominently in addition to a schedule giving name of each store and exact time pictures would be taken. Starting at nine in the morning, cameraman spent half hour in each store with 15 minutes allowed to move to next spot.

Van Noy's Snappy New Year Front

DeHaven Stages Party

Moule's Auto Tieup

At the Capitol, in Brantford, Can., Ernie Moule during Christmas week allowed space in his lobby to display two new auto models, dealer in exchange taking full page ad to tell about it, copy also plugging Ernie's current attractions and New Year's Eve show in streamer and bottom half page of ad.

Moule's Christmas front featured complete coverage of marquee and sides with evergreens dotted with colored lights and greetings copy on marquee in red and green. Trees were spotted in lobby and on stage.

Two New Year's Angles

Neat New Year stunt was a two-color half-sheet card put out by Manager Hoy O. Simons, Fayette, Washington C. H., Ohio, with copy as follows: "Thanks A Million for your patronage during 1935. May your 1936 be better, bigger, happier. Thanks a Million." Tying in with date on the picture, these were given to merchants in town and also distributed to stores in a 20 mile radius for window display. Simons reports these much in demand.

Harry Van Noy, manager, Paramount, Anderson, Ind., publicised his holiday greetings with "happy new year" copy across top of marquee (see photo) and trees on each side. Also to be noted is colonial clapboard front idea on "Littlest Rebel" with window over cashier's booth and colonial doors into lobby.

"Rancho" Aids Fund At Society Opening

Sponsored by a committee headed by Mrs. Vincent Astor, the opening of "Rose of the Rancho" at the New York Paramount was distinguished by a special premiere for the benefit of local musicians' benefit fund. On hand were many names from the social register and other top classifications.

Importance of sponsors brought attention from society editors as well with resultant publicity days in advance. Through the committee direct mail campaign was conducted to reach names not usually available. The same connection made possible promotion of windows in exclusive shops and accompanying photo shows decoration of one of the displays in swank Fifth Avenue fur store.

Florists were tied in for cooperative publicity and windows, trading on the "Rose" mention in the title and among the newspaper ads was a quarter-page department store hookin on the Spanish style influence in style as established by the star, Gladys Swarthout.

Nutter Arranges Premiere On "Paddy O'Day"

Advised by exchange that his date starting on Christmas Day on "Paddy O'Day" was a world premiere, Manager Al Nutter, Park, Dexter, Me., advertised it as such. Jane Withers photos in windows, star photos imprinted "Our Christmas Gift To You" for giveaway, and calls to all phones in town helped spread the word.

Local notables were invited to attend as guests and Nutter promoted orchestra and flowers to further brighten the opening.

McManus' Orphan Party Reported Biggest Yet

With local Kiwanis, John McManus, Loew's Midland, Kansas City, put on a theatre celebration for orphans and other underprivileged children. Candy, fruit and toys were given the youngsters and papers ran three column shots of the event.

Transportation was supplied by street car and busses with police escort. Organist and community singing was broadcast with children selected to give their thanks over the mike. Kiwanis claimed this biggest party they had put over.

Nutting Goes Collegiate For "Fighting Youth"

To exploit "Fighting Youth" at the Paramount, Grand Forks, N. D., Floyd Nutting held a university night at theatre following recent football game. Announcements were made over p. a. system at field, during halves of game boys carried oversized imprinted football around ground calling attention to the special show and cards were tacked on bulletin boards in all fraternity houses.

Local sporting goods shop devoted window display to toggery and picture copy, for street bally imprinted footballs were mounted on truck and driven about city. Front was decorated with pennants and football cutouts with stills and appropriate copy.

Salmon's Canned Goods Show

Tying in with local daily, Monty Salmon, Philadelphia Quaker Theatre district manager, staged a canned goods matinee for the four theatres under his supervision. Welfare department of paper distributed the collection with resultant stories and photos breaking dailies.

Outstanding Window Secured for "Mutiny"

An outstanding window display was secured by Manager Ev Steinbuch and Milt Harris, publicist (see photo), for their "Mutiny" date at Loew's State in Cleveland. Back of window carried enlarged photo of Gable in his seaman's attire and in front was figure dressed in original costume worn by the star in the picture. Model was later moved to lobby of theatre where it was on display.

Supervisor of Industrial Art school there cooperated by placing application blanks for model contest in art and technical schools throughout city, elaborate display of ship model contest was planted in lobby week ahead and all branches of library arranged display of stills, etc. Good morning cards were planted in hotels, heralds distributed containing interesting facts about the picture and the study guides were given to heads of women's clubs.

50 Peanut Pushcarts Bally "Opera" Date

Besides the fancy gags reported in these pages on the world premiere of "A Night At the Opera" at Loew's Century, Baltimore, interesting also are other stunts put on by publicist Herb Morgan under the supervision of City Manager Bill Saxton.

For instance, that hilarious gag of advertising for "sourpusses", copy asking for "ten gloomiest, meanest, most morbid deadpan people in Baltimore (professional mourners and house haunters included)" to sit through the picture without laughing for a $10 prize. Paper went along on the stunt carrying news stories all the way through.

Then another adaptable giggle was tiein in 50 peanut pushcart vendors to carry "nuts to you" blowups with theatre copy (see photo) and an offer to admit authentically costumed Marx Bros. as guests of newspaper at midnight preview brought five days of art and stories in news columns.

Clever tiein to page one headline about slight earthquake felt locally at exact time of preview was special ad advising readers that it was merely a "mirthquake" caused by audience laughter. Unusual also was planting of Marx heads in color on lamp posts within two blocks of theatre. With no copy other than first names, these stirred up plenty of buzzing.

Newspaper Contests Sell "Bounty" for McBride

Newspaper contests highlighted Ed McBride's "Bounty" campaign at Loew's State in Syracuse, N. Y., with cash prizes and theatre tickets going to those submitting best letter on roles they preferred to see Gable in and prizes also given on classified ad contest to those correctly answering list of questions on various advertisers.

Accompanying photo shows left to right, Mayor Martin greeting Capt. Phifer on his arrival with replica of H.M.S. Bounty and Bruff Olen, staff announcer from radio station. Event was broadcast from lobby with the Captain making ten minute address on picture and story of ship.

Heralds of ship model contest were distributed at public schools, stores and theatre. Tahitian flower heralds were passed out at all lunch clubs, letters sent to civic organizations and stills were placed on bulletin boards of all public libraries in city.

Spaugh Creates New Front

Accompanying photo shows attractive front of Wilson Theatre, Wilson, N. C., created by artist G. E. Spaugh for "Big Broadcast." Background was black paper mounted on beaver board, green flares sprayed on producing search light effect. The front of the letters were covered with white alabaster and background covered with lithographed heads mounted on board.

Restaurateur Aids Smith On "Diamond Jim" Date

Local restaurateur tied in with E. W. Smith, Union Theatre, New Philadelphia, Ohio, on "Diamond Jim," devoting window display to table set with full course meal. Copy in window offered four meals gratis to anyone who could consume them at one sitting. Man applied, ate his meals and then saw the show. Stunt broke papers with nice stories and Smith says crowds milled about front of restaurant watching man eat.

For street bally a 1906 Metz was promoted which was driven about town by man dressed as Jim. In the evenings car was parked on prominent corner with appropriate copy.

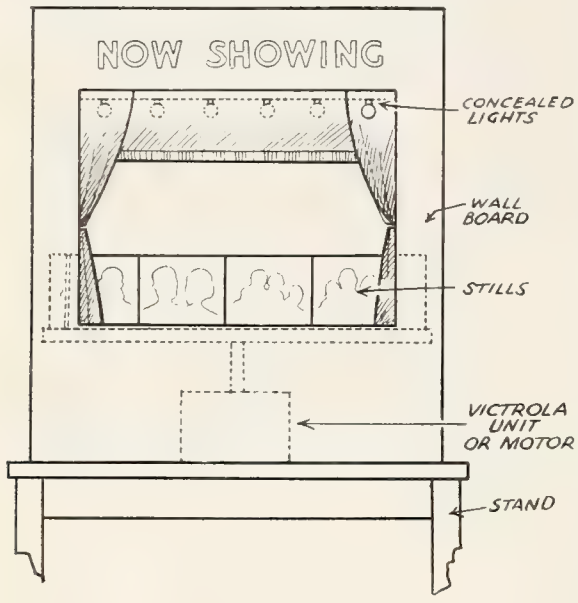
Kiwanis Club Ties In With Boucher's Kid Show

The Kiwanis Club of Lynchburg, Vt., tied in with Frank Boucher, Dominion Theatres, for a Christmas matinee at the Paramount there. Club distributed 1,500 tickets for the show at which each child received a stocking containing goodies.



During Christmas week Boucher booked Admiral Byrd's picture, "Little America," and since the Admiral is one of Virginia's favorite sons, a reported good business resulted.

It's Your Move

For RKO Radio's "Follow the Fleet," the new Astaire-Rogers picture, Leon Bamberger has gotten out a checker-board novelty accompanied with two sets of different colored disks for checkers. Reverse side of board carries layout of numbered scenes from the picture with captions below. Novelty goes to exhibitors here and in Canada.

Animations . . .

Above working plan is of Louis Charninsky's animated setpiece at the Capitol, Dallas. As illustrated, veneer board was used for the face, with center cut out and scrim tacked above to conceal lights. Small drapes on sides further simulated stage setting. Upon old victrola in unit or motor below, geared down to slow speed, round wood disk was mounted on shaft and slots cut in disk to hold regular stills.

Above working plan is another of Louis Charninsky's animations at the Capitol, Dallas, for display on "Hell's Angels" and effective on similar air pictures. Over opening cut in top of box chicken wire was tacked and to the wire were tied different colored ribbons to simulate flames. Two 16-inch fans were placed on bottom of box, as illustrated, with a one-foot opening in the rear of box for draft. Cutout of plane was then placed as shown over top of box.

Kids Obtain Signatures On Pival's Pledge Stunt

Variation of the pledge card stunt was employed by Manager John Pival, Senate, Detroit, by having youngsters in schools away from the theatre and outskirts of his drawing area canvass their neighborhoods with printed blanks gathering names and addresses of those over 16 who thus pledged themselves to see the picture. There were 25 names to a sheet and the youngsters were instructed to bring them to the theatre on Saturday morning when a parade of over 200 juveniles was organized. Paraders carried theatre banners, sang songs, cheered the Senate.

Outstanding in the campaign reports Pival was a co-op page and broadcast slant tied in with eight merchants. Thousands of the pages were distributed and day ahead of opening radio program was put on with local stars furnishing entertainment, this paid for by cooperating stores receiving spot announcements. Program was made up of songs and scenes from the picture.

Neighborhood paper was promoted on two slants, one a letter contest and the other a scare extra, headline copy reading: "Countess Kidnaps Big Broadcast Stars" and followed with synopsis of that scene from the picture. Rest of page was devoted to regular news.

Father-and-Son Week Clicks For Frechette's "Boy" Date

Topping his campaign and smartly too on "O'Shaughnessy's Boy" at the Strand, Holyoke, Mass., Manager F. L. Frechette promoted a father-and-son week to tie in with local community chest drive and well indeed did the promotion work.

The father-and-son angle was Frechette's alone, the "week" not only building up the picture's grosses but tieing in with the local fund drive started on day following the end of the run. Much advance and current publicity of course eventuated.

In the beginning, Frechette had himself appointed as a member of the Chest executive committee and was therefore able to work different ideas. Speakers from five juvenile organizations involved in the Chest drive were allowed to make three-minute speeches from the stage ahead of the feature, substance of speeches being relative to father-and-son week as a sentimental influence toward successful promotion of drive.

Both Mayor and Chamber of Commerce issued proclamations which included picture title and theatre. Wires with tiein copy were received from the studios signed by Jackie Cooper and Wallace Beery and these besides cracking news stories were planted in prominent windows.

ATMOSPHERIC LOBBY. Cutouts of Gable and Young in costume standing before log cabin was display used on "Call of Wild" by Ray Jones, Loew's Vendome, Nashville.

Cartoon Type Ads Sell Seattle "Hands" Date

Strictly different was labeled the ad campaign on "Hands Across the Table," put on at John Hamrick's Orpheum, Seattle, Wash., by Manager Herb Sobottka and publicist Eddie Rivers. In accompanying photo is reproduced a two-column display, the same style carried out in all ads on the picture.

Sobottka also issued printed invitations for advance midnight preview to all local manicurists and beauty parlor operators.

Response according to Herb was more than gratifying with some 1,500 gals turning out to see the show.

WHAT POSTER ARTISTS ARE DOING

Austin Northcutt, Strand Theatre, Laurel, Miss., created this "Dark Angel" display. The imitation grille work was made of wallboard and finished to resemble metal. Background for the grille was painted in dark maroon and display is of a semi-permanent nature, constructed for using stock posters.

This attractive poster for "A Night at the Opera" was created by Frestle Chenoweth, Robison's Rigney Theatre, Albany, Mo. Background deep red; flesh with clothing green, red and blue. Lettering: first two lines light green, Marx Bros. in white, title yellow, last three lines black and circles light red, yellow, green and blue.

Archie Clark, Liberty Theatre, Horton, Kan., created this interesting Wheeler and Woolsey poster. Heads done in red, orange and yellow. Background red, purple, white and magenta with lettering on black background. Base of sign was done in silver metallics. Entire display three sheet size.

E. R. Medd, Carolina Theatre, Wilmington, N. C., uses this Mickey Mouse cut out to plug that product. Title is changed weekly.

This setpiece was designed by Doc Elliott, Warner's Alhambra, Canton, Ohio, for "Shipmates." Lights in back of title and circle at top flashed alternately as well as two smaller circles beneath cut-outs.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

Goldwyn Plans Eight Costing $10,000,000

Samuel Goldwyn will spend more than $10,000,000 on eight pictures this year, said to be his biggest as an independent producer, according to Hollywood reports. His first will be Sinclair Lewis' "Dodsworth," bought for $160,000.

The rest of the program includes Edna Ferber's "Come and Get it," "Hurricane," to be made in the South Seas; "Perfectly Good Women," to star Miriam Hopkins, Billie Burke and David Niven; Eddie Cantor in "Pony Boy," a Merle Oberon starring vehicle and two stories to be selected.

Ban Sunday Shows

Denial by the City Council of Macon, Ga., of a petition for charity shows on the Sabbath is believed to have halted temporarily any effort to open picture houses on Sunday in Macon.

Levinson Appoints Committee On Standards Association

Nathan Levinson, chairman of the Technicians' Branch, of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, recently announced the appointment of the following to represent the Academy on the Sectional Committee for Motion Pictures of the American Standards Association: Porter H. Evans of Warner Brothers Studio in Brooklyn, who will serve as eastern representative of the Academy on standardization matters; J. M. Nickolaus, chairman of the Research Council Standards Subcommittee, and Gordon S. Mitchell, manager of the Academy Research Council.

Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith is chairman of the Sectional Committee, which is charged with the responsibility of coordinating all motion picture industry standards and includes representation from all branches of the business. Dr. Goldsmith has his headquarters in New York.

Paul Graetz, in U. S., Calls London Europe's Film Hub

Paul Graetz, a German stage and screen actor and a former member of the Reinhardt stage in Berlin, who left Germany after Adolf Hitler came into power, has been visiting in New York City. During the last two and one-half years he has made 11 pictures in London for British International Pictures, Gaumont-British and Warner Brothers First National.

"London has become the European film center," according to Mr. Graetz. "It may be competition for Hollywood, but one can also say that it complements the American film market."

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 6.—(A) Explain the manner in which work is performed by electric current. (B) Where and under what circumstances are link fuses permissible in theatres? (C) What paper help is indispensable to economical maintenance (see sound section).

Answer to Question No. 1 (New Series)

[This answer is the first to the new series based on the sixth edition of the Bluebook. The questions are taken from the various subject indices of the Bluebook. The questions are not asked in order as they appear in the book, but are selected from several subjects, the intention being to familiarize you with your new Bluebook and teach you to use it quickly and intelligently.—F. H. R.]

Bluebook School Question No. 1 was: (A) What is the function of the photoelectric cell in a sound system? (B) In a lens, what is meant by barrel distortion? (C) Does dry scraping of the stub end if a film, when making a splice, produce reliable results?

The following made acceptable answers, the word "acceptable" as here used meaning creditable, though not necessarily wholly correct in all details:

C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; B. De Vietti; A. F. Sprafke; L. and P. Felt; W. C. Brown; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; J. E. Prater; C. Umphrey; P. Howard; M. Spencer and D. Allen; J. R. Hickman, Jr.; F. H., L. Klar and T. H. Morton; H. I. Moseley; A. L. Cooper; H. T. Tood and L. A. Dodson; H. Polies; L. U. Davis; P. Gregeson, H. T. Matley and J. Tomkins; D. Emmerson; K. H. Hartley; W. J. Danielson; M. Spencer and D. Allen; T. W. Peterson and E. W. Ford; N. C. Cummings; M. and J. Devoy; T. L. Bradbury; J. T. Stanhope; M. M. Sitman; G. N. Guidotti, F. L. and N. Savlor; O. V. Harris; M. Spencer and D. Allen; B. H. Thaller; R. and K. Wells; L. B. Oroctor and D. U. Granger; L. D. Simmons; D. Carille, P. L. Perry, W. Williams and C. O. Bartlett; J. L. Sanderson; F. R. Thomas and H. D. Sankey; B. R. Mills and N. Prane; S. T. Rogers; J. L. Hupoll; D. L. and M. Rice; M. D. Fitzsimmons and L. Gormand; T. R. Fanning and W. Burns; T. L. and G. Daniels; R. G. Crews and T. T. Davidson; M. L. Cummings; W. L. Singer; B. L. White.

There are so many excellent answers that it is difficult to select one for publication. Here is one to Section A from A. F. Sprafke:

"The P. E. cell is the 'brains' of the whole sound system. Its sound system function is to change variable light rays coming to it from the film sound track into a modulated direct current, which is sent forward to be 'stepped up' until it finally reaches and operates the diaphragm of the speakers."

B. DeVietti says, "The function of the photocell is to change the recorded sound, which is in the form of light and dark variations in the film sound track, into exactly corresponding electrical impulses or variations."

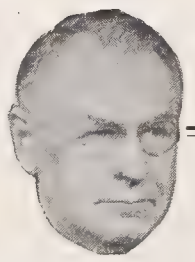
In answering Section B, J. R. Hickman says, "Barrel distortion causes a poorly corrected lens to so project the light rays that the screen image as a whole curves outward in proportion to the amount of the fault."

A. F. Sprafke says, "In a lens, barrel distortion is exactly what the name implies. That is to say, lines in the screen image, instead of being straight, are curved outward, presenting, in modified form, a barrel shape. It is a fault that full lens correction will cure."

D. Danielson says, "Barrel distortion is an uncorrected lens fault that causes straight lines in the screen image to curve or bow outward."

Danielson replies as follows to Section C: "It does not, because it is impractical to keep the scraping edge at precisely the correct depth. Either the splice is weakened by a thin layer of emulsion remaining, or the film itself is weakened by too-deep scraping."

There were many very excellent longer answers, but I have chosen brief ones because I want to publish the announcement that follows.



SOUND FOR THE PICTURE BY RADIO

From half past four to half past six in the morning, Eastern Standard Time, on Tuesday, January 28, the Carolina theatre in Anderson, S. C., will for the third time repeat a performance that impresses me as the finest publicity stunt that has been conceived in many a day. It was planned and carried through by "Happy" Jones, projectionist, and Chief Engineer Peoples of the radio broadcasting station WAIM, which operates on a frequency of 1,200 kilocycles. These gentlemen have received a great mass of letters commending it and asking questions, some of them from as far away as Montreal, Quebec.

Arrangements have been made with station WAIM for a connection by means of a telephone line directly with the amplifier in the theatre projection room. The photocell amplifiers work on dry and wet batteries. Jones disconnects the wires from the input stage of the main amplifier, connecting the telephone line in their place, so that the sound goes direct to the control panel of WAIM, all sound in the theatre being dead. (I believe the photocell batteries are used as boosters for the phone line, though as to that I am not certain.)

Jones installs one small and one large radio, the small one in the projection room to serve as monitor, the large one under the screen, where it picks the sound out of the air and broadcasts it. The motion picture is accompanied by sound produced in the projection room of the theatre, sent to a radio station, broadcast and picked up by a radio set. There has been absolutely no appreciable lag in the sound.

The previous occasions got the Carolina theatre a tremendous amount of newspaper publicity. I presume any radio engineer could make the connection properly, but it would be best to get full particulars from Jones, I think. There may be some little trick that may not occur to one who has not had any experience with such a hook-up.

Spoor Starting Soon On 3-Dimension Films

George K. Spoor in Chicago last week said that he would begin the production of three-dimensional films within 30 days. It is planned to film stage plays performed in a New York studio, which will be the center of the venture. Later, according to Mr. Spoor, full length operas will be produced with the original casts.

The new photography is the result of 20 years of research by Mr. Spoor and his co-inventor, P. Paul Berggren, engineer and physicist. The perfected system, Mr. Spoor said, represents an investment of $4,000,000.

THE KING

THE passing of King George V is an event of poignancy felt in our America with a sense of something more intimate than its general world import.

England has lost a King held in uncommon reverence and appreciation. India has lost an Emperor. But America, with a civilization rooted in those traditions of which he was the world symbol, feels the loss of a great personality betokening and bespeaking the stability and continuance of standards of national life and conduct which all sane citizens hope may be preserved.

It was, we are sure, the reality and permanence of the values which George V represented which not only permitted but enabled him to stand, growing in greatness and the esteem of his people, through these troubled years with crowned heads falling and governments tottering under revolution about him.

We share in England's loss.

ENGLAND'S new king, Edward VIII, is the only royal personage ever to have attained a screen personality and fame. For a number of years, beginning with his first visit to Canada and the United States, he was a familiar newsreel figure, arousing the enthusiasm of American audiences and seen on all the screens of the world.

While as Edward Prince of Wales he traveled the world over as "England's best salesman," seeing and seen by thousands, it was on the screen that the millions came to know him.

After years of valiant service to England's cause in the pictures, the Prince a few years ago began to become camera shy. The fact is that his screen appearances annoyed him by revealing trivial nervous traits, as, for instance, a frequent fluttering adjustment of his cravat, and the like. Then, too, when first the Prince was widely pictured for the screen it was under somewhat more friendly auspices than in the later period in which camera treatment of public figures has become considerably inconsiderate, boldly invasive.

The one cameraman who seems to have enjoyed most of the confidence of King Edward in his years of travel was, and is, Mr. Tracy Mathewson, of Atlanta, long a stellar screen reporter in the service of several newsreels. The soft-voiced diplomatic Mr. Mathewson was assigned by Kinograms to accompany the then Prince of Wales on the special trains which took him over Canada on his first excursion. His Royal Highness dubbed him "Fatty," and made it a point to see that the often zealous guards did not interfere with the picturing.

H. R. H. was long considerably puzzled by the fact that while Mr. Mathewson was aboard the royal train all the while between towns, he was also always on the station platform making the arrival when the train came in. It was never explained to the Prince that the thoughtful Canadian Pacific always slowed the special in the yards and took off the cameraman on a detached engine to race him ahead to the station.

For a period the pictures of the Prince of Wales, then at the height of the more romantic period of his career, gave the newsreels, for the first, and probably only time, a conspicuous flapper following—and that was in the flapper era.

Meanwhile in his more sedate later years, Edward, now Edward VIII, has come into a new measure of American esteem and a recognition of his assumption, in all due seriousness, of the burdens of Empire and a responsibility to a world beset with problems.

PICTURE THEATRE

A COUPLE of weeks ago Paramount brought "Rose of the Rancho," with Miss Gladys Swarthout, to Broadway with vast flourish, a society decorated opening and $11 seats. There was apparently a notion that the public and the show world should be impressed about something, probably the picture. There were a lot of pieces in the paper. Then, after the furore, came the newspapers of Sunday, January 12, with Paramount's theatre advertising topping its display and centering its attention on a none-too-well-known band and its "round and around" music, already done nigh unto death on the radio which keeps the customers home. If "Rose of the Rancho" in the opinion of the theatre management rated only filler position on the bill it probably would have been a favor to the motion picture company not to have mentioned it at all.

ONCE in a while there is a thrill over in the financial pages. This week come the merry tidings in the statistical tabulations of the announcement from Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., for thirteen weeks, the first quarter of their current fiscal year, of a net profit of $1,031,316, which is nearly twice the sum of the net for the entire year previous. and comparing with a loss of $143,751 for the same quarter in 1934. The art of the cinema seems to be about to resemble a business again.

The 1936 seed catalogues are out. They promise bigger and better. The best gardening we ever do is right about now on this glass-topped desk, where no weeds mar the picture.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Tax Threat

Theatre owners everywhere will probably receive with much alarm the unexpected news from Washington that the Administration is considering an increase in the federal tax on tickets of admission to motion picture theatres, as a result of the recent Supreme Court developments which are threatening to wreck the "balanced" budget submitted to Congress this month by President Roosevelt. Turn to page 13.

Music Suits

With eight infringement actions filed in the federal courts in New York and Philadelphia by Wednesday, Warners were deep in their drive to compel broadcasters to obtain licensing agreements for its music.

Exhibitors, however, were assured that no infringement actions would be brought until the company's policy with respect to theatre licenses is formulated. The circuits had cautioned their managers to guard against possible copyright violations.

The radio networks regard the suits in the nature of test cases. For particulars, see page 18.

Setback

Major distributors' hopes to put an end to double featuring by restrictive contract clauses were dissipated this week when the United States circuit court of appeals in Philadelphia declared such restrictions in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

The opinion was in the wellknown Perelman case, and it upheld the lower court's decision, with modifications.

Counsel for the distributor-defendants were initiating steps for an appeal to the supreme court. What the appellate court said and the implications and history of the case are related on page 30.

Option

Indications in New York this week are that Standard Capital Company, headed by J. Cheever Cowdin, will be unable to arrive at a decision on the exercising of its option to acquire a controlling interest in Universal Pictures Corporation until approximately the time of the expiration of the option, February 1. The negotiation of an extension of the option time beyond that date, if necessary, is said to be a very likely possibility.

Mr. Cowdin said this week that, despite the fact that his company's study of Universal's financial position and requirements had been proceeding "day and night," the work could not be completed before next week at the earliest. His company's decision on exercising the option it holds on Universal is awaiting the completion of this study.

The understanding is that Universal leans favorably toward the idea and that the terms of such an option are being worked out now.

Print Costs

If those groups now fighting against the present system of blind buying and block booking succeed in abolishing the practice by law, as proposed, the industry will be saddled with a cost of $25,000,000 a year alone for the additional prints that would be required, according to Louis Nizer, distributor counsel, who, in offering the majors' latest line of attack on behalf of the practice, warns that rentals will be prohibitive in some cases and considerably increased in all cases under a non-block booking order. Mr. Nizer explains the situation in its present form on page 48.

Warner Profit

Difficulties that developed during the retrenchment period which followed the depression have evidently been completely overcome by the management of Warner Brothers Pictures, which this week reported a net profit of $1,031,316, after all charges, for 13 weeks, compared with a loss of $143,751 in the same period in 1934.

Cash on hand totaled $3,541,220, current assets for working purposes were worth $20,377,000, and total assets reached $170,353,000. The corporation's present favorable financial condition is compared with previous years on page 26.

Reel Changes

At a meeting of the distributors' 2,000-foot reel committee, held at the offices of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in New York, the date for the official adoption of the new 2,000-foot reel was changed from April 1st to August 1st, 1936.

This conclusion was reached after an examination and survey made jointly by the committee and the manufacturers of the new equipment. It was not possible for the manufacturers to meet the concentrated demands for simultaneous delivery to all companies by April 1st. The later date was agreed upon in view of the special designs, steel, dyes and the large amount of equipment necessitated by the adoption of the larger reel.

Directors' Union

Hollywood studios moved a long stride toward the closed shop status sought by creative talent guilds when a group of 40 wellknown directors, springing a surprise, formed a union of their own, at the same time resigning from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. King Vidor is temporary president. It's all a part of the "one big union" idea. See page 27.

Again the "Lefts"

The "lefts" are thundering against the motion picture industry again. In New York, Boston and Cleveland agitation has been renewed for a boycott of "Riffraff" and "Red Salute." Too, left-inclined periodicals are attacking the industry, while the Reds are being investigated in New York. See page 54.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Code—Again

Whether it wants it or not, the motion picture industry is to be the object of attention by the Council on Industrial Relations, sponsored by Major George L. Berry, President Roosevelt's coordinator for industrial cooperation. But hope the industry would actively participate were dashed when Felix Jenkins, counsel for Twentieth Century-Fox, rejected a committee appointment.

While the industry generally is cool to the idea and to any other proposal for self-regulation, John G. Paine, the Council's spokesman, said this week that various problems affecting business would be taken up with a view to laying the groundwork for regulatory legislation.

Meanwhile the move for voluntary regulation in the industry has met an impasse, and while the MPTOA still hopes for it, Allied prefers legislation and litigation. The situation is pictured in the story on page 42.

St. Louis

The third week of trial in the Government's equity action against Warner, Paramount and RKO, in progress in St. Louis, was marked by a succession of witnesses for the prosecution. Indications were the Government would complete its case this weekend, after placing Harry C. Arthur, its key witness, on the stand. For a day-by-day account, see page 34.

Censor Tilt

A bill making it mandatory for the Boston censor board to hold a hearing of "all persons interested" before banning a film or stage production has been introduced in the state legislature under sponsorship of the newly formed Massachusetts Theatre Alliance.

Under present statutes, city authorities can ban any entertainment without a hearing or without even viewing it. The bill is an upshot of Mayor Mansfield's banning of "The Children's Hour," successful Broadway play, which has precipitated storms of protest in theatrical circles.

The petition of Herman Shumlin, producer of "The Children's Hour," for an injunction to prevent the mayor from barring the show is scheduled for hearing in federal district court in Boston. The play, incidentally, is being made as a film by Samuel Goldwyn for United Artists release under the title of "These Three."

Mourning

by BRUCE ALLAN
(Special London Cable to the HERALD)

Legitimate theatres in London's West End are feeling considerable effect on admissions from the mourning period following the death of King George V, and there is a noticeable drop of attendance in cinemas in the same area, though not as marked.

The order calls for six months of full mourning and three months of half mourning for the court. Literally, the period of mourning means that no member of the royal family or persons associated with the court attend any public entertainment, and this is observed also by quite a large number of individuals not strictly belonging to the circles defined. In recent years the period usually has been limited to a small class. At King Edward VII's death the mourning period was abbreviated to six weeks at the request of the new king.

First nights inevitably will lack the customary distinguished audiences, reducing the publicity value from that viewpoint.

Buying Combine

A cooperative booking plan, patterned after the one in operation in Michigan, has been proposed by the members of the Akron Independent Theatre Owners Association, as a protective measure against the rumored entry of three major producers into the local exhibition field. It is feared that RKO, Warner Brothers and Universal each have options on property in this city and intend to build theatres.

Tentative plans call for a schedule of graduated admission prices with established dates of availability. For theatres charging 25 cents, the availability date shall be 28 days after the conclusion of the downtown first run; for 20-cent house, there shall be a 42-day availability date, while for houses charging 15 cents, pictures shall become available on the 56th day following the conclusion of the first run.

Tax Respite

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

Mexico's Ministry of Finance has continued for 60 to 90 days the term of the special franchise granted exhibitors in December to import films, discs, and so on, at a flat duty of $9.72 a kilogram, instead of the normal $19.85 a kilogram. The exhibitors requested the extension as necessary to keep their houses open, following virtual breakdown of negotiations to end the strike of employes against eight major American distributors.

Academy Dinner

Nomination ballots for the eight annual awards of merit by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences have been mailed to members and Frank Capra, president, has chosen March 5 as the date and the Los Angeles Biltmore Hotel as the place for the annual awards dinner.

The deadline for the balloting has been set for February 3 and nominees will be announced as soon as the ballots are counted. Pictures for which awards will be given include only those publicly exhibited (previews excluded) in the Los Angeles district from January 1, 1935, to December 31. A total of 479 features are eligible, 49 of which were made abroad.

Short subject producers have been asked by the Academy to submit immediately to that organization a list of titles of product they intend entering in the short subjects division for the eighth annual awards. Each producer may enter two of his subjects in the classifications cartoon, comedy, novelty.

This Week in Pictures

CINEMATOGRAPHER 25 YEARS. Is the record of Hal Rosher, chief cameraman on David O. Selznick's production for United Artists, "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and it was recognized in a scroll presented (see below) by Dolores Costello Barrymore.

ON HOLIDAY. Kitty Carlisle (right), who has been enjoying a brief vacation in New York before undertaking new roles. Her latest picture is Paramount's Marxian satire, "A Night at the Opera."

USHERS WIN TRIP. Brenton Stanley and Arthur Levine of the Metropolitan, Boston, receiving the good wishes of Jack O'Brien and Arthur Gallery, chief of staff, as they leave for New York on a vacation, with all expenses paid, awarded them for meritorious service.

LAMPS GETTING BIGGER. And players smaller, it seems. For example, Billy Loo (below) and this giant light at Paramount, where Billy has been playing in "The Sky Parade."

GOVERNMENT CONSIDERS ADMISSION TAX INCREASE

Would Mean Levy on Tickets As Low As 25 or Even 10 Cents, Or Higher Rate on General Admissions Above 40 Cents

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Bureau of THE HERALD

Theatre owners the country over will find a bombshell in the news that increased federal taxes are being considered by President Roosevelt's Administration on tickets of admission to motion pictures, compelling owners to join with liquor drinkers, tobacco smokers and automobile operators in footing one-fourth of the five billion United States tax burden in 1936-37.

Startling to exhibitors who had thought the dangers of higher admission taxes were over with the reading of the President's message to Congress, this information leaked out of Washington this week when it became known that United States Treasury actuaries, engaged in a survey of fields of new revenue as a result of recent developments which are threatening to wreck the "balanced" budget submitted to Congress this month by Mr. Roosevelt, had their eyes on higher admission taxes as one possible source.

Theatre owners already are overburdened in most places with heavy municipal and state taxes and a ten per cent federal tax on admissions above 40 cents. This levy alone requires owners to pay the Government some $17,000,000 a year.

Any new federal taxation again would compel owners to face the serious problem of deciding whether they can afford to absorb the increase or pass it on to their customers in the form of higher admissions.

The Administration has not decided what form any new theatre taxation will take.

Invalidation of the processing taxes by the Supreme Court and the apparently inevitable enactment of the bill for immediate payment of the soldiers' bonus, neither of which was contemplated in the budget, may increase the amount of new money which must be raised by the Government during the coming year to as much as $11,300,000,000, according to Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau.

Intimations at White House

Intimations that consideration was being given to new taxes as a means of providing some of this money were heard at the White House, and the Treasury, it is understood, is making a series of studies so that, if called upon for information or suggestions, it will be prepared.

Preliminary surveys of the situation are believed to have disclosed that the field for new taxes is narrow unless still further income and corporation levies are to be imposed. The "soak-the-rich" tax bill enacted last session was the subject of a bitter fight which indicated that further steps in that direction would be highly difficult.

There is held to be a possible field for new revenue, however, in the excise taxes, collections from which have shown marked gains in the past year.

The monthly report of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, made public this week, shows that while collections from the theatre admission tax, one of the excise levies, declined from $1,866,915 in November to $1,755,059 in December—though they then were well ahead of the December, 1934, receipts being $1,666,060—the total for the last six months of 1935 was $8,874,871 against $7,848,246 for the same period in 1934, a gain of $1,026,625.

Two Million Collection Gain

On the basis of experience for the first half of the current fiscal year, it is estimated that admission tax collections for the fiscal year 1936, which ends June 30th, next, will run well over $17,000,000 as compared with $15,379,397 for the year which ended June 30th, last.

In studying the possibilities of obtaining further revenue from amusements, the Treasury apparently has two ways in which to bring this about. One is to reduce the exemption still further, say to 25 cents or possibly as low as 10 cents; the other is to maintain the present 40 cent exemption but increase the rate to 15 or 20 per cent from the current 10 per cent.

While it is recognized that any tinkering with the admission tax would be highly unpopular, Washington officialdom is said to feel that the country cannot go on indefinitely increasing the national debt and that eventually the tax screws will have to be put on to an extent never heretofore attempted, even during the war period.

Face Hot Fight

Any proposals made by the Administration for new taxes, however, will be bitterly opposed by members of Congress who next fall will have to go before their constituents for re-election unless President Roosevelt formally makes them a part of his New Deal program.

Evidence of this opposition appeared last week when it became known that members of the powerful House ways and mean committee, in which all revenue legislation originates—Democrats as well as Republicans—had made agreements among themselves to fight any new taxes.

If the President announces taxes as part of his program, and thus accepts all responsibility for adverse reaction of the country, it is believed he can obtain passage of a revenue bill, but without such support enactment is held to be practically impossible.

Tentative suggestions for new taxes, designed to gauge public reaction, already have been made at the Capitol. One of these "trial balloons" was in the shape of a bill calling for a capital levy, but this was so unpopular among members of Congress that it was hurried over to the ways and means committee and immediately buried.

PROTESTS NAZI BAN ON NON-ARYAN ACTORS

Actors' Equity Association this week protested the edict barring non-Aryan actors from the German stage.

A statement said: "A dispatch from Germany announces Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels has ordered the police to demand that all actors show their membership cards in the Reich Theatre Chamber, a branch of the Chamber of Culture from which all non-Aryan actors are carefully barred.

"Equity feels that in such an action the German state has injured not only those non-Aryan actors but the theatre of Germany and all who look to it for culture and entertainment. And so Equity vigorously renews the protest it made to the International Union of Persons Connected With the Stage."

Hays on Board Of Arbitration

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, has accepted appointment on a special committee of the American Arbitration Association in charge of a series of 12 meetings to be held in observance of the association's ten years of activity.

Others in the industry who have been invited to serve are Robert H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal; Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers, and J. Robert Rubin, vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The meetings, which will start with a tenth anniversary dinner at the Astor hotel, New York, February 4th, and will be held for different industries, will seek to promote the use of commercial arbitration in this country. Thomas J. Watson, president of the International Business Machines Corporation, heads the special committee.

The American Arbitration Association has cooperated closely with the industry.

THERE'S THEATRE FOR EVERY 6,742 IN U.S. AND A SEAT FOR EACH 11

Total of 826 More Houses in Operation Than a Year Ago and 1,962 More Than at End of 1934, Reflecting Upturn

There is in the United States one motion picture theatre seat for every 11 persons, compared with 13 persons per seat last year, and there is only one theatre to serve every 6,742 persons, as compared with 8,590 persons per theatre in 1934.

Distributors were serving film to 581 more theatres, seating approximately 390,410, on January 1, 1936, than on the same date one year ago, and to 1,397 more theatres, with a combined capacity of 1,090,410, than two years ago, indicating the extent of the steady improvement reflected in the motion picture business during the upturn of the past two years.

Not all of these new theatre customers created in 1935 reopened existing properties, new theatre construction having finally resumed after a dearth during the depression years. There has been, however, a tendency to remove antiquated structures on the wholesale, also those with limited seating capacities, and millions in addition were spent for rehabilitation of old properties.

The theatre structure of this country today compares as follows:

JAN. 1	PROPERTIES STANDING	THEATRES OPERATING
1936	18,508	15,378
1935	18,263	14,552
1934	18,371	13,736
1933	19,311	13,416
1932	20,100	14,750

This is the first year in at least five that theatres in operation exceeded the 15,000 mark.

During this five-year period the average seating capacity per theatre for the country as a whole increased from 535 seats in 1932, to 599 in 1933, 600 in 1934, and 610 in 1935, remaining the same throughout this year.

There were a total of 175,446 more seats in motion picture theatres on January 1, 1936, than on the same date one year ago, capacities comparing as follows:

JAN. 1	PROPERTIES STANDING	TOTAL CAPACITIES
1936	18,508	11,308,041
1935	18,263	11,132,595
1934	18,371	11,028,950
1933	19,311	11,161,193
1932	20,100	10,767,411

These conclusions were drawn from reports made this week by the Film Boards of Trade of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and which were taken from customer records on film service as appearing on the books of the eight large distributors and their exchanges in the field.

Affiliated circuits have added some 119 theatre properties since January 1, 1935, and 258 in two years, although at this time they have as a whole 74 fewer theatres than in 1933. The so-called "unaffiliated" circuits, many of them formerly controlled by the large producer-exhibitors, made greater expansion progress in 1935, increasing their holdings from 3,070 to 3,464, for a total of 394. The single-theatre "independents" continued to lose ground, their total reducing from 13,120 in 1935 to 12,852 in 1936, for a net loss of 268. All of these totals, of course, include theatres both operating and closed. Holdings of these three groups compare as follows:

AFFILIATED CIRCUITS

	TOTAL THEATRES	SEATING CAPACITIES
1936	2,192	2,908,226
1935	2,073	2,718,701

1935	13,120	5,874,478
1934	13,571	5,948,925
1933	13,796	5,585,830

In the analysis above of affiliated circuit properties the wide difference between the totals of 2,266 theatres controlled on January 1, 1933, and the 1,954 on January 1, 1934, gives effect to the nationwide decentralization by which some of the large circuits, especially Paramount and RKO and Fox, divested their holdings on the wholesale. However, the 2,192 total listed at this time indicates that they are reclaiming some of these properties.

The silent theatre has disappeared to the point where today there are only 27 operating, and, so far as is known, not one is operating on a full-time schedule—probably constituting local civic or municipal halls in the remotest sections, yet carried as regular customers on the distributors' books. The story of the slow but certain death of the silent nickelodeon is told in these compilations:

JAN. 1	TOTAL THEATRES SOUND	TOTAL THEATRES SILENT	CLOSED THEATRES SOUND	CLOSED THEATRES SILENT
1936	16,989	1,519	1,638	1,492
1935	16,325	1,938	1,824	1,887
1934	15,652	2,719	1,979	2,656
1933	15,231	4,080	2,170	3,725
1932	14,805	5,295	1,582	3,757

Sound theatre structures, both open and closed, have increased then some 664 since January 1, 1934, and some 2,184 since January 1, 1932, the while unwired theatres, operating or not, have decreased 395 in a year and 2,265 in five years. It is quite unlikely that any of the so-called "silent" theatres now standing will ever reopen with other than a talking picture policy.

There are 581 fewer theatres of all types closed today than on January 1, 1935, when 3,711 were closed, as compared with 3,130 closed on January 1 of this year, and compared with 5,895 in 1933, 4,635 in 1934.

Some indication of the improvement in motion picture business may be had in the following comparison of theatres open at the turn of the year:

1936	15,378
1935	14,552
1934	13,736
1933	13,416
1932	14,750

The industry had not yet felt the real effects of the business deflation at the end of 1931 to have sufficient cause to darken theatres.

It appears that many hundreds of the "silent" and dark theatres would be found among the theatres listed in the table in the center column which shows independent theatres, open and closed.

Nugent Is Times Critic; Crisler Made Assistant

Frank Nugent has been appointed the new motion picture editor and critic of The New York Times. He fills the vacancy caused by the recent death of Andre Sennwald.

Mr. Nugent is well known in New York film circles, having acted as assistant to Mr. Sennwald.

Benjamin R. Crisler will act as Mr. Nugent's assistant.

Weisfeldt Starts Duties

Max Weisfeldt has started his new duties as supervisor of short product of Columbia Pictures, following his arrival from the Coast. He succeeds J. W. McFarland.

Glorification for the Showman:

MORE THAN THREE MONTHS already have been consumed at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio in efforts to recapture for the screen the spirit of Florenz Ziegfeld. The two stills here selected from the production, now in work, allow a glimpse of the measures taken. He was of the stage, of another day, but his genius as a showman is finding re-creation again in a motion picture which glorifies him. This film is of a conception that can fairly be called his own.

¶ Hunt Stromberg, the producer, and Robert Z. Leonard, the director, have fashioned in "The Great Ziegfeld" a musical circus surpassing in extravagant display anything the MGM studio has ever attempted. Literally, it comprises 21 shows in one, running the gamut of entertainment.

¶ The part of Ziegfeld is William Powell's. As his wife, Billie Burke, is Myrna Loy. Luise Rainer is the starry-eyed, audaciously publicized Anna Held. Many of the personalities that Ziegfeld made famous are in the cast—Fanny Brice, Ann Pennington, Ray Bolger, Gilda Gray, Harriet Hoctor and others.

¶ Glorified above all the girls who are lavishly glorified in this production is one named Audrey Lane. She is impersonated by Virginia Bruce, herself a graduate of the Ziegfeld Follies. Others in the cast include Frank Morgan, Reginald Owen, Ernest Cossart, Robert Greig, Raymond Walburn, Jean Chatburn, Charles Trowbridge, Charles Judels, Marcella Corday and Esther Muir.

¶ Songs are many and routines spectacular. For one number a huge revolving stage was constructed, so large that a three-ring circus tent was pitched to cover it.

¶ The dance routines are directed by Seymour Felix, who formerly was dance director for Ziegfeld. The story and screen play are by William Anthony McGuire, with production carried out with the co-operation of Billie Burke.

WARNER LAUNCHES EIGHT SUITS AGAINST RADIO USE OF ITS MUSIC

Subsidiaries Hold in Abeyance Infringement Actions Against Exhibitors; Circuits Warn on Unlicensed Performance

Filing of eight infringement suits by Warner music subsidiaries against the major radio networks and independent stations, with many more announced in the offing, and a warning by circuit heads to managers to take extra precautions against the playing of Warner music other than on film featured the week's developments in the complicated situation over music copyrights.

To motion picture exhibitors, perhaps the most significant highlight was the assurance given by Herman Starr, Warner vice-president in charge of music, that no infringement actions will be brought against them until after the company's licensing policy for theatres has been announced.

Warner's policy with respect to theatres, hotels, cafes and others except radio who publicly perform music for profit will not be made known for several weeks. Mr. Starr does not consider these groups infringers since no provision has as yet been made to license them.

Meanwhile Warner protested to Mayor F. H. LaGuardia against the federal suit filed last week by the city seeking to obtain the right to broadcast Warner music over WNYC, city-owned station.

While some 200 independent stations have signed the Warner license agreement for three months, retroactive to January 1, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers made known this week that all but a few of the country's 570-odd stations subject to music royalties had agreed to license renewals for five years at existing terms. A large number accepted on the heels of ASCAP's ultimatum that broadcasters holding out after January 15 would be considered infringers subject to suit. ASCAP said the difficulties with the few remaining stations would be ironed out.

A. M. Wattenberg, of Wattenberg and Wattenberg, Warner legal counsel in charge of the court drive against alleged radio infringers, said on Wednesday that a large number of suits are being prepared for filing in federal courts in various key cities against unlicensed radio stations who have broadcast Warner music. Litigation will be started in Philadelphia, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, San Francisco and Los Angeles, as soon as Warner music staffs in those cities can develop proof and as quickly as the papers can be prepared, said Mr. Wattenberg.

The legal campaign got under way last Friday when Warner music subsidiaries filed four suits in the federal district court in New York. On Tuesday the number was increased to seven. Each alleges a single infringement, on various dates beginning with January 1, and seeks an injunction and $5,000 damages for broadcasting the one song.

The actions brought against broadcasting companies in New York are:

Harms, Inc., vs. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. (WABC)

Remick Music Corporation vs. National Broadcasting Company, Inc. (WEAF)

M. Witmark and Sons vs. Knickerbocker Broadcasting Company, Inc. (WMCA)

M. Witmark and Sons vs. Marcus Loew Booking Agency, Schenley Products Company, Inc. (the sponsor) and William H. Rankin Company (advertising agency handling the account). (WHN)

Remick Music Corporation vs. WBO Broadcasting Corporation (WNEW)

M. Witmark and Sons vs. WBO Broadcasting Corporation. (WNEW)

Remick Music Corporation vs. Knickerbocker Broadcasting Company, Inc. (WMCA)

The eighth suit was filed Wednesday in the federal district court in Philadelphia on behalf of Remick against Station WIP of that city.

As in the case of the suit against WHN, which is controlled by Loew's, Inc., where the violation occurs in a sponsored program, the sponsor and advertising agency will also be named defendants, and in addition to an injunction and damages Warner will seek an accounting of profits, Mr. Wattenberg said.

In the case of an infringement on a sustaining network program, all stations in the chain will be sued, he added.

DECISION MAY HALT RECORDS IN THEATRES

Performance of records on non-synchronous devices and phonographs in theatres was jeopardized by a basic decision of the common pleas court in Philadelphia this week that a record made for non-commercial uses can not be used commercially.

The decision is the first of its kind, and is considered by attorneys to establish a performer's rights at common law, with far-reaching consequences.

It was given by Judge Harry S. McDevitt, in an injunction action brought by Fred Waring, orchestra leader, on behalf of himself and the National Association of Performing Artists against WDAS Broadcasting Company, Philadelphia. The National Association of Broadcasters intervened for the defendant. There is no special legislation on the subject. An appeal will be taken.

Large Networks and Independent Stations Affected by Action in Copyright Fight; 200 Have Signed Agreement

It had been expected that only a few suits would be brought, and these would be confined to New York City, in the nature of a legal test to determine copyright control of performing rights as between Warner and ASCAP. Mr. Wattenberg, however, emphasized that Warner had no intention of pressing any test cases for the benefit of the broadcasters.

Regardless, Columbia Broadcasting System consider the suits test cases, and it is understood National Broadcasting Company assumes the same attitude. It was indicated the defense of the networks will be that: (1) They are entitled to perform Warner music because the company was a member of ASCAP when they signed five-year agreements with the Society; and (2) the authors and composers, having a 50-50 share with the publishers in the performing rights royalties, have an equal voice in determining to whom the rights shall go.

Theatre managers have been advised by Paramount, Loew, RKO and other circuit home offices to exercise precaution against possible infringements of Warner copyrights in stage show or orchestra music. Five Warner song numbers were eliminated recently from the performance of Glen Gray's Case Loma orchestra at the Paramount, New York.

On behalf of the Warner music publishing companies, Mr. Starr on Tuesday protested to Mayor LaGuardia of New York, in connection with the declaratory judgment sought by the city to affirm the non-profit status of WNYC, thereby making it eligible to broadcast Warner music without charge.

While declaring that "we are always willing to allow the use of our copyrighted music free of charge" for non-profit institutions, the letter indicated that "we feel that we are entitled, however, to protection agaist the free use of our music over WNYC for purposes of possible illegitimate profit to an individual or organization apart from the station itself."

It was learned that since withdrawing from ASCAP December 31, Warners have paid their first quarter royalties to ASCAP for all Warner theatres, covering music not controlled by Warners. ASCAP said the check was for more than 100,000 seats and "exceeded $10,000."

Suit for an accounting charging plagiarism of the song "Twenty-four Hours a Day" used in the Universal picture, "Sweet Surrender" has been filed in federal district court in New York against Harms, Inc., a Warner music company, by Belwin, Inc., music publisher.

Title Changes a Double-Edged Problem—Fox West Coast Producing Full Length Stage Shows in Fight on Double Bills — Eight Films Start, Eight Finished

Title Problem

TITLE changes always have been a pain to exhibitors, but they're a problem to the producer too. In remakes of silent films, many producers feel that the old title is associated with the idea of a revival instead of a new version. On the other hand, the ready made audience may feel resentful when it realizes that a well remembered tale, camouflaged under an unfamiliar title, has come and gone without identification.

A striking case in point is Warner's "I Married a Doctor," now in production. It is a remake of Sinclair Lewis' "Main Street." In changing the title, the company sacrifices the publicity that would go with the title of the sensationally successful novel.

In such cases many alert showmen have frankly announced in advertising campaigns that the new film is a new version, while the original title has been given space in advertising.

Experimenting

Fox West Coast is trying the experiment of producing full length stage shows in an effort to kill double featuring. The first production, Porter Emerson Browne's "The Bad Man," was staged at the Belmont, a neighborhood house, and met with good audience response. The cast was headed by Roy D'Arcy in the title role, and included Otis Harlan, Barry Norton and Viva Tattersall. Harry Garson staged the play, and ingeniously overcame stage waits and other difficulties. The performance opened with a trailer which introduced the cast, and as the film faded, a spotlight picked a character on the stage, and the whole set was lighted gradually. The same procedure was used in reverse order to eliminate curtains between acts; in this case the spot faded from character to blackout. The play ran for 70 minutes, and the original script was used with only minor changes.

Fox West Coast is preparing two other productions, "The Family Upstairs" and "Whistling in the Dark," which will be tried out in this and other spots. Wherever possible. leads will be selected from the film colony. Only two performances a day are given.

Eight Start

The production scale balanced evenly last week as eight pictures started and eight finished. "Under Two Flags," Twentieth Century-Fox, which has been in production for two weeks, had to be halted because of the illness of Simone Simon, work to be renewed with selection of another player. Despite this schedule upset, Twentieth Century-Fox started two new features. Warner also started a pair.

Started were "Matron's Report" and "The Country Beyond." The first will present Jane Withers, supported by Ralph Morgan, Jane Darwell, Harry Carey, Sara Haden, Charles Wilson, Tommy Jackson, Donald Haines, Lillian Harmer and Paul Stanton. John Blystone is directing. This marks the conclusion of Blystone's 17 years of contract with Fox and Twentieth Century-Fox. In the second feature, most of which is being shot on location, are Rochelle Hudson, Paul Kelly and Robert Hunt. Eugene Ford is directing.

Warner Starts Two

At Warner, work began on "Sons o'Guns." Joe E. Brown is starred with Joan Blondell, Eunice Healy, Eric Blore, Joseph King, Beverly Roberts and Winifred Shaw in the principal supporting roles. Lloyd Bacon is directing. Second feature, "The Golden Arrow," has Bette Davis, George Brent and Kay Hughes in the leading roles. Alfred Green is directing.

Republic put "G Men of the Nineties" into work. With Joseph Kane directing, the cast includes John Wayne, Ann Rutherford, George Hayes, Al Bridge, Tom Brown, Lane Chandler, Greta McDaniels, Jack Rockwell and George Cheseboro.

"Kelly The Second" started at Hal Roach Studio. Patsy Kelly is starred with Pert Kelton, Charlie Chase, Edward Brophy, Harold Huber, DeWitt Jennings, Maxie Rosenbloom and Guinn Williams. William Terhune is directing.

Pioneer Pictures started "Dancing Pirates." Steffi Duna and Ralph Morgan are featured with the newcoming Charles Collins. A story of early California history, the picture will be directed by Lloyd Corrigan and made in color.

Two pictures were finished by Republic. In "The Leathernecks Have Landed" were Lew Ayres, Isabel Jewell, Jimmy Ellison, Ward Bond, J. Carroll Naish, James Burke, Clay Clement, Joseph Sawyer, Louis Vincenot, Claude King and Christian Rub. Howard Bretherton directed. The second picture, "The Return of Jimmy Valentine," will present Roger Pryor, Robert Warwick, Charlotte Henry, Lois Wilson, Edgar Kennedy, J. Carroll Naish, James Burke, James Burtis, Dewey Robinson, Franklyn Parker, Frank Melton and Wade Boteler. Louis B. Collins directed.

Completed Pictures

MGM completed "Wife Vs Secretary." Clark Gable, Jean Harlow and Myrna Loy are starred. The support lists May Robson, Holmes Herbert, Myrna Marsh, Frederick Burton, Hobart Cavanaugh, Harold Minjir, Roger Imhof, Maurice Cass, Margaret Irving, Claudelle Kay, Jose Rubio, Jameson Thomas, Helen Shipman, Tom Dugan, Gilbert Emery and Hooper Atchley. Clarence Brown directed.

"Desert Gold" was finished at Paramount, with Buster Crabbe, Marsha Hunt, Glen Erickson, Robert Cummings, Monte Blue, Si Jenks, Walter Miller Tom Keane, Frank Mayo and Phillip Morris. James Hogan directed.

At Twentieth Century-Fox "A Message to Garcia" was finished. The cast includes Wallace Beery, Barbara Stanwyck, John Boles, Alan Hale, Mona Barrie, Herbert Mundin, Martin Garralaga, Blanca Vischer, Jose Tortosa, Pat Moriarty and Octavio Giraud. George Marshall directed.

The final completed feature is "Snowed Under," Warner production, with George Brent, Genevieve Tobin, Glenda Farrell, Patricia Ellis, Frank McHugh, John Eldredge, Henry O'Neill and Helen Lowell. Raymond Enright directed.

Warners' Quarter Shows $1,031,316 Net Profit Made

Extent of the success of the management of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., Harry M. Warner, president, in bringing the corporation out of the depression and the subsequent entrenchment period, was disclosed last weekend in the board of directors' announcement that net profit for 13 weeks was $1,031,316, contrasted with a $143,751 loss for the same 1934 period, and was nearly double the entire 1934-35 net of $674,158.

In the quarter reported, ending November 30, 1935, gross business was $8,602,147, some $1,000,000 better than in the same quarters in 1934 and 1933. Cash on hand totaled $3,541,220, compared with $3,200,000 and $2,462,000 in 1934 and 1933, respectively. Working assets were worth $20,377,000, comparing with $17,030,000 in November, 1934. Against the 1935 quarter's $20,377,000 current assets were current liabilities of $14,886,442.

The net profit from operations for the 13 weeks in 1935 before amortization and depreciation of properties, and federal income taxes, was $2,744,855, and after all charges but before federal taxes was $1,258,359.

During the period some $568,535 was credited directly to deficit account, representing discount realized on redemption of optional six per cent convertible debentures and bonds of subsidiary companies.

The latest earnings were after allowing $3.85 dividends on the preferred stock, on which unpaid dividends to and including December 1, 1935, amounted to $1,488,607, and were equivalent to 25 cents a share on 3,701,091 shares (par $5) of common stock, excluding 100,253 shares held by the company.

Warners' holdings in real estate, buildings, leases and equipment were valued at $137,598,000 on December 1, 1935. The company had production inventories, after depreciation charges, of some $14,101,000, nearly $3,000,000 more than the previous year and $4,000,000 more than on December 1, 1933. The rights of scenarios and stories were doubled, too, the company listing this asset at $1,229,301 as of December 1, last. Goodwill is carried at $8,227,483.

Total assets were: 1935, $170,353,000; 1934, $169,776,000; 1933, $169,018,000.

DIRECTORS JOIN MOVEMENT FOR 'ONE BIG UNION' IN HOLLYWOOD

Forty Among Highest Paid Talent at Studios Quit Academy and Form Own Guild; King Vidor, Temporary Head

Motion picture directors, among the highest paid creative talent in Hollywood, have thrown their might to the growing movement to effect a closed shop of studio workers. The cinema capital was considerably surprised last weekend when it became known that the directors had formed a union, the Screen Directors' Guild, and that the 40 organizers, all well known, had resigned from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

At present loosely affiliated with the other guilds, those of the actors and writers, the new association is expected to become a strong link in coming weeks, and with other unionization in progress, the move is regarded as preliminary to a show of strength shortly, in a demand for producer recognition of Hollywood's "one big union."

The first move toward plans for a studio central labor council was made in Hollywood Tuesday with a meeting of the Actors' and Writers' Guilds with teamster, carpenter and other recognized labor unions. Representatives of the IATSE and IBEW did not attend, nor of the new Directors' Guild. This may develop into the plan for one group to deal with the producers for all employees.

Numerous grievances harbored by the directors against phases of studio operation and supervision had developed a fertile ground for the organization, it was reported from the west coast, but the direct cause, its sponsors said was a desire to protect themselves against producers who recently had been minimizing the power of the directors.

Secret Meetings

A series of secret meetings culminated in the formation of the Guild in the early hours of Thursday. The session was attended by officers of the Screen Actors' and Screen Writers' Guilds.

Laurence Beilenson, attorney for these groups, negotiated the legal aspects of the new organization, and will serve also as its counsel. A corporate charter was obtained in Sacramento, California's capital, under the name of Screen Directors, Inc.

Permanent officers were to be elected at a meeting this week. Temporary officers were chosen as follows: King Vidor, president; Lewis Milestone, first vice-president; Frank Tuttle, second vice-president; William K. Howard, secretary, and John Ford, treasurer. The board of directors includes the officers and Frank Borzage, Clarence Brown, John Cromwell, Howard Hawks, Wesley Ruggles, Rouben Mamoulian, William Wellman, Gregory LaCava, Edward Sutherland and H. Bruce Humberstone.

Telegrams were dispatched to approximately 250 directors inviting them to join. Most of these are, or were, members of the Academy. By midweek it was reported that a majority had accepted.

Though officials of the Academy, which the Guilds regard as a "company union," seemed unperturbed over the new development, it was indicated the directors were discussing the move. The Academy, however, intends to continue with the achievement awards, it was understood.

Whether to affiliate with the American Federation of Labor has not yet been decided by the directors, it was said. Plans in this direction awaited the arrival in Hollywood of Frank Gillmore, president, and Paul Turner, counsel, of Actors' Equity Association, who left New York by boat for the coast during the week.

Equity headquarters in New York were keeping the purpose of the officials' trip a dark secret. But it was no secret in Hollywood that the stage actors' union, which has a close tie with the Screen Actors' Guild, is being depended upon for strong support in the anticipated fight for control between the Guilds and the Academy.

Behind the various maneuvers, it is reported, is the plan to weld all studio unions into a gigantic organization and thus force studio heads and producers to recognize them in collective bargaining for salaries and working conditions.

As one of the preparatory moves, the Screen Actors' Guild has applied for membership in the Los Angeles Central Labor Council. Technicians, too, are being organized.

Giving impetus to the movement was the recent struggle for jurisdiction between the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, in which the IATSE finally obtained a closed shop status.

Commenting on the industrial peace which is thus said to have descended upon the studios, Kenneth Thomson, secretary of the Actors' Guild, observed in the Screen Guilds' Magazine:

"From the point of view of the Guilds, it is not too much to expect that this new spirit of tolerance and understanding will extend to the two most important crafts which still lack formal studio recognition. When employers admit that contented electricians and musicians are important to the product, it would seem quite logical to believe that said employers might understand that contented writers and actors are equally important.

". . . There is little argument on the score that the Guilds have made a definite place for themselves in the industry, and eventually will be granted formal recognition."

Playwrights' Demands

Returning from Hollywood, Luise Sillcox, secretary of the Authors' League of America, denied reports that the Dramatists' Guild would demand 100 per cent of the amount received for picture rights to stage plays, or a figure slightly less. However, some change in the terms of the present basic agreement between playwrights and stage managers is certain to be made, she said. The dramatists, it is understood, will demand more than $500 option money on a play, and the managers are asking that they should not be required to keep a play running three weeks before they are entitled to share in the film rights.

The present basic agreement expires March 1, and the Dramatists' Guild is considering the situation arising from heavy stage backing by film money on Broadway, as a result of which, it is charged, the film companies beat down the prices paid for screen rights.

HERE'S COMPETITION WITH A NOVEL TWIST

William Goldman, onetime chief of the Warner forces and recently an independent exhibitor, is a partner with Warners in the new 69th street Terminal Theatre in that city, though he will operate it under his own name under a 10-year lease. In competition with the house are the 69th St. Theatree across the street, which is a Warner house, and the Tower, within a stone's throw, which was sold recently by the Friehofer-Nirdlinger estates to a new corporation. It's reported that the Tower may eventually join the the Warner circuit. In other words, the new Goldman-Warner spot may have strong competition from two other large Warner houses.

At the same time Mr. Goldman is in strong competition with Warners in the Germantown neighborhood, where his Bandbox Theatre is surrounded by three Warner houses definitely restricting Mr. Goldman's first-run product.

Naked Truth Dinner Set for March 14th

The Naked Truth Dinner of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers will be held on March 14th at the Astor hotel, Gordon S. White, AMPA president, told the association at the weekly meeting last Thursday.

Dr. Sigmund Spaeth, introduced as the "G-Man of Rhythm," demonstrated the close similarity of the music of "Music Goes Round and Round" to certain chords of Liszt's Second Hungarian Rhapsody.

Dr. Spaeth predicted that music eventually will be made a logical part of motion pictures through development of story-telling methods.

APPEALS COURT UPHOLDS DOUBLES IN DECISION ON PERELMAN CASE

Contract Clause Binding Exhibitors Not to Show Dual Features Violates Anti-Trust Act, Philadelphia Judges Decide

The right of an independent exhibitor to show two pictures on a single program without contractual interference from the large distributors was upheld for the second time within a year by a decision of the United States circuit court of appeals in Philadelphia late last week in the socalled Perelman case.

Sustaining the findings of the lower court, the three appellate judges agreed that the clause in the license agreement binding exhibitors not to dual feature was in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

In the national spotlight for 18 months as a test of the practice, the case had been contested vigorously by the principal distributors, and equally as strongly supported by independent producers and distributors. The fundamental issues were regarded as clear-cut.

Distributors Sought Reversal

The major distributors had pinned their hopes on a reversal of the original decision given by Judge George A. Welsh in the federal district court, Philadelphia, Jan. 31, 1935, to kill off duals nationally, with a resultant increase in rental revenue. Had the defendants' appeal been successful, in all probability it would have led to a general ban on double featuring through specific clauses in contracts. Columbia, Universal and Republic, however, were not expected to adopt the restriction.

While independent producers and distributors were jubilant, attorneys for the major companies went into a huddle on Tuesday at the office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America in New York to start plans for an appeal to the United States supreme court.

Call Ruling Indecisive

In the industry's sector adversely affected by the decision, there was a general disposition to call it inconclusive, and to say it denied the right of the distributors to qualify an exhibition contract by agreement.

A more decisive case, it was held, would be the Gateway theatre dual feature action originating in Minneapolis and now pending in the supreme court which alleged restraint of trade, but also involved the question of copyright ownership by the distributors. It also was suggested that the distributors' cause in the Philadelphia case suffered from inadequate presentation.

Held Restraint of Trade

The court of appeals ruled the restrictive clause as amounting to restraint of trade on both exhibitors and independent producers. The decision applied specifically to Fox, Vitagraph, RKO, Paramount Pictures, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and United Artists.

While named defendants in the suit filed May 28, 1934, by Harry and Louis Perelman, Philadelphia independent exhibitors, the appellate court decree does not apply to Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., First National Pictures, Inc., and Paramount Publix Corporation, the decision declaring them outside the court's jurisdiction.

The decision, written by Judge Joseph Buffington and concurred in by Judges J. Warren Davis and J. Whitaker Thompson, said the evidence submitted in the lower court was conclusive that the defendants were in conspiracy to violate the Sherman law but there was a question as to the sufficiency of evidence to support the charge of violation of the Clayton act.

Since the case began, Fox, United Artists and RKO have reversed their stand on double billing in Philadelphia, while only Warners, Paramount and MGM have maintained the ban. Columbia and Universal were not parties to the restrictions.

Regarding the asserted conspiracy to restrain trade, Judge Buffington's opinion said: "The effect of the double feature clauses naturally results in strengthening the position of the defendants and weakening that of the independent competitor."

The opinion also said: "The defendants are connected with the strongest interests of the industry. They distribute more than half the annual product in which the artists who command the largest audiences are displayed. While they compete among themselves they have a common interest in confronting minor or independent producers who lack the resources to manufacture exhibitions on their scale. The independent theatres require their productions in order to continue in business. But to improve business and permit them in some fashion other than offering lower prices of admission, to carry on in the face of de luxe theatres, they must exhibit double features. The independent theatres generally purchase the second full length film from the independent producer but they are prohibited from exhibiting double features, as in the case of the plaintiffs, by their contracts with major producers. Thus they purchase less film from independent producers.

"With such a situation existing in the industry one might be logically struck with the idea that it is more than mere coincidence that the defendants, who represent the large majority of major producers, are in unanimity in prohibiting double features in contracts. The fact this unanimity of purpose is not carried out formally in the same language does not destroy the inference."

Continuing, Judge Buffington declared that "double feature clauses undoubtedly reduce the production of full-length motion pictures. . . . If they (the plaintiffs) exhibit features of one of defendants they must agree not to display at the same time a feature of another producer. This naturally prevents exhibitors from purchasing films from producers in competition with the defendants and destroys the opportunity of these independent producers to produce and sell more films."

The defendants had disclaimed any intention of violating the law or driving competitors out of business, alleging their action was in the best interests of the industry and the public.

Answering this contention, Judge Buffington observed, "The condition in the industry leads to the conclusion that the inclusion of provisions in the contracts between the defendants and independent exhibitors seriously affects exhibitors and smaller companies. This tends to reduce production and stifle competition."

Exhibitor Opinion Divided

Philadelphia reaction to the decision was mixed. Independent exhibitor opinion was divided, some pointing out that the path was now clear for the Stanley-Warner theatres to adopt dual features, and in that event the competition would overshadow any possible benefits.

Independent exchange men were jubilant, expecting many independent exhibitors to begin double featuring as soon as legally possible, although most of the product was contracted for on a single feature basis. Premium and giveaway distributors foresaw an increase in dualling cutting into their business, which has been heavy in the Philadelphia territory.

The case was a test sponsored by a group of Philadelphia independents headed by the Perelmans. Starting more or less inconspicuously in the summer of 1934 to determine the validity of the anti-dual contract clause in large distributors' 1934-35 feature license agreements, it assumed national significance when leaders in distribution and exhibition and spokesmen for women's organizations took the stand for or against the practice as it relates to the industry and social welfare.

The Perelmans, on behalf of other independents, said that without double features they were unable to meet the stage show and other competition of the defendants' large theatres. The lower court held that duals actually came about as the result of this competition, and that the practice "has grown enormously." The court's decision found conspiracy, restraint of trade, tendency to create monopoly and violation of the Sherman anti-trust and Clayton acts.

22-MILE PICTURE FOR WILD LIFE MEETING

Twenty-two miles of motion pictures will be shown at the North American Wild Life Conference in Washington February 3d to 7th. The 240-reel production traces all phases of wild life on this continent and will run continuously from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. at the conference headquarters. The feature will be catalogued so that delegates may pick out the parts of the production that they wish to see.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

UNITED ARTISTS' 17th birthday came last Sunday. Doug, Mary and Charles Spencer Chaplin reminisced, both happily and unhappily, for they were together at the birth, the scene and setting for which was the rose-bowered veranda of a California bungalow. William G. McAdoo, son-in-law of President Wilson, also former secretary of the Treasury, and then director general of the railroads, was there, too, taking his ease and recuperating from the travail of government service under the stress of the World War, from which service Mr. McAdoo had resigned on December 12th, 1918.

About January 7th, when Director General McAdoo's private railroad car arrived in the yards of Los Angeles, there was a band serenade under the auspices of Douglas Fairbanks, and a conclave of picture personages of high degree.

Here the tale flashes back to an incident of the Liberty Loan days of a few months previous when Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin and D. W. Griffith, among the many who participated in Liberty Loan fund raising, sat around Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo's desk in the United States Treasury Building at Washington. "Why don't you folks get together and distribute your own pictures?" Oscar Price had suggested to the four stars. Mr. Price was first the press agent of Mr. McAdoo's administration in the Treasury, and later his assistant in administration of the Government's railroad affairs. The idea behind that chance remark was now about to bear fruit. It was a notion that had been stirring into life in many minds.

Returning to the California bungalow of Mr. McAdoo, up at Santa Barbara, we find the old friends of the Liberty Loan campaign talking it over. It was quite a gathering. Doug, Mary, Charlie and "D. W." were there. There were several such conferences. The stars now definitely proposed that Mr. McAdoo should head an organization which would market their film wares. Both Mr. McAdoo's record and his fame, begilded with high office in Washington and his status as son-in-law of President Wilson, made him an especially desired associate. Mr. McAdoo declined.

"But, if you will get Oscar Price, I will help you organize and be your counsel." Mr. McAdoo suggested.

And so it was arranged at a meeting held at Mr. Fairbanks' home in Beverly Hills on January 19th, 1919.

Up to that time, inventors of motion pictures, cameramen, clothing store merchants, film exchangemen, furriers, penny arcade operators and theatre owners, had variously taken a fling at motion picture production and distribution control. Now Doug, Mary, Charlie and D. W. Griffith thought it was the actors' turn.

The classic comment of the occasion came from Richard Rowland, then head of Metro Pictures Corporation, who, after meditating for almost a full second on the significance of the new move, observed, "The lunatics have taken charge of the asylum."

Of humorous interest to the stage and motion picture theatre, both facing the competition of government-subsidized WPA drama projects, is today's boon-doggle, as reported by the New York Sun:

The ability of WPA corporals and sergeants on some of New York's fanciest boon-doggling projects to originate fresh time-wasting jobs for those who toil or loaf in the WPA ranks has been a constant source of wonder, and now comes an assignment at the New York craft school project, which, even when listed among the boon-doggles, should receive some sort of reward.

They had on hand at the craft school recently a quantity of muslin for use in making puppets for their puppet shows. Having time on their hands, the project supervisor hit on a happy idea, amounting almost to an inspiration. He assigned one of the workers to count the threads in a square inch of muslin. By so doing, he explained, the government will be able to tell what quality of muslin it is receiving and thereby, we assume, be guided accordingly in the next depression.

"Do you think my works will be played a hundred years from now?" Gershwin asked a friend anxiously, as he tickled the piano ivories with his tuneful "Porgy and Bess."

"If you live," the friend assured him.

OUR VOTE for the all-time classic newspaper interview with a disillusioned screen aspirant goes to Joseph Mitchell's account for the Scripps-Howard papers of the brilliant remarks of Barbara Blair, noted by Mr. Mitchell on Miss Blair's return to New York from Hollywood. Evidently Miss Blair went back to Broadway unlike any of her predecessors—she was sadder, but no wiser. Reported Mr. Mitchell:

"Barbara Blair was not polite to Hollywood. She thought the majority of picture executives were dopes, and told them so. She insulted producers, and they kept her on the payroll, paying her $1,500 a week. She was in Hollywood for more than a year, and didn't make a single picture, because they wanted her to be a second Mae West, a second Joan Blondell, a second Glenda Farrell, and she told them she did not plan to be a second anything.

"'The first thing I thought was crazy in Hollywood was the test they gave me, the screen test,' she said. 'They gave me this script to read, and it was an insult to my intelligence. I told them even for a test this stuff was lousy. I said, "Who wrote this? Do you people pay people to write this stuff?" So they told me to write my own, and I wrote something.

"'I said how silly it was, all you people standing around and watching me take a test as if the whole world depended on it, and nobody gives a damn anyway.

"'Then they began to build me up. The build-up they gave me you would've thought people all over the United States were waiting to tear down the marquees to see me.

"'I was under contract with Warner Brothers, and I went to them and asked for my release, and they gave it to me. Then I went to Fox. It was the same story all over again. So I quit Fox. Then Paramount wanted me to sign a seven-year contract, but I told them I didn't want to get married; I wanted to act. I told them the fact was I didn't want to go in pictures unless I could do it my way. So I didn't do anything for Paramount.'

"Miss Blair said another thing she didn't like about Hollywood was that the executives thought young actresses should treat them with great respect.

"'They wanted actresses to say, "Oh, you wonderful Mr. So and So," and I don't go in for that stuff,' she said. 'Once I went into an executive's office, and he sat at his desk, surveying me. So I said, "What's the matter with you; are you a cripple? Why don't you stand up when a lady walks into the room?" I thought he'd break a blood vessel. Well, he stood up, but he would've been better off if he had kept his seat. He wasn't a damned bit bigger when he stood up!"

"So," concluded Mr. Mitchell, "Miss Blair stayed in Hollywood a year and one-half without making a picture. Now she is back in New York."

P. S.: Miss Blair, whose claim to fame appears to be a turn or two on radio and stage and an Atlantic City beauty contest diploma, won eight years ago, had her skull fractured twice, Mr. Mitchell reported.

GOVERNMENT CLOSING THIS WEEK IN ST. LOUIS ANTI-TRUST TRIAL

Wehrenberg Recounts Vain Efforts to Get Product; Describes "Price War" Following Reopening of Theatre

With about 25 witnesses having been heard by midweek in the Government's equity case in St. Louis against Warner, Paramount and RKO, seeking to prevent a continuance of the alleged conspiracy to deprive Fanchon and Marco theatres there of product, there were indications that the Government was nearing the end of its presentation, in the third week of trial. The defense immediately planned to move for dismissal.

While the St. Louis trial was nearing its climax, distributors were viewing their positions in anti-trust suits elsewhere. In Atlanta, Mrs. B. Smith, Joy theatre, Rockmart, Ga., filed action in federal court against Oscar Lam, circuit operator of Rome, Ga., and MGM, Paramount, Republic, RKO, Twentieth Century-Fox, United Artists and Warners, demanding $53,500 for alleged violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, on the grounds that they conspired to withhold pictures from her in favor of Mr. Lam's new Georgia theatre. Defendants were given until May 18th to file answers.

Large distributors, charged with an anti-trust conspiracy in a civil suit brought by Mrs. Loretta Momand, exhibitor of Shawnee, Okla., denied the complaint in federal court at Oklahoma City. Mrs. Momand asked a federal injunction prohibiting the companies from discriminating against her Odeon theatre at Shawnee, in favor of the competition.

Say Momand Violated Contracts

Admitting that they had cancelled Mrs. Momand's contracts for film, attorneys for the distributors contend that they did so because the manager, A. B. Momand, had violated the contracts.

Judge Munger in Lincoln, Neb., federal court, overruled the demurrers of the defendants, Lincoln Theatre Corporation, J. H. Cooper and R. L. Livingston, in the $1,797,000 suits of independents and State Theatres, Inc., against the three aforementioned exhibitor defendants and large distributors.

Charges of conspiracy in restraint of trade, brought against large distributors by Atanasoff Brothers, of the World theatre, Milwaukee, were dismissed in that city by Judge F. A. Geiger in federal court when the complainants failed to amend the complaints to which a demurrer had been entered by the defendants.

That the Government this week would complete its presentation in the equity action underway before Judge Joseph West Molyneaux in the federal district court in St. Louis was indicated Wednesday.

Harry C. Arthur, Fanchon and Marco executive and the Government's key witness, was scheduled to go on the stand. Another definite witness was Cresson E. Smith, RKO Radio sales executive, who was to be questioned about a memorandum on the St. Louis product situation.

Government counsel failed in efforts to introduce through Jack Partington, F and M vice-president, who was not present, a conversation alleged to have been held between Mr. Arthur and Maurice D. Kann, editor of MOTION PICTURE DAILY, on March 6, 1934, in New York.

Fred Wehrenberg, St. Louis circuit owner and president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, on Tuesday recounted his unsuccessful efforts in December, 1934, to obtain subsequent-run rights for Paramount and RKO product for the New Grand Central theatre. He testified Harry Koplar and Mr. Arthur, had offered him a half interest in the house or the lease if he could obtain the needed product.

Describes "Price War"

A description of the "price war" that followed the reopening of the St. Louis theatre by F and M in November, 1933, was drawn from Mr. Wehrenberg in cross-examination by Frederick H. Wood, of Warner counsel.

Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers, appeared in the courtroom Tuesday and was permitted to remain over the protest of Government attorneys. Most witnesses have been excluded from the room until they testify.

Considerable time was taken up last Wednesday with a minute discussion through the testimony of various witnesses of the respective merits of the Warner Bros. proposals for reorganization of the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central properties and the Bondholders Protective Committee's plan, including the leases to Allen L. Snyder and his aids, which was finally put into effect.

Joseph Grand, local counsel for the Bondholders' Committees, told of what transpired at a meeting held in the offices of Thomas N. Dysart, chairman of the Committees, on June 6, 1934.

David Levinson, general counsel for the Committees, gave best recollection as to what was said by the various persons who attended the April 6 and June 6, 1934, meetings.

Jacob Chasnoff, attorney for the General Mortgage Bondholders Committee, differed with Mr. Levinson and quoted Mr. Starr as saying at the April 6th meeting: "We haven't anything against Fanchon & Marco. They are nice people. But neither they nor anybody else will be permitted to operate those theatres."

Memory Jogged by Hardy

The cross-examination of Mr. Chasnoff by Frederick H. Wood, Warner counsel, revealed that Mr. Chasnoff was attorney for Aaron-Waldheim and Julius Glaser, who had signed a $10,000 guarantee that Famous Amusement Company would live up to its contract for RKO pictures in 1933-34, in a controversy with RKO.

Jack Allen Partington, president of Fanchon & Marco, monopolized the witness stand Thursday.

Mr. Partington, in his direct examination by Mr. Hardy, left out some very material bits of testimony as to what was said at that important conference with Mr. Starr, Abel Cary Thomas, Warner secretary and general counsel, and Gradwell Sears, Western and Southern sales manager for Warners at the Warner offices in New York City on March 6, 1934, and Mr. Hardy had to jog his memory. This fact was taken advantage of by Mr. Wood during his cross-examination in the afternoon.

In his direct testimony Mr. Partington failed to mention the name of Harry Koplar, an associate of Fanchon & Marco in the management of the St. Louis, Fox, Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres, but in response to a question by Mr. Wood recalled that Mr. Thomas had said that Mr. Koplar "had cost them $80,000 in St. Louis and they intended to get him too."

Conspiracy to Withhold Films Charged in Georgia; Distributors Deny Complaint in Suit Brought by Oklahoman

Mr. Wood asked Mr. Partington whether in the presence of Harry C. Arthur, Jr., he had discussed what had happened at the March 6th meeting with Mr. Hardy, any of Hardy's associates, John S. Leahy, local attorney, or Ernest L. Wilkinson of Washington, counsel for Fanchon & Marco. Mr. Partington admitted that such discussions may have taken place.

One question that brought strong resentment from Mr. Hardy was as to whether Hardy had suggested to Partington that no mention be made of Mr. Koplar in his testimony. Mr. Partington denied that such advice had been given by Hardy.

Koplar Again Mentioned

Marco Wolff, executive vice-president of Fanchon & Marco, was placed on the witness stand Friday by the Government and told of conversations with Adolph Zukor, Mr. Schaefer, and Neil Agnew, Paramount sales executive.

Former Senator James A. Reed dug deep into Fanchon & Marco's theatrical operations in St. Louis and their business associations here with Mr. Koplar.

In response to one question by Mr. Reed he revealed that Mr. Koplar first approached Mr. Arthur concerning the possibility of Fanchon & Marco becoming interested with Koplar in a bid for a lease on the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres.

Early in his cross-examination Mr. Wolff admitted that Harry Arthur was in St. Louis during the grand jury investigation into the alleged restraint of trade conspiracy and telephoned him long distance to Los Angeles the day that the indictment was voted.

Tilt with Hardy

The defense encountered opposition from Mr. Hardy when it endeavored to get into the record the leases for the various theatres, including the St. Louis and Fox.

On Monday, Fanchon Simon, the Fanchon member of the firm of Fanchon & Marco, was permitted to take the stand long enough to tell her most interesting life's history, a struggle from poverty to riches. But when the government attempted to get in further testimony from her concerning the conversation with Adolph Zukor at the Paramount studios the late Summer of 1934, Judge Molyneaux sustained a defense objection.

Louis Phillips, counsel for Paramount, in cross-examining Mr. Wolff, sought to ascertain when he first discussed the case with members of the Department of Justice staff, Harry Arthur and various attorneys for the complainants. He said that he must have discussed the case with Mr. Arthur before the criminal case last November, but couldn't fix the exact time.

Harry Koplar made his personal appearance in court Monday morning when he personally produced certain records of Famous Amusement Company sought by defense counsel.

Strike Me Pink

(United Artists-Goldwyn)

Comedy

There are lots of thinges to amuse and sell in this picture. Distinctly a comedy, the original story upon which it is based has been so radically altered that only in the vaguest outline is recognizable. Production technique, highly modernized in its conception of spectacular solo and chorus dance and song numbers, does not hesitate to fall back on the theories of the Harold Lloyd "Safety Last" idea for laughable thrill and that of the Mack Sennett Keystone Cop school for buffoonery. Sequences majoring in these precepts had the preview audience in an uproar of merriment. At the same time, there are instances in dialogue and action, particularly a torrid feature dance number and one trick chorus sequence, that may require delicate handling in spots.

The yarn opens on a college campus where spineless Eddie Pink, student body handy man, gets quite a belting from the more playful scholars. Subscribing to a mail order character building course, the mouse becomes a man; so much so that he succeeds in getting Butch graduated after three years as a senior. Mother Carson rewards him for this miraculous accomplishment by making him manager of her amusement park.

Racketeers, headed by Vance, with Thrust as the tough guy, want to put slot machines in the park. Ma wants to conduct the spot on a high standard, and Eddie, derided into a semblance of virility by secretary Claribel, thumbs down their proposition. These sequences feature some high comedy as Eddie comes face to face with mobster Killer, who has studied the same character course, and the Pitchman. To bend Eddie to their will, racketeer Vance's gang frame him into a fake murder involving torch singer Joyce, whom he has long adored from afar. To save the girl from going to jail, Eddie consents to installation of slot machines, which, as demonstrated to him, always pay off big odds.

But when Ma puts her foot down, the real fun begins. Attempting to escape Vance's vengeance, there are hectically wild sequences up and down a roller coaster and in a captive balloon, with the keystone cop-clad racketeers pursuing Eddie and his bodyguard, Parkyakarkus. The finale concerns the frustration of the racketeers, with Parkyakarkus, who has been watching Eddie like a hawk, promising to watch him and Claribel like a stork.

The mildly tempoed speed of the first half of the picture is more than equalized by the dizzy pace it takes in the concluding phases. Outstanding among the amusing elements are the ghostly poker game in which Eddie indulges with Chorley; the Negro spiritual chorus to Joyce's "High and Low" solo; the superheated dance number by Rita, Miss Merman's "Shake It Off" song dance with chorus, and Sunnie's mirror tap specialty. The picture is elaborately mounted and the Goldwyn girls are strikingly costumed.

Previewed in Pantages Theatre on Hollywood Boulevard. While finding occasional bits in the first part of picture to whet their interest, the audience, which seemed to be waiting for something special to happen, apparently was more than satisfied with what did take place in the second half of the show.

Navy Wife

(20th Century-Fox)

Drama

Based on the Kathleen Norris novel, "Beauty's Daughter," and one of the cycle of pictures treating of the military service departments, the production concerns the surgeons and nurses of the Navy and abounds in entertainment values. The motivating story revolves around a nurse, brought up in the Navy, and a young surgeon, a widower with a crippled child. The surgeon, an officer in the medical department of the Navy, offers marriage to the nurse but she refuses, knowing that the officer does not love her, that the memory of his late wife transcends all other love and that his marriage offer to her, the nurse, is a means towards making a home for his crippled daughter. The nurse eventually is married to the officer, but is unhappy in a situation wherein she loves the officer but finds her affection is not reciprocated.

Localed in Navy stations of the west coast and Honolulu, the picture succeeds in capturing an authentic background for the story. The title derives its source from the theory that an officer owes his loyalty first to the Navy, then his wife. This philosophy is illustrated in the picture when the officer is commissioned to find out if a certain woman frequenting the Honolulu station is a spy, much to the distress of the officer's wife, who knows nothing of the motive behind his apparent infatuation.

Comedy plays an important part in the picture. Its chief exponent is Warren Hymer, known for his portrayal of dumb but likeable characters. The highlight of the comedy sequences concerns the motorcycling-conscious sailors who, when obtaining shore leave, rush pell mell to hire motorcycles, and the resultant carnage caused by the over-zealous efforts to out-maneuver one another. Claire Trevor plays the nurse and Ralph Bellamy the officer. Others in the cast are Jane Darwell, Ben Lyon and Kathleen Burke.

In the story Claire Trevor is skeptical of marriage because of the failure of her parent's marriage. When Ralph Bellamy is transferred to the Navy hospital, where she is assigned, Miss Trevor falls in love with him. He asks her to marry him but she refuses. Miss Trevor is transferred to Honolulu and Bellamy meets her again when he, too, is sent there. He proposes again. This time Miss Trevor accepts. Bellamy explains that while he doesn't love her in the way he loved his former wife, he does respect her. Miss Trevor hopes that in time Bellamy will learn to love her. Bellamy, content in the situation as it is, shows but cursory affection towards Miss Trevor. She, hoping her absence will change the situation, takes Bellamy's crippled daughter to California for treatment.

Returning, she finds Bellamy involved with another woman. Despondent, Miss Trevor questions Bellamy and his silence confirms her fears. The situation clears when Bellamy is shot by the other woman for stealing certain papers proving her identity with a spy ring. Bellamy finds that he really loves Miss Trevor.

Emphasis on the marriage angle to entice women patrons and tieups with Navy recruiting stations, where possible, to interest the men, are indicated for the selling campaign.—Mooney, New York.

Comedy Drama

Here is one of those shows that provides a good story, intelligently acted, directed and produced, yet one handicapped at first glance by lack of sock cast names.

It is spun of elements which in their fundamental human interest quality possess power to stir the most sympathetic emotions. Presented in an atmosphere that reflects sincere appreciation of subject matter worth and likewise in a manner recognizing that absence of strong cast names might prove a showmanship obstacle, the various elements are welded so that the whole picture would prove the source of interest to both audiences and exhibitors. The drama is real drama, void of any theatrical semblance. The comedy is homey and human humor. Romantic love interest is legitimately appealing in character.

Based on a novel by Kate Douglas Wiggin, naturally rural localed, the picture heroizes two children. Yet essentially it is not a kid picture. Telling a story of childhood heartbreak and triumph, it runs a gamut of values in action, dialogue and situation, together with class of performances, just as interesting to grownups as to youngsters.

The time is the late nineties. Under the charge of Dr. Cudd and his wife, Flossie, the lot of orphans Timothy and Gay is far from happy. Placed under the guardianship of manhating Vilda Cummins, who considers all children except her niece, Samantha, as necessary evils, life for the kids doesn't seem to promise much improvement. The condoning of the impish tricks of Samantha, while they are held in strict discipline, is something they cannot fathom. Only in association with the young lovers, Martha and David, do the orphans find any happiness.

But how they soften Vilda's heart, how they make successful the love affair of David and Martha which Vilda rigidly opposed, and how they contrived to put Samantha in her proper place are entertainment treats. They provide entertainment for appreciation by family type audiences.

While there is quite a bit of pathos to the story, it is by no means grim. The function of comedy, love interest and eventual triumph automatically precludes that condition. It may be sold to patrons as substantial entertainment, as a show that probably will grip their imagination and attention more honestly than more extravagantly exploited features. In publicizing the show, with memories of "Mrs. Wiggs of Cabbage Patch" still comparatively fresh, the name of Kate Douglas Wiggin should receive more than the usual amount of attention accorded an author.

Brides Are Like That

(Warner)

Comedy

The ingredients utilized have often proved their entertainment and commercial value. Always it's homey, humorous domestic comedy plus romantic interest. Treating ordinary human beings, the story is told and acted in a thoroughly human and natural manner. Together they give it an atmosphere of believability. It is not pretentious in any way, but name values are better than average and production settings are adequate. The picture's worth to both showmen and audiences is where both want it—in the action and dialogue as they appear upon the screen.

In the yarn Bill McAllister is a personable young man. A sort of gentle drifter who can't see much sense in getting excited about anything, he's everybody's friend, but quite a pest to his uncle Schultz. Undependable as they make them, he's quite an attraction for Hazel. Yet she, a rather practical if romantic creature, gets herself engaged to Dr. Jenkins, who is the kind of young man all parents would like to have their sons be and just exactly the sort that no red blooded young fellow wants to be. One of the stunts Bill pulls that makes hilarious comedy is buying an engagement ring for Hazel and charging it to Schultz.

However, when Hazel turns him down, Bill goes hunting and comes back with another girl, Mary Ann. Hazel doesn't think much of this and neither does Mary Ann, when she discovers how embarrassing it is to Hazel. Anyway, Bill is slick enough to get Jenkins into a discussion of the problems of married life, which as overheard by Hazel results in her breaking off the engagement with the doctor. Then, succumbing to Bill's persuasive oratory she marries him. Father and mother Robinson are not so pleased with that, nor is Schultz, who still has to pay the bills. However, if Bill can be made to go to work, there seems to be a chance. Despising labor, Bill thinks up a new kind of apple packing crate, and after talking Schultz and his new in-laws into merging their apple growing businesses, he convinces them that they should give him a partnership as a reward for his wonderful idea.

Just plain amusement, the show moves to a lively pace in action, dialogue and situations. It's the kind of show that can be offered to family audiences with confidence.

Previewed at Warner's Hollywood Theatre. The paying preview audience, which had just seen "Captain Blood," was enthusiastic in expressing approval of "Brides Are Like That." The consensus of patron lobby comment was that the show should please any kind of theatre goer. —McCarthy, Hollywood.

Muss 'Em Up

Mystery Melodrama

Despite the fact that this feature provides several well-known cast names, the job of selling it to any degree of success undoubtedly will prove a tough proposition. It's a complicated mystery melodrama contrasted by comedy and romantic love interest. The way things have been complicated, the matter of keeping track of what's going on or what the story is all about and at the same time trying to form any logical anticipations as to the way the yarn is going to work out, serve more to tax the powers of observation than they do to entertain or amuse.

Essentially the show has to do with a kidnaping plot. Then developing into a semi-gangster atmosphere, it develops into a murder mystery drama which entails a whole series of killings, and after wandering around quite a bit, dealing with actions and words of personalities and incidents that are entirely foreign to any sustaining angles, comes back to its original premise.

Banker Harding summons private detective O'Neill to his home. On the way he sees a pair of gangsters and he notifies Inspector Brock. Harding informs O'Neill that his life has been threatened unless he pays a big ransom. A dog has been killed and the bullet proves to have come from one of Harding's gun collection and immediately all present in the house, Amy, a secretary, Glenray, Corinne, Leland and Nancy, become suspect. Then the story becomes ultra complicated. Corinne is kidnaped; a chauffeur is killed, and Harding gets a note telling him how to pay the money. O'Neill, Cable and Amy apprehend gangster Maratti, and the story takes an unanticipated twist. But what Maratti says in reference to members of the Harding melange gives O'Neill a tip. Confronting Harding, he ascertains the banker is broke and has dissipated Nancy's trust fund. Nevertheless, to a dramatic tune, Harding borrows money from Leland, which he and Harding leave for the kidnapers. Corinne is released, and, as Brock is questioning her, in comes another gangster, who tells a story that he thought Glenray was Harding. Then it is vaguely revealed that the whole thing was a frameup. O'Neill tells Brock that Harding and Corinne, who were in love, had conspired to steal Nancy's money; that they hoped to have Leland killed. Trying to make a getaway, Harding and Nancy presumably are killed and O'Neill and Amy decide to get married.

Previewed at Pantages Hollywood Theatre. The audience, evidently bewildered by the confusing manner in which the yarn was narrated, could not conceal its inability to understand what it was all about.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

I Conquer the Sea

(Academy-Halperin)

Dramatic Romance

A drama of love, heroism and sacrifice told against the thrill action background of whale hunting, "I Conquer The Sea" offers much to engage the attention of showmen and audiences. Its action background is made exciting and tight with suspense as it features two thrilling battles with monster whales, while the motivating dramatic story of two brothers in love with the same girl follows a theme that had no difficulty at all in creating and maintaining interest at high pitch.

The story treats of simple folk who follow a dangerous calling. Narrated in a simple, straightforward manner, with the quality of human interest always emphasizing dialogue and action, there is an atmosphere of realism and authenticity to the production that precludes anything savoring of theatrical artificiality. Adhering constantly to its dramatic premise, there is but meager comedy contrast, but following its tragic sacrifice anti-climax, the show concludes with a semi-spiritual sequence that would have made illogical any temptation to include comedy.

In the story, localed in Newfoundland, Rosita is in love with mighty harpooner Tommy. But when his brother, Leonard, the community doctor, works a miraculous cure on her brother, Rosita's affections change direction. Sequences graphically illustrating the life of the whaler folk precede a whale hunt in which Tommy loses an arm. The tragedy of his handicap becomes more vivid, when at their engagement party Rosita tells Tommy she cannot go through with marriage. Feeling that life is not worth living, Tommy learns to toss the harpoon with his left hand.

Another whale appears. The whalers go after it. Ensues a thrilling battle in which the mate of the harpooned monster comes to its aid. Aroused to fury, Tommy takes command, but the whales wreck the boat and Tommy, Leonard and other survivors are hurled upon wave swept rocks. As Leonard swims to shore for help, Tommy lives in retrospect his life and dreams of happiness with Rosita. Realizing that her love for his brother is greater, he deliberately cuts the ropes that have been holding him in safety and sinks into the sea.

The finale is a memorial service for Tommy at the little whaler church, where, as his mates sing his favorite song, he appears in spirit to sing with them and give his blessing to Rosita and Leonard.

While the title is of unusual worth as a potential interest stimulator, the name of Steffi Duna in the cast is about the only one that prospective patrons can quickly identify. Nevertheless, if the full quality of the story and its production values as they relate to authentic picturizations of the hazards encountered in whale hunting are adequately publicized, the show has values for those who like to see something a little out of the ordinary.

Previewed in Fox Wilshire Theatre, class neighborhood first-run house. Finding much to hold its interest, the audience reacted favorably, applauding the action of the whale hunt episodes on both occasions.

The Invisible Ray

(Universal)

Drama

This production is a typical Karloff-Lugosi shudder picture and therein lies its entertainment values. Karloff here is a famous scientist, albeit an erratic one, whose particular brain child is the discovery of Radium X, a substance a thousand times more powerful than radium. By advanced scientific methods Karloff believes he has determined the location of the substance, in Africa. Karloff discovers his Radium X, but the expedition is a sad one for him, for besides being poisoned by the substance he loses his wife to another man and receives minor credit for the discovery. Karloff goes berserk, killing three of the six expeditioners before the poison takes his life.

This type of horror melodramatic picture has a definite public and to them the exploitation campaign would best be directed. The locale is the Carpathian Mountains, Africa and Paris. With a background of raging storms, frightened African natives, the deadly powerful ray the Radium X produces when harnessed and the luminous appearance of Karloff at night resulting from his contact with it, the picture has adequate thrill producing scenes. Supporting Karloff and Bela Lugosi and supplying the love element are Frances Drake and Frank Lawton. Of interest is the fact that Karloff appears without the distorted makeup of his "Frankenstein" pictures.

In the story Dr. Janos Rukh (Karloff) invites a group of scientists to his mountain retreat to witness an experiment to prove the existence of a meteor in the earth that fell several centuries ago. Although considering Dr. Rukh in disfavor, the group asks him to join their expedition into Africa. Rukh leaves the party and searches for the fallen meteor. He finds it, but in extracting a sample of the substance he is poisoned, and this causes his body to become luminous at night. Mrs. Rukh, who has accompanied the expedition, attempts to join Rukh in his retreat, but he tells her to leave, for his mere touch will kill a human being.

Mrs. Rukh falls in love with Ronald Drake. The expedition returns to Paris without Rukh, but before leaving Dr. Benet (Lugosi) has concocted an antidote for Rukh which, taken twice a day, will prolong his life. In Paris Benet takes most of the credit for the discovery. Rukh returns with a plan of vengeance. He sets the stage by faking his death. He kills two who were on the expedition by touching them. Benet begins to see the light and sets a trap for Rukh. But Rukh kills Benet and is after Drake, who at the announced death of Rukh had married Mrs. Rukh. But, deprived of the antidote, Rukh's body starts to smoke and is rapidly consumed.—Mooney, New York.

King of the Damned

(Gaumont-British)

Spectacular Melodrama

The convict settlement has been exploited rather thoroughly as a background for melodrama, and in its general atmosphere and some of its detail "King of the Damned" has been anticipated. Unlike most other "Devil's Island" stories, however, it does represent an effort to present a problem that can be exploited, as well as a story, in the novel feature that revolting convicts govern the settlement better than the jailers they have dispossessed.

In sheer strength of incident and in scale of production the film has showman values. Outstanding are scenes in which the revolting convicts, paraded for the garrotting of one of their comrades, storm and capture the barrack square; grimly original also are the episodes in which the captured officers are made to welcome officers from a cruiser and to pretend that all is well, because the convict servants who wait at table have pistols at the ready.

Anna, daughter of the Commandant of the convict island of Santa Maria, and finance of his second in command, Capt. Ramon, flies to the island on hearing that her father is ill. She is attracted by Convict 83, who acts as orderly. An educated man, 83 is planning a revolt of the convicts, whose dissatisfaction is brought to a head by the action of Ramon, bribed by a concessionaire, in sending large contingents to a road-making squad in the jungle. Ramon, discovering 83 in conversation with Anna, orders him to the road gang.

A rising is plotted in the absence of a number of troops on a distant expedition, but breaks out prematurely and is suppressed. Mooche, drunken but faithful ally of 83, is condemned to the garrott for killing a traitor. Convict 83 is advised that he has received a pardon, but on the eve of the execution asks permission to parade with the others on the square.

As the steel necklet is about to close on Mooche's neck, the convicts break rank and rush upon their guards. A secretly assembled machine gun, fired from the hospital window, enables them to win the day. All the officers are made prisoners. With the assistance of Mooche, 83 proceeds to organize the island, to show that, under fair conditions, the convicts can do ten times what was accomplished by slave driving.

Anna secretly sends out a message which bring a cruiser to the island. When the officers land, they are welcomed as usual by Ramon and his colleagues, who have been coerced into a pretense that everything is normal by the fear that Anna will be killed if they speak. The disclosure by the cruiser captain that his ship's guns are trained on the barracks leads Ramon to tell the true position; the cruiser is signaled and begins to shell. Supported by Anna, 83 persuades the captain to promise a fair trial on the mainland to the mutineers.

There is very little light relief in "King of the Damned," and no love interest in the conventional sense. Its appeal, which is definitely to adults, rests almost entirely on the exceptional realism of its details and the strength of the revolt and execution scenes, reinforced by the fact, already indicated, that it can be sold to certain audiences as an indictment of the system of punitive settlements. The acting of Conrad Veidt and Helen Vinson is adequate, but the strong part is that of Noah Beery as the heroic blackguard, Mooche.—Allan, London.

The Alchemist's Hourglass

(Norton Company)

Good

An industrial short that is more of entertainment than advertising, this is a well worthwhile production. Set in medieval times, the story relates the progress of machinery from that period to the present day with the important functioning of abrasives. An alchemist, displaying to a Duke and his retinue some gems that he has created with chemicals, is interrupted by a disturbance outside his window. A street grinder, having ruined the sword of a noble, is being chastised severely. The alchemist takes the sword and sharpens it with a hone of his own make. The Duke, unconvinced by this display, is shown by the alchemist, through the medium of an hourglass, machinery in years to come and the use of abrasives in the gradual development. These scenes are the highlight of the short and are of an excellent pictorial and instructive nature. Until distribution facilities are arranged the short will be handled by the Norton Company of Worcester, Mass. It was produced and directed for that company by Leo Lipp.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Camera Cranks

(RKO Radio)

Monotonous

Comedy situations that lack humor and border on the monotonous make up this short. It all has to do with a screen test of a radio personality. The partner in the test is a young woman of dubious mental capacity who evidences a desire to display her talents before the camera. Fifty-nine takes are required due to the persistently innocuous manifestations of the young woman and her retinue of family and dog. The despairing director, camera crew and sound effects man suffer accordingly with each retake. In the cast are Joey Ray, Robert Graves.—Running time, 19 minutes.

THANKS A MILLION — 20th Century-Fox

Four of the seven productions winning a place among the Box Office Champions for December, 1934, were Champions of November. This is the first time since the inauguration of the Champions in 1931, that so many pictures have won such a ranking in two successive months. Of the four "repeaters," MGM's "Mutiny on the Bounty" retains for December the position at the top of the list that it held in the ratings of the November leaders.

(1) Mutiny on the Bounty: Associate producer, Albert Lewin. Directed by Frank Lloyd. Screen play by Talbot Jennings, Jules Furthman, Carey Wilson. From the book by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall. Musical score by Herbert Stothart. Recording director, Douglas Shearer. Art director, Cedric Gibbons. Associate, Arnold Gillespie. Marine director, James Havens. Photographed by Arthur Edeson. Film editor, Margaret Booth. INDUSTRY REJECTS U.S. BID FOR CODE TO END TRADE PRACTICE ILLS

Paine Says Committee Will Seek Import Rules Penalizing Foreign Producers for Restrictions on American Industry

Rejecting the Government's bid to participate in the Council for Industrial Progress, the newest move for self-regulation of industries, the motion picture industry indicated this week that the Council would have to worry along without it.

Thus were dashed the hopes of Major George L. Berry, President Roosevelt's coordinator for industrial cooperation, and John G. Paine, chairman of the Council's management group, that the industry could be induced to become an active unit.

Jenkins Declines Post

A place for the industry has been reserved on the committee of "internal and external competition affecting American standards," expected to play an important role in the Council's activities. Following a conference with Major Berry in Washington last week, Mr. Paine announced the appointment to the committee of Felix Jenkins, general counsel for Twentieth Century-Fox, as the representative of the motion picture industry.

Mr. Jenkins this week notified the coordinator that he could not serve, giving no reasons. Whether any other industry representative would be appointed was uncertain this week, pending further conferences planned by Mr. Paine.

However, Mr. Jenkins is the only industry figure who has evinced any interest. Generally, the large motion picture companies, considered in Washington as likely subscribers to the movement, have regarded the Council with cool aloofness from the start.

Some surprise was occasioned when Mr. Jenkins attended the Council's initial meeting in Washington January 6th. He explained this week that while he was continuing as a member of the group, he represented only his company as an observer and that he had no intention of being placed in a position of acting as spokesman for the entire industry. He said the committee appointment had not been tendered him but had been announced without his consent.

Mr. Paine, however, deems the motion picture industry to be represented in the Council, because of the interest shown by Twentieth Century-Fox, and pointed out that while industries as a whole are not enrolled, representative segments are.

Indirect Invitation Extended

Major Berry extended an indirect invitation to the industry to join his Council when in a statement he emphasized that Mr. Paine is a prominent film industry executive. The head of the management group is chairman of the board of the Music Publishers' Protective Association, and for many years has acted as agent and trustee of the music publishers in their dealings with motion picture producers and others. He formerly served as copyright attorney and in the legal department of Warners, and some years ago engaged in production in a small way.

While the film industry is indifferent, Mr. Paine said his section would concern itself with problems directly affecting motion pictures, both in America and abroad.

His group has been divided into seven committees, each with four industry representatives and four from labor. Generally, they will seek to formulate a program on the basis of which legislation for the solution of trade practice ills and labor problems will be introduced in this session of Congress.

The Council plans to study a large number of problems involved in the nation's economic life, said Mr. Paine, and it will aim to map a national industrial policy, along the lines of what has been termed "long range planning."

One of the problems impinging on motion pictures is that of "internal and external competition affecting American standards," Mr. Paine said. Headed by O. M. Porter, representing the pulp manufacturers, the committee handling this phase will attempt to draft import regulations penalizing foreign motion picture producers in retaliation for restrictions imposed on the American industry by those countries, he declared.

"We should not have a free and open market for any country which refuses to give our films unrestricted entry," he believed. "The obstacles have been particularly serious in Germany, France and England, with quotas, taxes and regulations of various sorts. We should make it equally difficult for them to do business in the United States."

Cites Bans on Films

Mr. Paine also felt commercial retaliation would be in order in such situations as when France succeeded in blocking the production by Paramount of "Paths of Glory" and Turkey's objections to the making of "The Forty Days of Musa Dagh," as well as Spain's recent drastic action to compel withdrawal of "The Devil Is a Woman" from world circulation.

Industry representatives handling foreign matters seriously doubt the wisdom of such a move, pointing out it would undoubtedly cause counter retaliations and intensify present drastic restrictions against American film companies.

Other committees will be appointed to investigate the following subjects: national industrial policy; labor relations, including the regulation of maximum working hours and minimum wages; child labor; fair trade practices; government competition with private enterprise; anti-trust laws and government aid of small industries.

Trust Law Factor

The phase in which organized industry spokesmen in New York showed most interest was that of the anti-trust laws. The Council plans to examine possibilities of modifying them to permit industries wider latitude. Film company attorneys have cited the existence of the laws as a major obstacle to concerted adoption of any plan of self-regulation, and for this reason alone, they feel, a revamping would be welcomed.

Another was that of Government competition with private business, as typified in the film shows at CCC camps and performances sponsored by state and municipal educational and other institutions, which are tax free, in opposition to taxpaying exhibitors.

The campaign initiated by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to bring about self-regulation through key city conciliation tribunals appears to have been stalemated by the industry's lack of enthusiasm and the uncertainty of early action by the organization's board of directors.

Felix Jenkins Declines to Represent Film Industry on Paine's Management of the Group of Major Berry's Council

The need for tribunals where trade factors could air their grievances without resorting to litigation was again pointed out this week as independent exhibitors in Kansas City prepared to bring action against Fox Midwest on charges of "unfair clearance and zoning." Members of the Independent Theatre Owners' Association there who had purchased protection were reported willing to relinquish it immediately, while the circuit still held out.

In Akron, the ITO is seeking to solve the independents' problems through a booking combine and a clearance schedule based on admissions. Action was speeded by reports four new houses were to be built there. The clearances proposed are: theatres charging 25 cents, 28 days after downtown first runs; 20 cents, 42 days; 15 cents, 56 days.

While the MPTOA's 20 regional affiliates have informally approved the proposal of Ed Kuykendall, its president, for a system of self-regulation, further developments in this direction depends on three major factors:

1. What Congress does with respect to reviving the NRA, and other legislative matters, and what occurs in the state legislatures this year.

2. The industry's own demonstration of willingness to adopt self-regulation.

3. The formulation of a definite, detailed plan.

Several proposals are being urged by pro-administration Congressmen for action this session, among them a Constitutional amendment proposed by Representative Costigan of Colorado. It would remedy the supreme court's NRA decision by giving Congress the power to regulate wages and conditions of employment regardless of state lines. The bill is in the House judiciary committee, with little likelihood of action.

In another direction, the Federal Trade Commission is making a last effort to revive a modified form of the NRA and plans to call an industrial conference in Washington. Industries are to be called singly, and motion pictures are on the list.

Unfair Practice Legislation

Legislation designed to increase the Federal Trade Commission's powers to halt unfair and deceptive trade practices is being sponsored by Chairman Rayburn of the House interstate commerce committee. A proposed bill would declare such practices unfair competition and give the circuit court of appeals power to restrain them pending final court decision.

At the same time, spokesmen for organized business have notified members of Congress that it would continue to oppose all measures having an NRA flavor.

M. B. Folson, treasurer of Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., is one of 18 new members appointed by Secretary Roper to his Business Advisory and Planning Council. They will serve through this year.

FIVE BIG BRITISH CIRCUITS RISING OUT OF REGROUPING OF THEATRES

Real Estate Basis of New Financing Found Significant of Stability of Projects; New Studios a Factor; Large Capitalization

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Bureau of the HERALD

Almost daily re-shufflings of alignments in the British theatre field, coupled with the entry of new and powerful financial groups, promise to create a circuit situation, early in 1936, representing a definite variation in the balance of booking power. Instead of two major circuits, there may soon be five. Possibilities of producer associations with various of the new theatre groups emphasize this prospect of important changes.

Recent expansion plans, not all of them official, may be summarized as follows:

Union Cinema Co., Ltd., controlled by Fred Bernhard, has entered into agreements with Arthur Segal, founder of the Astoria circuit now controlled by Paramount, and with Reed Theatres, Ltd., which are expected to bring the final total of the Union theatres to over 200. Little more than a year ago it was under fifty. The Segal additions will, it is said, be upwards of 40 socalled supers of over 2,000 capacity, in key cities.

An investor in Union is J. Arthur Rank, director of British National Films and of the C. M. Woolf company, General Films Distributors, and a tie between the Union circuit and the eight important British producing companies represented by G. F. D. looks probable. The likelihood of a big joint public flotation is being generally canvassed.

County Cinemas, Ltd., under the control of C. J. Donada, is another group which seems likely to be over 100 strong quite soon. The County theatres are new buildings of large capacity. A flotation for $17,500,000 recently was indicated, and it was believed that a tie with London Films (financed by Prudential Insurance Company) would be revealed. The present belief is that County will get what money it wants without going to the public.

Odeon Expansion Details

The Oscar Deutsch Odeon group was associated, with County, in Joseph Schenck's plan for an arrangement in which United Artists was to have provided the producing end. The UA-County-Odeon deal fell through, but the Odeon circuit, also composed mostly of new theatres of good capacity, has grown steadily and the goal of 200 theatres is not impossible. Odeon, in which United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., purchased an interest some time ago, has a capital value said to total $50,000,000. The plan, it is understood, calls for simultaneous release with London throughout the circuit, instead of six months after London showings, as is now the case. Maurice Silverstone, managing director for United Artists here, may be named to the board of Odeon.

The John Maxwell company, Associated British Pictures, is on the eve of issuing $5,000,000 further capital in the form of 5 per cent first mortage debentures for the purpose of "financing additional properties." ABP, already second only to G-B in number of theatres, grew steadily throughout 1935 and may well become a 300 to 400 circuit. The new issue will bring its capital up to the full authorized amount of $17,500,000.

Some interesting financial groupings underly the facts just stated.

The Union-Segal-Reed interests, possibly associated with Woolf-General, will have behind them the millions of J. A. Rank and of Lady Yule; both of these are also interested in the Pinewood studios being erected by the Boot building interests at Iver, and Rank and Boot are investors in the Technicolor British plant at nearby Denham.

If the County-United Artists-London Film combination fructified, it will probably be with the aid of Prudential resources.

Odeon, in or out of a County-UA tie, is an inviting associate for any production company, due to big financial resources, usually identified with the Halifax Building Society.

There is a very important territorial aspect to most of these deals. In a real estate sense, a large slice of the near-London county of Buckinghamshire will be absorbed by insurance, building society and estate development interests which also possess film holdings. Just how much land the Prudential has acquired in the Denham neighborhood cannot be stated, nor does anyone know the exact acreage owned by the Boot interests in the adjacent Iver area, but it seems reasonable to assume that, merely by exploiting the increased estate values which the new studios will create in residential Buckinghamshire, these interests will be assured of a handsome return on investments in land made at near-agricultural rates. Their incidental film investment is obviously less of a speculation than it might seem. That the same or similar interests should be attracted by theatre investments, also with a sound real estate backing, is not surprising. The primary finance of the new circuits, as of the new production enterprises, is obviously well secured on values which do not depend to any extent on film fluctuations.

Lord Tyrrell Honored

Lord Tyrrell of Avon, new president of the British Board of Film Censors, will be visited on January 28th by a deputation from the Public Morality Council, which is to convey congratulations on his appointment. It will be led by Dr. Winnington Ingram, Bishop of London, and will be representative of all the churches and of numerous welfare bodies which concern themselves with film entertainment. It is significant of the standing of the BBFC that the deputation will formally assure the new president of its support for a continued policy of trade regulation on the principles laid down by the late E. E. Shortt, K. C., at the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association Summer Conference at Cardiff last year.

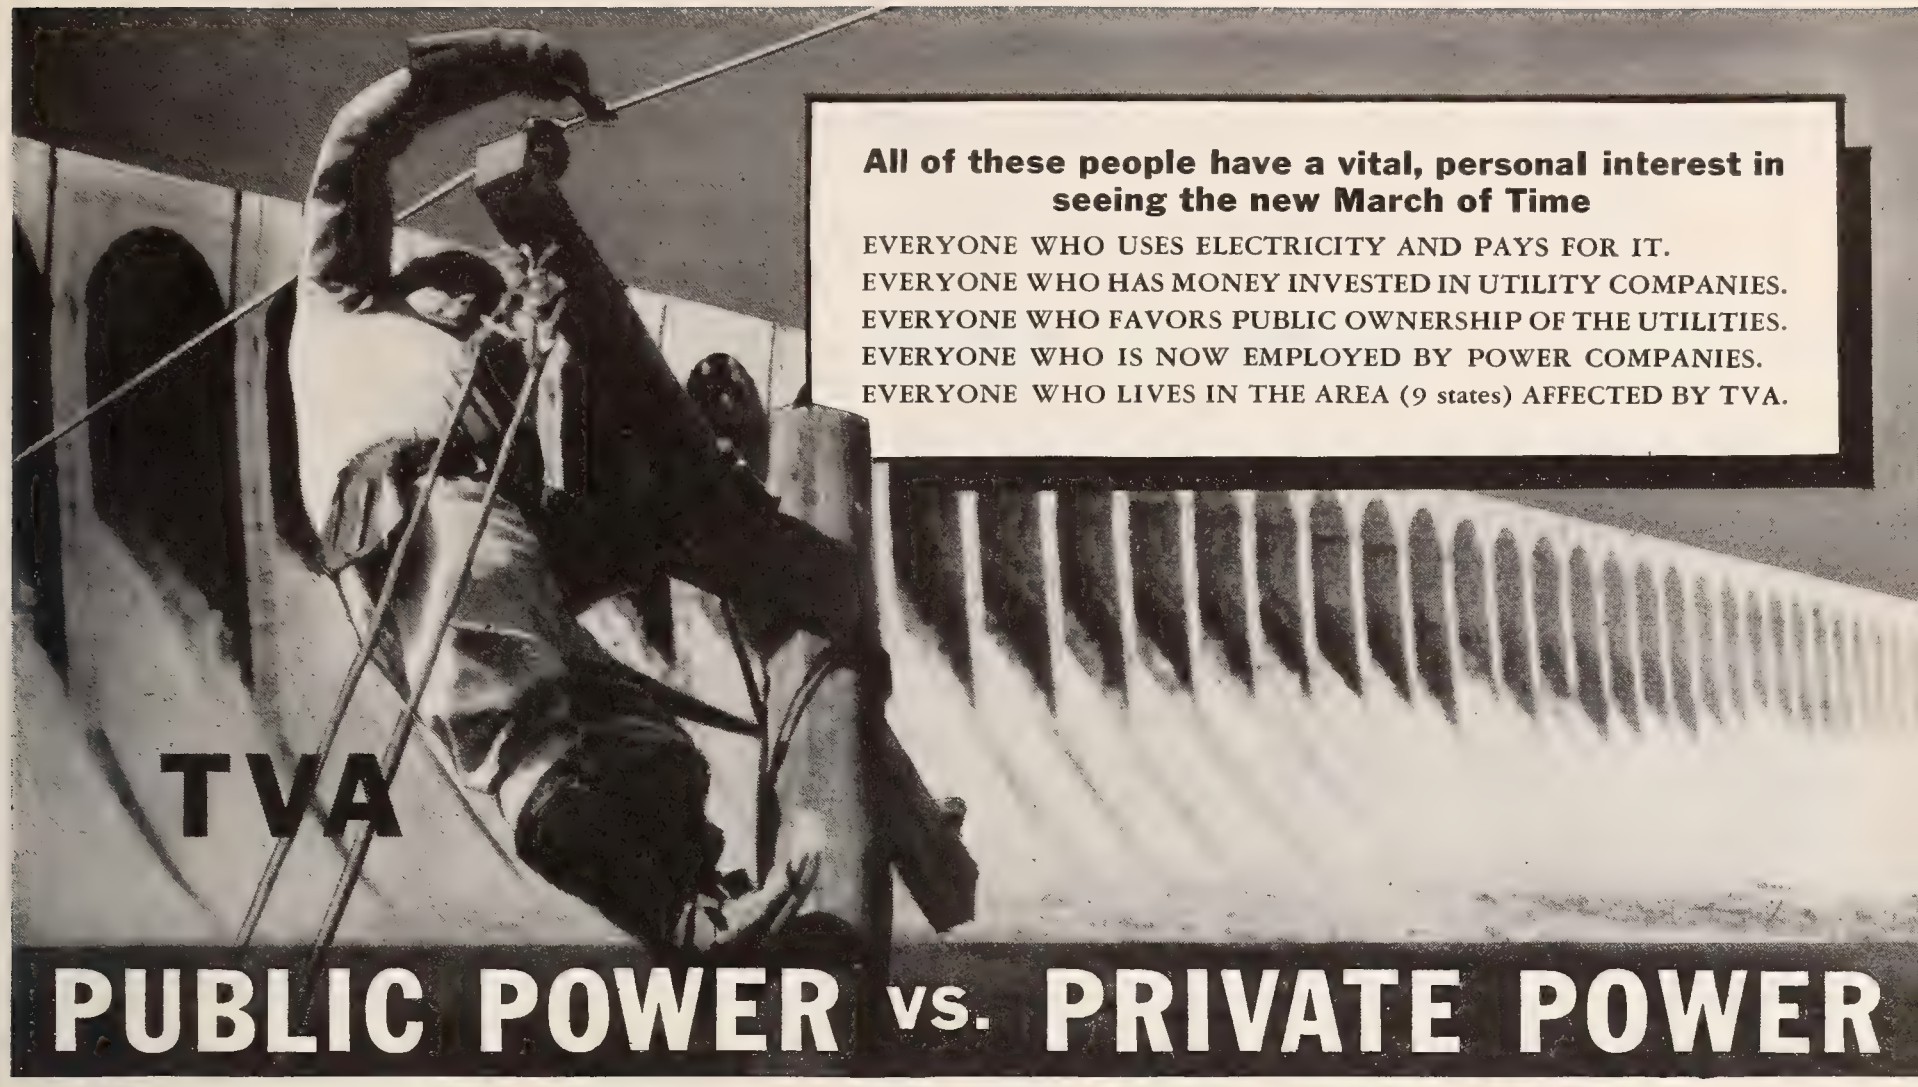
Censorship Blamed

Commenting on a loss on last year's trading of £37,031 ($185,000), compared with a previous year's profit of £80,000, E. Ronald Cramond, chairman of British & Dominions Film Corporation, at the annual meeting in London said that there had been a big falling off in receipts and that this "was especially marked in the United States, where among other things alterations demanded by the American censorship authorities destroyed the effectiveness of certain of the company's films."

The annual report disclosed a surplus on revenue account of £41,096, but against this there was a depreciation item of £78,127, of which £58,836 represented the deficit on film receipts as compared with estimates.

Charles M. Woolf, who became managing director of the company on the death of Hubert Marsh, said that before accepting the appointment he had suggested that the company's releasing contract with United Artists be either canceled or materially altered. "As a result of these suggestions, Capt. Norton went to New York and although he was not able to get the contract canceled altogether he certainly got very material concessions under which it was workable."



The modification of the contract (which previously, declared Mr Woolf, had placed at the disposal of UA "the artistes, the entier personnel and the entire capacity of the studio") had had the immediate result that it had been possible to rent out two stages "most profitably and for an extended period."

Indicating that the future policy of B & D would be to rent space and to produce its own films chiefly in combination with other companies, Mr. Woolf said that it was not intended "to make any very expensive films with a view to getting world release."

It was estimated that the net revenue from the rental of studio space would be £35,000 a year.

IN its first issue of 1936, MARCH OF TIME turns its cameras on the program of the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA), affecting 9 states, an area as large as England. As the government pushes its power lines out through the Tennessee watershed to hundreds of southern towns and hamlets, millions of people will get their first taste of TVA cheap electricity and like it. By this great experiment in regional planning, TVA proposes a national yardstick for measuring what all U. S. electricity should cost.

But TVA is in head-on collision with other millions of people who are employed by, or have their money invested in, the third largest U. S. industry. So to the nation's Supreme Court turn the power companies to defend their property and to challenge the government's right to go into business.

With the headlines scarcely dry on the NRA and AAA decisions, now TVA goes on trial. On this collision between public and private power is focused the attention of all U. S. industry.

COURT DEALS BLOW TO CHANCE GAMES

New York Supreme Court Holds Theatre Drawings Violate Law; Arrests Seen

Chance games used at motion picture theatres as a box office stimulant this week suffered their severest setback since becoming the subject of wide legal controversy, the supreme court in New York refusing the appeal of a convicted exhibitor by ruling that such drawings in theatres violate the state laws. The immediate effect is expected to be wholesale arrests by New York's police department under Commissioner Valentine, which might result in complete abandonment of the practice in the largest territory in the country, New York representing some 18 per cent of the nation's motion picture business.

Appeals were contemplated elsewhere against state court decisions. In Arkansas, Malco Theatres were reported to be considering an appeal from a decision that favored the state. In Boston, a $250 fine was to be appealed by James Wells, of the Felsway, Medford, and Charles Wilson, of the Hamilton at Dorchester.

Two bills aimed at cash giveaways and chance games were filed in Massachusetts with the state legislature.

The decision by the appellate division of the supreme court, in Brooklyn, that prizes awarded in motion picture houses and other places of amusement are a violation of the state lottery law, was announced over the weekend.

Sees Arrests Coming

The ruling, which affirmed an earlier decision by the court of special sessions in Brooklyn, was declared by William F. X. Geoghan, district attorney of Kings county, to be of great interest to his office and to the police department. He interpreted it as opening the way for the arrest of proprietors of amusement places who distribute cash prizes to their patrons as the result of a drawing.

The case considered was that of Charles Cranides, manager of a motion picture house at 135 Driggs avenue, Brooklyn; Joseph Kiley, assistant manager of the theatre, and Farmer Miller, who operated the wheel which aided in the picking of the winners of prizes.

Justices Bayes, Murphy and McInerney of the court of special sessions found the three defendants guilty of unlawfully maintaining and operating a lottery and suspended sentence.

Decision Is Unanimous

Melvin Albert, counsel for the defendants, took the case to the appellate division. He contended that it was not necessary to purchase a ticket of admission to the theatre to share in the drawings, because tickets for the drawing could be obtained in business places in the neighborhood and in the lobby of the theatre. He contended that because no charge was made for participating in the drawings there was no violation of the lottery law.

George F. Palmer, Jr., assistant district attorney, replied that it made no difference whether persons not purchasing tickets of admittance to the theatre took part in the drawings or not. The fact in this case, he said, was that the policeman purchased a ticket of admittance and received his ticket in the drawing.

The decision of the appellate division was given by Justices Hagarty, Carswell, Davis, Taylor and Johnston. There was no opinion, but a memorandum by the court said that the judgment of the court of special sessions was affirmed. The decision of the court was unanimous.

Mr. Albert said he would as soon as possible seek permission of the appellate division to have its decision reviewed by the court of appeals.

Storage Arranged For Film Archives

Five million feet of motion pictures and many thousands of phonographic records are extant in the various departments, agencies and independent establishments of the Government, according to John G. Bradley, chief of the Division of Motion Pictures and Sound Recording of the National Archives, as recorded in the first national report from The National Archives at Washington.

How best to preserve those pictures and additional material received as gifts from the non-federal field is the immediate problem of Mr. Bradley's staff. Eight concrete vaults and a projection room have been provided in the National Archives Building.

Storage specifications agreed upon call for insulated fireproof cabinets within the vaults, each cabinet to contain one thousand feet of film in a separate compartment, vented to a stack flue leading to the exterior of the building.

"Each compartment," said Mr. Bradley, "is to have a gravity trap door that will permit quick and easy egress of combustion flames or gases to the exterior and prevent ingress of these same gases to the film compartments. The flues leading to the exterior are to be provided with proper insulation to prevent heat conduction and a return of outside air."

The preservation plans comprise control of temperature, humidity, air content, heat conduction and air connections.

Johnston to Florida

W. Ray Johnston, president of Republic Pictures, who has been confined to bed in New York for the past three weeks with bronchial pneumonia, left Wednesday with Mrs. Johnston for St. Petersburg, Fla. He will spend several weeks there recuperating and expects to return to New York about February 7.

"More Generous" Plan Set By WPA for Shows

A competitive phase of the federal theatre project in the New York region was clarified in a statement by Elmer Rice, regional director, this week that one performance weekly will be reserved for persons on home relief who will be admitted free to the project's six theatres, and at other times regular admissions will prevail.

Mr. Rice described this plan as "more generous" than any other in the country, since more than 15 per cent of the theatres' weekly seating capacity will be restricted to the city's relief population numbering 410,000, who, he said, are "starved for the legitimate theatre." The regional director has frankly admitted in the past that the program aims to stimulate interest in the stage as opposed to motion pictures.

According to the formulated policy, admission will be free on Saturday afternoons at the Willis, in the Bronx, to persons showing home relief cards at the box office, and on Monday nights at the Manhattan, Biltmore, Daly's, Lafayette and the Symphony, which is the new name for the Teller-Shubert in Brooklyn. Relief cards will be good for two admissions, and no special requisitions will be necessary. There will be no seat sale for these performances.

In Chicago, Thomas Wood Stevens, regional director, reported the present plan there was to admit relief clients free of charge, although it was not yet definite. He said the Chicago price scale would probably range from 10 to 20 cents. The admission scale in New York City will be from 25 cents to probably $1 top, with probably a 10 or 15-cent admission for children.

Exhibitors Complain

Permission to charge admission was authorized under the Works Progress Administration in the hope the Government would be able to make the projects self-sustaining and eventually pay their own way. Under the TERA and the old CWA, the problem of admission did not arise as all performances were free. With the decision to charge at the box office, many commercial producers, particularly in Chicago, have complained of unfair competition.

Uncle Sam's debut as a producer in New York was scheduled for Wednesday night with the opening of "The Living Newspaper," sponsored by the Newspaper Guild of New York, at the Biltmore. Because of the Governmental red tape in obtaining requisitions for properties and electrical equipment, the opening has been postponed until January 29.

The Tryout Theatre, the only unit from which the commercial theatre is expected to benefit, is scheduled for launching February 8 at the Willis with "Woman of Destiny," sponsored by Lee Shubert.

Two Chicago Houses Considered

In Chicago meanwhile, the Great Northern, an old legitimate house, and the Star and Garter, a burlesque theatre, both dark, are being considered by WPA authorities for their shows. It is expected if the theatre deals go through the plays will open some time next month, and may go on tour later.

Complete reorganization of the federal music project in New York City has been announced by Dr. Nikolai Sokoloff, national director of WPA music activities.

$25,000,000 FOR PRINTS IF BLIND BUYING IS ELIMINATED, SAYS NIZER

Attorney for New York Film Board of Trade Says Exhibitors Want System as Much as Distributors Desire It

Abolition of "blind selling" and block booking, by law, as proposed, would cost the motion picture industry $25,000,000 a year alone for the additional prints that would be required, and rental prices would be prohibitive for some small exhibitors and very much increased for all exhibitors.

This is the newest major-distributor line of attack against opponents of the block booking system, and was undertaken last week by Louis Nizer, an attorney for large distributors who at the same time serves as counsel for the New York Film Board of Trade. Mr. Nizer presented the distributors' case to the School of Education at New York University. Some independent exhibitor interests are planning a fight in Congress for passage of the Pettengill anti-block booking bill.

Mr. Nizer declared that, contrary to the declarations of block booking opponents, exhibitors want the system to continue as much as do the distributors. Too, "the social argument in respect to block booking is absolutely baseless and false," he added.

"Furthermore, the theory that exhibitors are compelled to buy 100 per cent of a company's product in order to obtain any of its pictures is greatly exaggerated," Mr. Nizer continued. "The records reveal that not more than five per cent of contracts made with exhibitors are for the producer's entire product including short subjects and news reels and that not more than 20 per cent are for complete blocks of feature pictures offered. In other words, most exhibitors have substantial selection even before the contract is made. Otherwise, how could one explain the fact that certain pictures are contracted for 14,000 theatres, whereas, less successful pictures of the same company are contracted for only 1,400 theatres? These are the actual statistics in respect to two pictures of the same company. If bad box office pictures could be forced upon the exhibitor, there would not be such a discrepancy in the number of bookings.

Cites 10% Cancellation

"Not only has the exhibitor some selection before the contract is made, but he has a 10 per cent cancellation clause after the contract is made.

"So long as the block booking problem is debated on economic grounds, it will not be a serious one because in the last analysis exhibitors would be as shocked as distributors if this custom were suddenly destroyed. Exhibitors must have a steady flow of product and cannot depend upon individual purchases as each picture comes along. The uncertainty of supply and the prohibitive price of individual selling would soon bring back the custom of block booking.

"The danger involved in the block booking controversy is that it has been made a political football and that false social issues have been brought into the picture and have misled honest groups who seek to elevate the standards of films."

On the subject of blind buying, Mr. Nizer said: "The majority of exhibitors are several hundred miles distant from the nearest exchange center. Most exhibitors who pay as little as $5.00 or $10.00 for pictures cannot spend much larger sums to see them in advance. For an exhibitor to see 600 pictures a year would require 75 working days of his time in addition to traveling expenses. If 600 feature pictures had to be viewed by 10,000 exhibitors a year, the cost to the industry for prints alone as a result of these showings would be $25,000,000 a year.

"In England the block booking and blind buying laws are circumvented. There is a trade showing which technically is supposed to be a viewing by all exhibitors even though they have not seen the picture. Furthermore, oral arrangements are made to buy the complete block. This is done in order that the exhibitors may be assured of a definite supply of a certain quality of product. The average exhibitor knows the type of product he will get from a large major company. He knows its stars, its directors, and usually there are advance notices of most of the story material.

"He has learned that it is in his own interest to permit elasticity in production. Particularly today, with percentage engagements in vogue, the producer is as anxious as the exhibitor to make the most successful pictures possible. The producer should be allowed to shift from a preconceived definite program if he believes he can improve it and he should be allowed to take advantage of current news opportunities, which frequently make certain subjects popular."

Called Wholesale Selling

"Block-booking is wholesale selling," explained Mr. Nizer. "The exhibitor receives the benefits of a wholesale price and the distributor receives the benefit of a large sale. If each picture were sold separately, the cost of selling would be so increased, particularly in the outlying districts, that prices would be prohibitive for some small exhibitors, and very much increased for all exhibitors. There is very little doubt that voluntary block-booking is therefore desirable. The exhibitors want it as much as the distributors.

"An economic problem has arisen in respect to what is called compulsory block-booking. This means that the distributor refuses to license his best pictures unless the exhibitor buys the less desirable ones.

"The distributors also claim that experimentation in production frequently in artistic and cultural fields is possible only because there is a possibility of obtaining some return from such pictures if their box office value is poor.

"Exhibitors, on the other hand, contend that they would be ready and pleased to pay very much more for successful pictures, and want to have eliminated the unsuccessful pictures. In other words, they seek a complete choice of selection. This creates an economic conflict. Is it possible for the exhibitor to pay enough when he has complete choice of selection to make up for the great losses the distributor may sustain on the unsuccessful pictures? The experiment of Paramount Pictures Corporation in 1923, when it sold individually and not on a block-booking basis proved disastrous. The exhibitors were displeased with the method, and as a result, Paramount lost large sums of money," Mr. Nizer said.

SILVER JUBILEE HONOR PAID IRVING BERLIN

With the dining room transformed into a replica of Nigger Mike's, the Bowery cabaret where Irving Berlin, as a singing waiter, started his climb to international fame, leaders of the motion picture industry joined song writers in pay ing tribute to Mr. Berlin at a silver jubilee dinner in the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, Monday night.

Featuring the program was a song parade that traced Mr. Berlin's career from 1911, when his first big hit, "Alexander's Ragtime Band," was published, to his recent climax when he wrote the complete musical score for RKO Radio's "Follow the Fleet."

The melody review of the years was presented by 25 noted composers, each of whom played a hit song written by Mr. Berlin in his 25 years of composing. Al Jolson's singing of Berlin hits which he introduced on Broadway was another highlight of the program.

Industry figures at the dinner were Winfield Sheehan, Joseph M. Schenck, Samuel Goldwyn, Samuel Briskin, J. R. McDonough, B. B. Kahane, Irving Thalberg, Darryl F. Zanuck, Ernst Lubitsch, Harry Cohn, Pandro S. Berman, Fred Astaire, Mark Sandrich, Max Winslow, Archie Mayo, Mervyn LeRoy, Sam Katz, Eddie Mannix, William Goetz, David Loew, Moss Hart, Dwight Taylor, Morrie Ryskind, Harpo Marx, Nat Finston, Boris Morros and Leo Forbstein.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 6.—(A) What routine is needed in starting a show and why? (B) Explain how the complete loss of sound can be traced down and remedied. (C) Does any current at all flow through an open switch in a d.c. circuit?

Answer to Question No. 2 (New Series)

Bluebook School Question No. 2 was: (A) Is there any relation between wire diameters and voltage? (B) Hany many amperes may be carried on a wire the diameter of a silk thread? (C) Is it possible to convey any appreciable amount of power over a wire the diameter of a silk thread?

The following made acceptable answers: D. Danielson; B. DeVetti; Bill Doe; G. Thompson; H. Pollies; T. L. Bradbury; P. Howard; A. L. Cooper; D. Allen and M. Spencer; O. L. Daris and F. Simms; D. L. and M. Rice; J. T. Raleigh; G. N. Guidotti, F. L. and N. Savlor; T. Thomas; R. L. Bersottu; T. H. E. Richman; F. D. Overleing and J. Lansing; W. Burns and T. R. Fanning; O. D. Lantry, J. L. Samuels, R. Tompkins and H. K. Abernathy; Nic Granby; W. M. Powell and T. Davis; I. B. Bancroft; W. L. Simmons; L. A. Dodson and H. T. Todd; J. Gurts and D. Howard; B. I. Jennings; N. Tomlinson; P. and L. Felt; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; T. T. Golley; J. Genson and V. Sanders; H. T. Granger; S. G. Sanders and G. Seargent; F. H. Klar, L. Klar and T. H. Morton; B. McCabe; L. B. Hardy; I. Huger; C. L. Sexton; B. L. Mathew, R. Marks and D. J. Rosen; A. L. Long and J. T. McGuire; R. I. Morris; H J. Billingsworth; M. and J. Devoy; D. Emmerson; O. L. Harris; N. J. Ferguson; J. G. Schofner; D. Pollock; D. McGee and N. E. Olliver; R. Miles and N. J. Perkins; T. L. and G. Daniels; H. B. Maulding; B. H. Thaller; C. Hawkins; B. B. Hornstein; K. L. Knight and L. Henderson; S. E. Gay.

Concerning Section A, T. Thomas says: "There is no relation between wire diameter and voltage. Wire diameter limits the number of amperes of current that may flow. Voltage is governed only by insulation and ability of the generating power to build up electric pressure as measured in voltage."

B. DeVietti says, "Volume of current flow (amperage) is the only factor having any relation to wire diameters in so far as has to do with electrical action. A very small wire or a very large one may be charged with any voltage that can be generated and insulated, but the volume of current flow will be governed by the area of cross-section of the wire, from all of which it is seen that there is no relation between wire diameter and voltage."

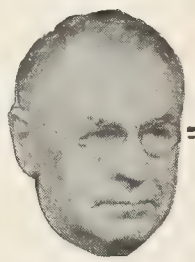
O. L. Daris and F. Simms says, "There is none whatever. The voltage that any wire may be charged with, regardless of its diameter, is limited only by the power of generation and the dielectric strength of the insulation. In saying this, however, I am assuming that current flow (if any) resulting from such pressure (voltage) is not under consideration."

(B) As has been pointed out by many students, the question really is not entirely a fair one, as silk threads vary largely in diameter. Nic Granby sets the matter forth very fairly, thus:

"I believe you pulled a boner, in this one, Dad. Probably you did not stop to consider that there are silk threads of many diameters; either that, or it was intended as a 'catch' question. Don't believe that, though, for I've never found you doing it. I think you really meant to ask us how many amperes a wire of the diameter of a small silk thread will carry, but even that is not clear, for in dealing with such small diameters one must know them exactly. Even then I could not answer it, for I have been unable to dig up information as to carrying capacities of such very small wires. Our power plant chief electrician says he does not believe such wires have an amperage capacity rating, so I'll have to pass this one up by saying the capacity would be so small it would probably have to be stated in milliamperes."

Brother Granby is correct in his assumption of my intention. As a matter of fact, I have nothing giving amperage capacities of wires that small; also, I find the wire capacity tables of the national code give little assistance in ascertaining the carrying capacity of wires per unit area, as different diameter wires have highly variable carrying capacity per unit area. For example, a No. 18 wire is rated at 6 amperes, with other than rubber covered insulation, and a No. 6 is rated at 70 amperes. Now a No. 18 has 1,624 cm. area of cross-section, and a No. 6 has 26,250 cm. area. Dividing 1,624 by 6 we see that a No. 18 is rated at 270 cm. cross-section per ampere of current, whereas by dividing 26,250 by 70 we find a No. 6 is rated to carry one ampere per each 375 cm. of cross-section. If we inspect the rating of a No. 1 similarly we see it carries one ampere per each 553 cm. area.

Now since the radiation of heat is much slower in the larger wire, this seems quite all right, but it doesn't give us much help in determining the exact amount of current of a very thin wire, which would radiate all heat very fast. I therefore regard the answer of Granby as about the best that could be given under the circumstances.



(C) D. Danielson says, "Yes, for small distances, at very high voltages, power sufficient for many requirements could be conveyed by such a wire."

P. Howard says, "The power that may be conveyed over such a wire is appreciable, though of course not large. Even smaller wires are employed quite extensively in projection rooms in meters, relay speakers, phonograph pickups and in the high-voltage, low-amperage circuits of the amplifying systems. For illustration, in a d. c. circuit 0.1 of an ampere could be safely conveyed by a No. 30 wire. The energy expended, measured in watts, would be 250 times 0.1, equals 25 watts of power."

G. Thompson says, "A conductor, regardless of diameter, may be insulated to hold at least 40,000 volts. The size of wire Mr. Richardson probably had in mind would be about a No. 30. I have been unable, within the time limit of sending in the answer to this question, to ascertain the carrying capacity of such a wire, but believe it may safely be assumed to be at least 1/20th of an ampere. If so, then 40,000 times 1/20 equals 2,000, which is the wattage of half an ampere at 40,000 volts, and that certainly is appreciable, since it is almost three horse-power. Mind you, Mr. Richardson, I do not say such a performance is practical in commercial work, but just the same it could be done in a laboratory, and I believe it might be possible to convey at least one h. p. in regular commercial work, as in instruments."

Quite frequently I receive a letter from a projectionist inquiring how the "school" may be joined, and what the charge is. There is, of course, no charge of any kind. To join the "school" it is necessary only to send in answers to the questions asked.

REDS RENEW FIGHT AGAINST PICTURES

'Leftists' Picket 'Riffraff' Showing at Capitol on Broadway; Agitation in Other Cities

Agitation against the motion picture industry by radical elements, dormant for some weeks, has been revived in various key cities with renewed calls to boycott several films described in the Red press as "pro-war" and "anti-labor."

At the same time, periodicals of radical proclivities, including those with a newsstand sale, have become more violent in their attacks on the industry.

A "leftist" campaign against "Riffraff," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, was climaxed with the picketing of the Capitol theatre on New York's Broadway last week by members of the American League Against War and Fascism. The management had prepared for demonstrations by asking for a police guard. The picketing was peaceful, however.

"Riffraff" depicts waterfront labor strife, and maritime unions are denouncing it as "anti-labor." The Cleveland Federation of Labor has adopted a resolution protesting the showing of the film at Loew's State there, the union men describing it as "a slander on the militant trade unions of the west coast."

Attack at Cleveland

Furthermore, Max Hayes, editor of the labor paper, Cleveland Citizen, said the picture was "propaganda to prejudice the public against trade unionism." Colonel Henry E. Long, Loew division manager in Cleveland, was surprised by the allegations.

In the same city, "Red Salute," Reliance production released by United Artists, was withdrawn from the Mall theatre by Leo Greenberger, manager, upon demand of an organization calling itself "Red Salute Picketers Defense Council."

Agitation in Boston was strong against "Red Salute," which last week ended its first-run at the RKO Boston, but most of the complaints and threats came in the form of largely anonymous letters and telephone calls.

Boycott is Boomerang

Various student organizations, totaling membership according to their reports of more than 10,000, pledged to boycott the showing. It had just the opposite effect, because the theatre ran four shows on Sunday for the first time in its history and business was big during the week.

Police and the management took elaborate precautions against disturbances, but the week passed peacefully. One of the missives received by Ben Domingo, manager, was a telegram reading, "Greater Boston Students Committee for Peace and Freedom, consisting of 3,000 students in 34 organizations, condemn RKO booking of propaganda film, 'Red Salute,' and suggest immediate cancellation."

While gaining momentum in the field, the anti-industry campaign is considered to have largely spent itself in New York City, the arrest of hundreds of theatre pickets and demonstrators in recent months having proved a deterrent.

Also, the Communists' activities are being investigated for violations of the state criminal anarchy law by the district attorney's office. Clarence A. Hathaway, editor of The Daily Worker, official organ of the Communist party in the United States, was questioned last weekend in connection with a link with the Communist International at Moscow. He and his paper have been among the foremost leaders in the campaign, which has gone so far as to aim at such films as MGM's "A Tale of Two Cities."

Levine Now Has 50% of Republic

Under the latest ownership set-up of Republic Productions — producing unit — announced last weekend, Nat Levine, president, disclosed that his recent purchase of the Republic Pictures Corporation and Republic Productions interest of Trem Carr gives him a 50 per cent interest in both concerns.

W. Ray Johnston will continue as president of Republic Pictures, the distributing organization.

Satisfaction at the progress made by the producing organization during the past two months was at the same time expressed by H. J. Yates, Republic's financial sponsor, who declared that recent changes in the producing unit were the result of natural evolution in the development of the company, and that since the changes the organization has been functioning smoothly and efficiently.

No further changes are contemplated in the Republic production personnel, Mr. Levine said, adding that the company, in spite of delays incident to the recent re-alignment, will be on schedule by the end of January.

At that time pictures completed or in work will total 31, including 15 features, five John Wayne westerns, five Gene Autry westerns, five action pictures, and the first Republic serial, "Darkest Africa."

Pictures announced on the 1935-36 Republic program totaled 52, including the four serials to be released between January, 1936, and January, 1937.

Musical numbers from "Dancing Feet" were featured by Glenn Grey and his Casa Loma orchestra on the Camel cigarette radio program, January 21st.

Paul Radin was added to the Republic home office publicity department under Ed Finney. Mr. Radin was formerly assistant advertising manager at Columbia. He was also associated with several advertising agencies in New York.

Evalyn Knapp has been signed for the lead opposite Phil Regan in "Laughing Irish Eyes," which starts this week under direction of Joseph Santley.

Mischa Auer, Hedwiga Reicher and Olaf Hytten have been added to the cast of "House of A Thousand Candles," featuring Bela Lugosi, Mae Clarke and Phillips Holmes. Arthur Lubin is directing.

BIP to "Invade" American Market; Rogers in Charge

Associated Talking Pictures, of England, promised in New York on Monday, through Budd Rogers, to effect an "invasion" of the American sales market, either by disposing of distribution rights to large or independent distributors, or, if need be, by establishing its own exchange system. The invasion will be conducted through Associated's producing-distributing subsidiary, British International Pictures, which, in turn, has organized Alliance Pictures here.

Indication of the plan was made at a luncheon to the trade press in New York, where it was also announced that Mr. Rogers, formerly sales executive of Ray Johnston's Republic Pictures, would serve as vice-president and general manager of BIP's Alliance in America, with headquarters in the RKO Building, New York.

Attention will be paid by BIP to the exportation of talent from Hollywood to the company's studios in England, for their use in pictures intended for the American market.

First Division Pictures already has contracted to distribute ten BIP pictures nationally, seven of which have already been selected, as follows: "Dance Band," with Charles (Buddy) Rogers and June Clyde; "Mimi," with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Gertrude Lawrence; "Red Wagon," with Raquel Torres and Charles Bickford; "Spy 77," with Greta Nissen and Don Alvarado; "Southern Maid," with Bebe Daniels and Lupino Lane; "Drake the Pirate," with Matheson Lang, Jane Baxter and Athlene Seyler, and, "The Living Dead," with Sir Gerald De Maurier and George Curzon.

There are five additional features now en route from London from which First Division will select the remaining three, as follows: "Heart's Desire," with Richard Tauber; "The Student's Romance"; "Invitation to the Waltz," with Lilian Harvey; "I Give My Heart" and "Honour's Easy."

Also, a deal has been made with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to distribute here Richard Tauber's "April Blossoms," and with Columbia to sell "Abdul the Damned," with Fritz Kortner, Adrienne Ames and Nils Asther. Neither company has decided whether their acquisitions will be on 1935-36 or 1936-37 schedules.

British International Pictures' product is now being distributed in Canada by Empire Films, Ltd.

Decision to invade this market was made following a study of the situation here by John Maxwell and Arthur Dent, last summer.

BIP now owns and controls 350 theatres in Great Britain and produce 24 to 26 features each season, having nine in work at present at their Elstree studios at London. Subsidiaries in England are Wardour Films, Ltd., managed by Mr. Dent and Pathe Films, Ltd., managed by William Gell.

COWBOY HOLIDAY: Big Boy Williams—Very good western. Big Boy Williams is popular here even though this is the first western of his we have run. He was good in "The Glass Key," "The Silver Streak," "Flirtation Walk" and others. "Cowboy Holiday" is a good western.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Commodore

BIG CALIBRE: Bob Steele—Good western. Steele always pleases here.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

First National

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—We played this picture New Year's Eve and New Year's Day and it seemed to hit the bullseye. Business on both days was better than it has been for a couple of seasons for the same dates—but then, that seems to be general. Joe E. Brown in this seems as if he enjoyed every minute while making it. Of course, many will say give us more like it, but pictures like this come few and far between. I, too, will say, I hope, Joe, you can give us something nearly as good without waiting too long.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Excellent. They don't come any better than this. Played January 8.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Joe E. Brown my best bet. This his best picture. Extra business.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown—We thought this the best picture Joe E. Brown has ever made. He is one of the best, if not the best actor on the screen in my estimation. His pictures are always different and they never fail to draw and please. Hurry back, Joe.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY HOSTESS: Winifred Shaw, Lyle Talbot—Fair picture and look for Shaw to go places. Running time, 69 minutes. Played January 2-3.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY HOSTESS: Winifred Shaw, Lyle Talbot—This one is O. K. Running time, 69 minutes. Played December 7-8.—F. Lakosky, Badger Theatre, Colby, Wis. Small town and rural patronage.

CASE OF THE LUCKY LEGS, THE: Warren William, Genevieve Tobin—A good comedy picture. Story a little off in quality, but the splendid cast made a good show of it and gave satisfaction.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

I FOUND STELLA PARISH: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter—One of the finest entertainments we ever put on our screen. You will have to see it to appreciate it. I say Kay Francis' best, and Sybil Jason, the wonder child actress, was a great help. Balance of cast fine.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

I FOUND STELLA PARRISH: Kay Francis, Sybil Jason, Paul Lukas—Kay Francis does a very great piece of acting in this picture. It has a very good story and all the characters are in their roles down to Sybil Jason, who has promise of better things as a child star. The title would indicate that it is a woman's picture, but it has all the elements that should attract all types of audiences. Again all hail to Miss Francis in a difficult role. She did a swell job in "Stella Parish."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

I FOUND STELLA PARISH: Kay Francis, Sybil Jason, Paul Lukas—Very good. Kay Francis is not one of the favorites here, yet B. O. receipts held up to average and those who saw it pleased. Warner Bros.-First National product is tops with us and so is the booker in their Milwaukee office. Running time, 84 minutes. Played November 16-17.—F. Lakosky, Badger Theatre, Colby, Wis. Small town and rural patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Drew extra business and pleased all.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

LAWLESS RIDERS: Ken Maynard—A good western, well produced and well acted. Tarzan has a little more to do than usual and does it to everyone's satisfaction. Better than usual week-end business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—As good as anything these stars have ever done. Used it for our Christmas attraction and in spite of the coldest weather Kentucky has had in years it drew good business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March—I wasted two play days on this and as far as this community is concerned she can go home and stay. What a flop. The poorest business of the year. Running time, 95 minutes. Played December 24-25.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—In spite of this trio of well known names and with good weather this picture failed to do the business we expected of it.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ESCAPADE: William Powell, Luise Rainer—Introducing Miss Rainer, a newcomer, with much promise, and strong cast. "Escapade" is delightful entertainment. William Powell, as usual, gives a fine performance. Running time, 89 minutes. Played December 28-29.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—Good, clean fun that will not only please the children, but any critical adult. Did good despite poor weather. On a whole, MGM has come through this year with a fine run of pictures, pleasing to the patrons and the box office.—Philip Schwartz, Parkway Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn. City patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne, Frank Morgan—Average to good picture. Joan is the pampered darling of the idle rich as usual and loves several men at the same time, also as usual. Just average business on this. Frank Morgan is the highlight of the picture and gives a much better performance than either of the principals. Played December 28.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel—This is a mighty good picture with plenty of comedy and that is what the customers want, a good laugh, and Ted Healy gave it to them. Above average business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 17-18.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE FLEET: Robert Taylor, Jean Parker—A splendid, entertaining picture. Story big; background (the Navy) very interesting. A mighty good picture. But this title thing, "Murder," hurts any picture that has it tacked to it in this town, as a lot of people have gotten tired of paying to see "murder," and they won't come to seem them or let their children come. And that's that.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MURDER MAN, THE: Spencer Tracy, Virginia Bruce—It is a satisfactory picture with the exception of the title that I think militated against it at the box office. There are no gruesome scenes and Tracy does nice work in the picture. At least it has dialogue that belongs and there is some action.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clark Gable, Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone—Pleased the manager and the few people who saw it very much. I class this one as the best picture produced and screened since the advent of sound pictures. Reason for poor business; played first run two weeks, opened up with cheap downtown house on Christmas day for four days. I ran day and date with four more theatres. Second day, impossible weather; same for 3d day. Enough said.—Philip Schwartz, Parkway Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn. City patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Three Marx Brothers Kitty Carlisle, Allan Jones—A wonderful production. Gave 100 per cent satisfaction to very good business (for these times). Lots of very funny stuff in this picture and not suggestive. Played December 29-30.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—100 per cent satisfaction by everybody.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

PUBLIC HERO NO. 1: Chester Morris, Jean Arthur—Good picture. Pleased all who came but enough didn't come to please me!—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

PURSUIT: Chester Morris, Sally Eilers—A splendid program picture. Lots of good comedy and clean. A very entertaining picture. Gave good satisfaction on a double feature bill for Christmas. Played December 24-25.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell, Rosalind Russell—Very clever picture. Some of the cash customers had difficulty in keeping track of the different codes and plots but all in all an entertaining picture. Plenty of wisecracks, and that's what the average patron likes. Average business. Played January 4.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—This is a mighty fine picture. Great acting by the star. Big story. Well produced and gave satisfaction to all.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

SHADOW OF DOUBT: Virginia Bruce, Ricardo Cortez—Very good murder mystery. Played to below average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—Well liked by all.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—We were very skeptical of what this picture would do on a repeat run, but it proved that really great pictures as this is can repeat and do normal business. However, they are few and far between that will do it and this is the exception.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy—This is a mighty good entertaining picture. The stars great. Story entertaining. The stars and cast made this a good, entertaining picture, where others would have made it just another picture for a double bill.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

WOMAN WANTED: Joel McCrea, Maureen O'Sullivan, Lewis Stone—A good action picture and Miss Sullivan does nice work, as does McCrea. Any picture that has some action and is reasonably well directed and has a good story is right down the alley of a small town theatre. A much needed and welcome relief from the all dialogue picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WOMAN WANTED: Maureen O'Sullivan, Joel McCrea—A splendid program action picture. Gave good satisfaction. Played December 31.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

Monogram

HEALER, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Karen Morley—This was better than I expected even though I had an idea it was pretty good, and it drew well, too. You can get behind this. No miracle matter in this, just fine drama.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighboorhood patronage.

HONEYMOON LIMITED: Neil Hamilton, Irene Hervey, Lloyd Hughes—Very good on double feature. Lloyd Hughes played his part well and seemed to please the customers.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER, THE: Charlotte Henry, Norman Foster—Very good program picture. Pleased. Fred Kohler, Jr., turned in a very good performance. Hope to see more of him.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER, THE: Charlotte Henry, Norman Foster—This drew good business because the book has been so widely read. But honestly, I was ashamed to stand at the door when people came out. No comments except one man who came in on a pass said he enjoyed it. Charlotte Henry is good. —A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ANNAPOLIS FAREWELL: Tom Brown, Sir Guy Standing—Not as good as "Sweethearts Forever" but an extra fine production. L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Jack Oakie, Burns and Allen—Good music and comedy but a light plot. A picture the entire family will enjoy. Running time, 97 minutes. Played December 8-9.—Paul C. Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

CRUSADES, THE: Henry Wilcoxon, Loretta Young —Big enough but the "Ten Commandments" did all the business that a picture of this type will ever do and my run didn't turn out as a profitable venture, due, no doubt, to the fact that Paramount insisted on a raise in admission. It might do all right at regular prices but they'll stay away if you raise the ante.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

EAGLE'S BROOD, THE: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—Had this one substituted on us (you all know the booker's old "damaged print"; will have to substitute). Consequently, had not run first "Hopalong." But, if the rest of this series is like this one, we'll take vanilla. Boyd can't even ride; why not cast him properly? Running time, 7 reels. Played January 10-11.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye, Frances Langford, Patsy Kelly—Good show about amateur hours and Patsy Kelly injects the humor necessary for good entertainment, Play it. It will satisfy.—Mayme P. Mussleman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye, Patsy Kelly—Had as good comment on this subject as any we have run this season. Likewise on the box office. Although booked late, benefited from national advertising. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 5-6.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—This was the popcorn story, as I remember. Her boy friend's feet hurt. She fell for an English title, became disillusioned (as usual) and came back for more popcorn. Right smart little picture. Played November 22.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—Extra good picture.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: Burns and Allen—Improved weather conditions brought out normal business for "Here Comes Cookie." Our folks had a good laugh and contrary to some reports, our patrons did not think there was too much of Gracie. Played December 28.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell, Sir Guy Standing —We had no trouble filling the house. The picture really exceeded expectations. Action, drama, comedy a full quota of each. Hail Tone and Cooper. Their best work. What more could we ask? Played December 6.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields—Ideal title for marquee. Pleased all who saw it. Did above average business. Fields gaining popularity.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE: Sylvia Sidney—One of the best from every angle.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields, Joan Bennett—One of the best pictures we have shown this season. Crosby showed 'em how "Swanee River" should be sung; Bennett personifies the "American Beauty"; and Fields—well when bigger and better laughs are fathered, he will be the guy waiting in the hall! The poker game was a darb. Running time, 74 minutes. Played January 11.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

PRIVATE WORLDS: Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer, Joel McCrea, Joan Bennett—A ticklish theme, beautifully handled. Boyer's work immense and of course Colbert came through with flying colors. I do not recommend it for children. Drew well. Played January 3.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED CAP: Charles Laughton, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, Zazu Pitts—Laughton was the whole show. I don't wonder they gave him the ace position of 1935 performances. Supporting cast did excellent work. Of course, it drew well. Played December 20.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

SHIP CAFE: Carl Brisson, Arline Judge—Ran this as midnight preview New Year's Eve. Nothing in it that interested the drunks even. Running time, 66 minutes.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott—Enjoyed by all.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott—A stirring picture of the South as they looked at the Civil War. Truly a wonderful picture. Running time, 83 minutes. Played December 15-16.—Paul C. Morgan, Star Theatre, Bay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

VIRGINIA JUDGE, THE: Walter C. Kelly, Marsha Hunt—Just the type for my town. Great show.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

Republic

CAPPY RICKS RETURNS: Robert McWade, Ray Walker, Florine McKinney—A splendid program picture. Lots of good, clean comedy and very entertaining. Action plenty. Gave good satisfaction here.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

RKO-Radio

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn—A good picture. Hepburn in her true style. The Hepburn you hate one moment and admire the next. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 24-25.—Paul C. Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—This picture was sure made to order for my holiday business and everyone liked it. We played it on a double bill for New Year's Eve and kept it over for the next two days. Old circus men say it is very authentic. Running time, 90½ minutes.—R. B. Garvin, Whiteway Theatre, Fredonia, Kan. Small town patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—I read enough reports on this one so I should have left it alone, but I didn't; now I wish I had. The color is beautiful, but when you have said that, you have covered everyting. Our patrons must read reports on pictures, too, as they didn't even come the first night. Skip it if you don't want to waste a date.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins, Frances Dee—My advice is do not play it. Color is beautiful, but I have yet to hear of anyone who liked it. B. O. receipts poorest in over a year. Played November 30-December 1-2.—F. Lakosky, Badger Theatre, Colby, Wis. Small town and rural patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Virginia Weidler, Carol Stone—Good picture that drew better than average and pleased most of the paying customers. Just the type for us small towners.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Virginia Weidler, Carol Stone—Very good. Played January 1.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern—It had some moments that clicked, but nothing to rave about. Had Bill Robinson and Fats Waller, but he had just finished "In Old Kentucky" so didn't thrill much about Robinson. Good enough for the second feature on a double bill.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern—A very good program picture. Pleased all who saw it. The dancing by Bill Robinson is worth the admission price alone.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

RETURN OF PETER GRIMM, THE: Lionel Barrymore—A very pleasing picture for us. Everyone seemed to enjoy it. Did not draw so well.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SCARLET RIVER: Tom Keene—Second time we had run this and while it is different there still remains plenty of room for improvement. Westerns don't mean a lot anymore and Saturday is just another day in the show business.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—Did average business on this one, although the picture is nothing to write home about.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—A very pleasing costume picture with plenty of action that was backed by spirited songs. Running time, 96 minutes. Played December 4-5.—Paul C. Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Here is a real production, which decidedly pleased a New Year's audience of average proportions. Played January 1.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

TOP HAT: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—Although an outstanding picture, we cannot say that it was our best box office attraction. Our patrons have not yet been educated to the sophisticated musicals.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Hilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BABOONA: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—The best of this type of picture we've had. The minister liked it so well he came again the second night. Both educational and interesting. Excellent photography. Played December 13.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—I can only echo the sentiments of those who have reported on the picture. Fine. Played November 15.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—A nice little picture that drew better than an average business and pleased 90 per cent of the cash customers. Much better than "One More Spring" and "Servants' Entrance." Running time, 90 minutes. Played January 1-2.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

FIVE MORE SHOWMEN JOIN THE REPORTERS

The Northeast and the Far West provide four of the five latest additions to the reportorial army of "What the Picture Did for Me." The fifth is from Connecticut. Here they are:

H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, North Dakota.

Mrs. Mary E. Lind, Ute Theatre, Rifle, Colorado.

F. Lakosky, Badger Theatre, Colby, Wisconsin.

Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, North Dakota.

Philip Schwartz, Parkway Theatre, Bridgeport, Connecticut.

"You will hear more from me," writes Schwartz, and that is exactly all right with all of us.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn—I class this as just another musical. But not much draw and little enthusiasm. One criticism from a customer: "They wore too many clothes." Played December 31.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

GINGER: Jane Withers, Jackie Searl—Here is a fine little picture for the whole family, introducing a wonderful little girl that should be tonic for the box office, a much-needed stimulant. Hope her next picture will be as good as "Ginger." Running time, 74 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

HERE'S TO ROMANCE: Nino Martini, Genevieve Tobin—Pleased all the music lovers.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

HERE'S TO ROMANCE: Nino Martini, Genevieve Tobin—Worst business in months. Plenty of walkouts. If you operate a theatre in a small town, skip it. Nothing to it. Running time, 86 minutes. Played December 29-30.—Mrs. Mary E. Lind, Ute Theatre, Rifle, Col. Small town patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—I think and my patrons will verify my opinion that this was Will Rogers' best picture, because he didn't have to share honors with some other actor. He was the whole show, and when he went, a lot went with him. Our business was not as good as other Rogers, but a wet snow that ruined dirt roads kept many away. Had a good advertising tieup so know it was well advertised. Will try to bring it back later.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—This picture broke all kinds of records; our biggest matinee; our biggest night and our biggest three days and we played against a competitor running it the same days in a neighboring town at a cheaper price. Running time, 84 minutes.—R. B. Garvin, Whiteway Theatre, Fredonia, Kan. Small town patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—Certainly started the New Year off with a bang. Rogers' best. Kind of patronage: childen from three to one hundred and three years. Running time, 84 minutes. Played January 7-8.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers, Bill Robinson, Dorothy Wilson—Well, the old maestro went by in a blaze of glory. The finest thing and picture that he has ever done and that is the consensus of the audience. Of course, it may be that they were swayed by the fact that it is probably his last picture, but all the same it is one of his best and it did outstanding business. It has considerable comedy that is not Will's, but incidental to the story, and Bill Robinson of course danced and he is good.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—Strange thing, but I never clicked with a Rogers' picture until after he left us. It seems as if the public first realizes that he was America's best "natural" humorist. My trade consists of Hungarians, Polaks and Irish. They all combined in acclaiming it his best. Don't be afraid to date this on your best days. It will not disappoint you. Box office above average Sunday business. Running time, 84 minutes.—Philip Schwartz, Parkway Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn. City patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—A poor print. It's too bad that Fox sends out such bad prints on its best stars, but at that it drew a capacity house. Did as good business as his latest pictures. Running time, 79 minutes. Played January 3-5.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Maxter, Alice Faye, Jack Oakie, Arline Judge—I saw this at a preview and will say that it is very good, very funny and should please all types of audiences. Jack Oakie has the lines and he can handle them along with a well balanced cast. The answer to the plot is no hard guess, but the comedy will offset the other shortcomings and Warner Baxter should draw.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers—I think this is Rogers' best picture. Played to S. R. O. each night. Good story and better supporting cast than in previous pictures. All of Rogers' pictures could be reissued within the next few years. Played December 27.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore—I think "Bright Eyes" the better picture of the two. Barrymore carried the load and Shirley sweet and clever as usual. Drew well. Played December 24.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers, Anne Shirley—One of Will's best. Played to a mixed class. Pleased all. Give your best days.—Philip Schwartz, Parkway Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn. City patronage.

$10 RAISE: Edward Everett Horton, Karen Morley—Kinda silly. At that fair enough, but Horton can do a lot better. Played November 29.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Fred Allen, Patsy Kelly—Just as the name implies. You can thank Mr. Darryl Zanuck for this one. A perfect production that will please your Dick Powell fans 100 per cent and also your box office.—Philip Schwartz, Parkway Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn. General patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers, John McGuire—Shirley Temple, look to your laurels. Jane Withers has an eye on them. What a kid! A natural. The children seem to go for her in a big way. Box office showed as many children admission as last Temple picture.—Philip Schwartz, Parkway Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn. City patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers, John McGuire—Played at our Annual Christmas Party with much success. A perfect "kid" picture, but enjoyed by all. Running time, 65 minutes. Played December 20-21.—Paul C. Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THUNDER IN THE NIGHT: Edmund Lowe, Karen Morley—Nothing to it. No story, no action, no business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played January 3-4.—Mrs. E. Lind, Ute Theatre, Rifle, Col. Small town patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda—A great picture of life in the early New England states whose thoughts and activities are as stern and conventional as those of their early ancestors. Rochelle Hudson is outstanding and holds the love and admiration of all. Played December 27-28.—Paul C. Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

WELCOME HOME: James Dunn, Arline Judge—Dunn has been given such weak stories that he has slipped from an asset to a liability at the box office. Failed to draw even the rental. Wouldn't give it better than a D rating. Poor. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 3-4.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BARBARY COAST: Miriam Hopkins, Edward G. Robinson, Joel McCrea—A good picture with a drab plot and story that will entertain, but won't get film rental in a small town due to lack of comedy and slow tempo. Could have been shortened and satisfied much better. Joel McCrea does very well with his bit and Robinson about as usual.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

DARK ANGEL, THE: Fredric March, Merle Oberon, Herbert Marshall—Pleased 100 per cent. Did fair business in zero weather.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

Universal

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes—This was an unusual attraction and pleased the majority. However, snow and slush kept our attendance down to a minimum. Played December 14.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold—Fine show. Business not so good, even though I advertised it big. Edward Arnold is plenty good. Hurry, Universal, with "Sutter's Gold."—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

HIS NIGHT OUT: Edward Everett Horton, Irene Hervey—A very funny program picture. Good entertainment and gave good satisfaction on a double feature bill.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MYSTERY OF EDWIN DROOD, THE: Claude Rains, Douglass Montgomery, Heather Angel—Played this to an all-time Sunday low, so there were not many that could kick about it. Pretty weak. Played January 4-5.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHE GETS HER MAN: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell—Dated good shorts with this, but it just died a natural death on the second night. Seemed liked a good show to me, but the box office was away below average. Universal doesn't seem to bring in the cash customers for this theatre. Played January 11-12.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

SMOKING GUNS: Ken Maynard—Ken Maynard, our national farm hero who appeals to the ladies as well as to the men, always draws the crowds. Universal has given us, so far, the best western attractions. We are playing "Strawbery Roan" for the third time.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

STORM OVER THE ANDES: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—A very fine flying picture by a star that never made a poor picture. Gave good satisfaction to all. Played January 3-4.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

STORMY: Noah Beery, Jr., Jean Rogers—A great novelty picture; one of the best. Beery, Jr., is some actor; carried this star part like a veteran, and all the cast was extra good, and more horses than you ever saw in any picture. J. Farrell MacDonald was fine. I did not like the snakes in the picture, but there are people that like them. Played December 27-28.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

STORMY: Noah Beery, Jr., Jean Rogers—The sweetest outdoor picture produced in many moons. Tops all Friday-Saturday business. By all means play it, and step on it. Will be liked by all classes. Running time, 68 minutes. Played December 13-14.—Mrs. Mary E. Lind, Ute Theatre, Rifle, Col. Small town patronage.

THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN: Henry Armetta, May Robson—Boy, oh boy, what a picture and did the fans eat it up. Second day tripled opening day. Congratulations, Universal, for giving us a picture like this. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 31-January 1.—Mrs. Mary E. Lind, Ute Theatre, Rifle, Col. Small town patronage.

WEREWOLF OF LONDON: Henry Hull—A good picture of the "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" type that our patrons came out to see in goodly numbers. We double billed it with "It Happened In New York," which made a nice combination. Where this type of picture is wanted it can be depended on to please.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Warner Bros.

I LIVE FOR LOVE: Dolores Del Rio, Everett Marshall—If it hadn't been for added stage attraction, Glen Rice's Hillbillies would have starved to death, as patrons saw stage show, then walked out on feature. The worst ever from Warner. What are you trying to do to us, Jack? Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 9.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

MISS PACIFIC FLEET: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—Warner's pictures always click with small towns. Mine no exception.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

MISS PACIFIC FLEET: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—This is certainly a wow of a picture. More comedy and excitement than a three-ring circus. Pleased them all.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MISS PACIFIC FLEET: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—This is real comedy. Played it immediately following "Top Hat," which had not played near us, and took in more at the B. O. on first two days of "Miss Pacific Fleet" than we did on entire three-day run of "Top Hat." Our patrons certainly enjoyed this one. Running time, 66 minutes. Played December 28-30.—F. Lakosky, Badger Theatre, Colby, Wis. Small town and rural patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran, Sheila Mannors—The trailer on this furnished by this company is very outstanding and certainly brought people in. Splendid week-end business and everyone liked it. Dick is good looking, sure can sing and acts all right.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—This picture did not draw as well as her other pictures did in my theatre. Dick Powell was miscast. My patrons were disappointed. Did below average business. Running time, 94 minutes. Played December 20-22.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Well, so the long heralded and much advertised new picture with this star is here. We thought it just a nice little picture. Nobody here cares much about Miss Davies as we never had many of her pictures, so we depended on Dick Powell to bring them in. Sunday business was good, but had very little the other two days. There is not enough of Dick to satisfy his fans. Nine-tenths of the picture takes place in the hotel and gets rather monotonous. Personally, I think Pat O'Brien is the real star. Anyway, if you are expecting another "Broadway Gondolier" you will be disappointed.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PERSONAL MAID'S SECRET: Margaret Linday, Warren Hull—A splendid picture. Very entertaining. Both stars fine, but Ruth Donnelly stole the picture, and a very cute kid helped a lot. Gave great satisfaction to all.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, James Melton, Jean Muir, Jane Froman—This gave excellent satisfaction. Several people came to see it twice. It has every kind of music in it, from cowboy songs to grand opera and Frank McHugh's comedy is tops. In fact, the whole production is tops. Drew well.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

STRANDED: Kay Francis, George Brent—A nice all-round melodrama. The kind that will please both the men and the ladies. I note that producers are beginning to show their stars in the act of bathing, for no reason at all. I had hoped that the Legion of Decency would eliminate that, but I see they are trying to bring it back. At least that is the case in this, while this is a minor matter, but I had rather hoped that such scenes were a matter of the past, as well as the character dressing while half nude when such scenes are not needed to carry forward the story. Business on this a good average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Short Features

Educational

DAME SHY: Tom Patricola—Plenty of laughs and good dancing by Patricola. Good program balance. Running time, 18 minutes.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

DAME SHY: Tuxedo Comedies—Very good, plenty of laughs. Running time, two reels.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

E-FLAT MAN: Star Personality Comedies — Just fair. Buster Keaton may not know it, but he is through as a comedian. Running time, two reels.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

HOT SANDS: Terry-Toons—Good; enjoyed by all. Recording perfect. Running time, 6 minutes.—Albert Hefferan. Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

LOVE IN A HURRY: Young Romance—Just a couple of reels with pictures.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

SORORITY BLUES: Nell Kelly—Some good singing and dancing. Very pleasing.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

TWO LAME DUCKS: Coronet Comedies—Silly, but not funny. Two reels of alleged comedy. Running time, two reels.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

WINGS OVER MT. EVEREST: This is a mighty fine picture. Had a lot of good comments on it. Running time, 22 minutes.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ALIBI RACKET: No. 2, Crime Doesn't Pay Series—Very excellent. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BASKETBALL TECHNIQUE: MGM Sports Parade—One-reeler about basketball. It's fine if your people like the game.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

FIXER-UPPERS: Laurel & Hardy—Good comedy, but is not as good as some of their others.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Thatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

LITTLE PAPA: Our Gang—Spanky has a terrible time trying to put baby sister to sleep so he can play football with the rest of the gang. And a perfectly grand youngster is the baby sister. Good as usual. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

OLD PLANTATION, THE: Happy Harmonies—Fine colored short.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SPECTACLE MAKER, THE: Musical Revue—Here is a short that is in color and one of the best ones which we have ever played. It is beautiful and fine for the children's audiences. We played this as a short feature and had shorts with the program and sold the idea to a church. It went over very well indeed. Running time, 23 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

Paramount

ADVENTURERS OF POPEYE, THE: Popeye the Sailor—A jumble of cartoons with the better scenes of each combined into one reel and creating a lot of fun even if you had seen them.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

BE KIND TO "AMINALS": Popeye the Sailor—Popeye and Olive Oil save a horse from his cruel master and when Olive slips on a banana the fun starts. Good cartoon.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD RHYTHM: Headliners—Terrible, positively terrible.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD RHYTHM: Headliners — This is a most interesting single reel showing the composers of several musical hits from recent pictures and how these hits were created. Would recommend it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 3—Don't know why Paramount insists on producing such conglomerations of films. Have just seen about two of these that were worthwhile. Running time, 9 minutes.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

POPULAR SCIENCE: Good single reeler.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

SPINACH OVERTURE, THE: Popeye The Sailor—Good, but have seen Popeye in better. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town patronage.

SPRING NIGHT: Paramount Varieties—If you have this on your available sheet you will be money ahead to pay for it if necessary. One of the worst. Running time, 1 reel.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO-Radio

DRAWING RUMORS: Headliner Series — Heard them laughing a number of times, so guess there was some fun along with the songs and music.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

GOING ON TWO: Dionne Quintuplets—Put this on as a special attraction and it helped a lot. Running time, 20 minutes.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

INSIDE THE ROPES: Sports with Bill Corum—Good one-reeler. Shows nearly all the present-day fighters and some of the others.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

INSIDE THE ROPES: Sports with Bill Corum—(Dempsey, Braddock, Baer, Louis, Carnera, Gene Tunney)—Bill Corum has assembled a number of good shots of leading heavyweights of the past, present, and future (Louis). A very good short for ring fans. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: No. 6—This subject is an asset to any theatre, no matter what the situation. Running time, 20 minutes.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: It's pretty good, but I still wish I had not bought it. Running time, two reels.—

NIGHT AT THE BILTMORE BOWL, A: Musicals—Good short subject that pleased with the stars, orchestra and comedy that was mixed in. Would recommend it to any theatre.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. General patronage.

PATHE TOPIC: As far as we're concerned, they're deplorable.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

THIS BAND AGE: Ted Fio Rito and Orchestra—A very good musical by a very good orchestra. Ted's piano solos are excellent and the comic rendition of "The Big Bad Wolf Was Dead" brought plenty of laughs. But why, oh why, didn't he let the trio give us a complete number? Running time, 21 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

ANSWERING THE RIOT CALL: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman Series—This is the second one of these pictures which we have played. They seem to be enjoyed and we are planning to play more of them. You can't go wrong on these as they help to fill in on a feature program. Running time, 10 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

FOX NEWS: No. 25—Still good, still ahead, still giving up-to-the-minute news, still narrated well, and last but not least still liked 100 per cent in our theatre. We would not play any other newsreel on the market. Fox tops them all. Universal News comes next. Running time, 10 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. General patronage.

United Artists

MICKEY MOUSE AND SILLY SYMPHONIES: These are by far the cream of the cartoon release. Adults get a great kick out of them.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S KANGAROO: Mickey Mouse—Laugh from start to finish. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. M, Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

ON YOUR RADIO DIAL: Mentone Musical Comedies—A fine musical two-reeler.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SPEEDY JUSTICE: Mentone Musical Comedies—Fine two-reeler.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

TOWNE HALL FOLLIES: Oswald Cartoons—Oswald is one of the best cartoons on the market. This one is very good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

FLOWERS FOR MADAME: Merrie Melodies—Absolutely beautiful and unique. One of the very best in color cartoons. Put it in your best spot. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

NATURE'S HANDIWORK: Our Own United States—Good one-reeler.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

RIMAC'S RHUMBA ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—Had several comments on this, nice comments, I mean. It's hot and fast, but they seemed to like it. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SIX ACTS VAUDEVILLE: This was recommended for a midnight as a novel attraction to a box office flop. After an hour and forty-five minutes of short subjects, they still look for their feature. Don't try this stunt, as it is not good for business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SPRINGTIME IN HOLLAND: Broadway Brevities—One of the most beautiful sorts we have played. All in color.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

VITAPHONE CASINO: Buster West, Radio Rubes—Fine one-reeler. I wish some company would include a number by Jack Turner in some of the Musical shorts.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

VODKA BOATMEN: Big V Comedies—Don't think much of this. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Mascot Serials

MIRACLE RIDER: Tom Mix—On third chapter and it seems to be a good serial. First chapter is swell. Five reels to it and it contains some interesting scenes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

PHANTOM EMPIRE: Gene Autry, Frankie Darro—Good serial but I played it right after the "Lost City" and it almost ruined it for me. "Phantom Empire" is much better than "Lost City," but too much similarity to play one after the other.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Buffalo Variety Elects Levine Chief Barker

Buffalo Variety Club, Tent No. 7, at the election of officers in their new Delaware avenue headquarters, named Jake Levine, manager of the Embassy theatre, chief barker for 1936; John Sitterley, first vice-president; Robert Murphy, second vice-president, and William E. J. Martin, reelected secretary-treasurer.

New board of directors consists of Carl Kempke, Nate Sauber, Harry Dixon, Harry Seed, Ken Robinson, Byron Interbitzen and Herb Webster.

STAGE NAMES HELP CHICAGO BUSINESS

Operators' Contract Still Unsettled; Columbia Sales Force of Midwest Hear Montague

by BILL CROUCH
Chicago Correspondent

Loop theatres have found that big stage names coupled with good pictures have stimulated business here to a great extent. As a result they have gone out for the biggest stage show headliners in the country and are making their bookings far in advance. Among some of the talent to appear here in the coming weeks are the following:

At the Chicago, the stage bills will be headed by Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, Ina Ray Hutton and her orchestra, Libby Holman, Horace Heidt and his orchestra, Ricardo Cortez, Ted Lewis and Jack Oakie.

The Oriental offers currently The Three Stooges, with Ben Lyon and Bebe Daniels, "Spices of 1936," "Girl in the Goldfish Bowl," Jackie Coogan and Betty Grable in "Hollywood Secrets," and the A. B. Marcus show "La Vie Parisienne," slated to follow.

Presentations at the Palace include: currently, Jane Froham, followed by Wayne King and his band, Clyde Beatty and his animal act, Ruth Etting, Al Pearce and Gang and Joe Cook with his stooges.

The State-Lake also is lining up some headline stage talent.

Current grosses at the loop houses have been very high. The Chicago grossed nearly $60,000 last week when Veloz and Yolanda topped the stage bill and proved such a draw they were held over a second week.

Henri Elman and Jack Rieger of New York made films of the Louis-Retzlaff fight. Even in slow motion the pictures are extremely short. Film row was well represented at the affair which, if nothing else, sent the customers home early.

Ben Judell plans to leave the last of the month for Hollywood to make arrangements for his production activities to start this spring.

Renewal of the contract between exhibitors and the operators' union, which expired some time ago, is still unsettled. The union is still demanding a 20 per cent increase and the exhibitors are still refusing to grant the raise in scale. Indications are that the matter will be settled amicably soon.

Superior Pictures, Inc. headed by J. N. Jovaney, has been growing rapidly the past year. This independent film exchange, which recently took over sales for First Division Pictures in this territory, has moved to larger offices on the fourth floor of the film exchange building at 831 So. Wabash Ave.

A complete sales staff for the four branches of the concern has been completed by Charles H. Miller, general sales manager.

In Milwaukee J. E. O'Toole is manager. William Stern has northern Wisconsin and Michigan territory. In St. Louis Andy Dietz is in charge, with Russell Mortenson covering the state of Missouri. At Indianapolis C. W. Tyler is in charge, and Bert Freese is handling the Indiana territory. In Chicago Edw. Brichetto and Edw. Sapiro handle the sales for this territory.

Mr. Jovaney said the reports turned in by sales manager Miller showed many new accounts on the books.

Local exhibitors are giving much credit for the recent increase in theatre grosses to the heavy advertising campaigns carried in the local newspapers on coming product.

The many pages of advertising in the new Paramount campaign, for example, have been of great help, exhibitors say. The second series of these advertisements, which are campaigns for "Anything Goes," "The Milky Way" and "Desire," start here shortly, a few weeks in advance of the opening dates.

The rotogravure ads on Goldwyn's "Strike Me Pink" broke last Sunday in the Chicago Tribune and caused much favorable comment. Special ads are appearing in all daily newspapers.

Cosmopolitan pictures, as usual, are backed with a great deal of special advertising in the Hearst press.

John Balaban, aside from being an expert circuit operator, is a talent scout. At the Burr Oaks summer camp in Mukwanago, Wis., Balaban saw a play presented by the camp's dramatic club. In the cast was four-year-old Sibylle Matisse. She played her part so well that he arranged a film test for her, and she is now in Hollywood under contract to Paramount. Her first film part is in "Timothy's Quest," starring Tom Keene and Eleanor Whitney.

Two other Chicago girls are also making a bid for cinema fame. Youthful but not youngsters are Eleanor Stewart and Mary Coleman. Miss Stewart won a screen contest and has been put under long term contract at MGM; she gets a nice role in "Small Town Girl." Miss Coleman was a stenographer and script girl at Twentieth Century-Fox until a makeup man changed her appearance; she will be seen in "It Had To Happen."

More than 50 members of the home office staff and branch sales forces of the midwestern division of Columbia Pictures attended a sales meeting at the Congress hotel over the week-end.

With Abe Montague, general sales manager, here for a few hours, the group was given an insight into the coming attractions and plans for next season's product.

Joe McConville, sales supervisor, Rube Jackter, assistant sales manager, Max Weisfeldt, short subjects sales manager, and Leo Jaffee addressed the delegates.

Montague informed the gathering that Columbia was planning to erect new sound stages, office, technical and administration buildings this spring at a cost approximating $1,000,000. Work on some of these buildings already has begun.

Montague left by plane for San Francisco to attend another district sales meeting and from there he goes to Hollywood for a few days, before returning to New York.

Dick Phillips, formerly resident manager for A. H. Blank theatres in Grinnell and Clinton, Iowa, has been appointed manager of the newest Blank house, the Charles theatre in Charles City, Iowa. Since leaving Grinnell College in 1930, Phillips has made an enviable record as a theatre man.

Before leaving for Kansas City on his way to the Coast, Felix Feist, general sales manager for MGM, reported that he did no selling, had no fights and was asked for no reductions, while spending several days here talking with salesmen and circuit operators. Al Lichtman and Tom Connors of the MGM sales organization were also here at the same time.

Jack Katz, manager of the Marbro, is engaged to Nancy Mayer, formerly one of the members of the Evans ballet at the Chicago.

E. M. Raynolds, of the Ross Federal research staff, has been transferred from Minneapolis to the Chicago office. He will have charge of the research department here.

William Kupper, western division sales manager for Twentieth Century-Fox, conferred with the local salesmen while on this tour of Midwestern offices.

The Watkins Twins, June and Juel, have returned from a long engagement in Hollywood and will now grace the loop with their songs and dances.

An alleged attempt to kidnap Constance Talmadge went wrong last Monday when the would-be kidnapers discovered, after holding her husband, Townsend Netcher, and some friends prisoner for a half hour, that Miss Talmadge was in Florida. They then robbed the group of $40 and departed.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A RECOMMENDED INVESTMENT

What this page indicated some weeks back on the influence of cut and dried business routine upon showbusiness was confirmed recently by a lad who gets around and who recently attended a managers' meeting of a nearby circuit. It was easy to see, he related, from the manner in which the bosses conducted the proceedings that they would be equally at home, if not more so, operating a woolen business or similar line of endeavor. Which observation was meant as no reflection upon the textile industry or the theatremen concerned but stressed only to bring out that to a great extent successful exhibitors were essentially business men rather than showmen, were guided by practices of general business rather than those peculiar to show business.

If this viewpoint is to be accepted then it may be said that in too many instances the businessman-exhibitor displays a deplorable degree of acumen in dealing with his managers and their talent for showmanship in the theatre. If good business practice dictates the snapping up of a deal requiring small outlay and guaranteeing handsome returns, we recommend an investment in well-rested, well-paid and able managers —a transaction that will undoubtedly return gratifyingly sizeable and frequent dividends.

"B'ALLAH HOO"

The word "ballyhoo" entered the English language in 1893 at the Columbian Exposition in Chicago, says the New York World-Telegram, according to Charles Wolverton, Chicago newspaper man, writing in American Speech, published by Columbia University Press.

Mr. Wolverton traced the story of "ballyhoo" to W. O. Taylor, newspaper publisher in Archbold, Ohio, who was press agent of the Turkish Theatre of the 1893 World's Fair midway. It seems that two Mohammedan dervishes in the show one day came out front and did their act to draw a crowd. They began by jumping and dashing about and shouting what sounded like "B'Allah hoo," and quite a crowd collected.

The dervishes, pleased with their success, asked Mr. Taylor if he wanted them to come out again and "make B'Allah hoo." "After that," according to Mr. Taylor, "when I wanted them to come forward, I merely called 'ballyhoo' and they knew what was wanted. Other showmen quickly made use of the new word to indicate something to attract business."

Very interesting, indeed, and Mr. Taylor will no doubt be glad to know that after all these years, the jumping, shouting and dashing about is still used to build up the bally.

THEY WELCOME THIS ROLE

How nice it is to say that for the first time since the depression years started not a child in Guelph, Canada, lacked toys on Christmas Day. And as to be expected, this joyous occasion was due to the efforts of a theatre manager—Chris Holmes, of the Royal, who started the ball a-rollin' with a toy matinee that turned in a very torrent of playthings.

Your theatreman is called upon to play many parts in the performance of his duties. But the most difficult role of Santa Claus to the underprivileged is one he undertakes gladly and it may be said with a skill and enthusiasm that invariably stops the show.

THE WOMEN DID IT

And now the gals take hold as Round Tabler Walt Davis reports the success of a campaign on "Alice Adams" at his Capitol Theatre, up in the romantic Saskatchewan. The women members of the staff were turned loose to do their durndest in selling what Walt refers to as a "woman's picture" and a bang-up job did they do.

There are a highly skilled number of woman publicists attached to theatres around the country and listed we are pleased to say upon the Round Table membership rolls. But the Davis campaign is the first reported to this department wherein the publicity barrage was directed by an all-girl crew.

May their powder always be dry!

SUGGESTED READING

In a recent communication of the Indiana Allied Theatre Owners it was suggested that the members of that organization ginger-up their exploitations, go further than putting out a set of photos and a one-sheet.

"If you are out of ideas," reads the bulletin, "or you don't know what to do . . . go to some neighboring town that has a successful exhibitor, look over this theatre and see how he exploits his pictures. . . ."

And on the trip to that neighboring town, it might be suggested that the interested exhibitor pass the time in reading the Round Table pages.

A. Mike Vogel

Creates Animation From Pressbook Idea

Hodgdon's display showed opening made to give view of inside tunnel behind which was placed shadow box with glass front (see photo). Animated figures of men working with pick and shovel are seen through the opening.

Animation was supplied with fractional horsepower rotary motor driving an eccentric set which geared down the speed. Long shaft was connected to drive wheel on the eccentric set on a pin off center, as one would picture a steam engine. Shaft at three different points was connected to figures in shadow box, giving each one a different movement.

For outside exploitation Hodgdon used various ideas, most original of which was a bally of man dressed in tunnel worker's suit with oxygen helmet.

Terry Turner Opens Promotion Offices

To devote his entire time to tieups between national advertisers and picture companies and to direct national campaigns and contests, Terry Turner, formerly ad head for the Loew circuit and RKO Theatres, has opened offices at 247 Park Avenue, N. Y.

For the past two years Turner has worked with various agencies, picture companies and theatres and reports that today advertisers are more inclined to participate in theatre stunts that can be adjusted to merchandising angles. Turner is working through agencies and their new business departments.

It's the "Buccaneer"

Suggested by the dress worn by Olivia De Havilland in "Captain Blood," a reproduction called the "buccaneer' was utilized by Rod Collier and George Browning for a prominent window tieup on the date at the Stanley, Baltimore. Display was featured by a giant enlargement of the star wearing the original in the picture.

Stores Give Gifts To New 1936 Babes

Tieing in with his neighborhood newspaper, Monty Salmon, Quaker Theatres district manager, co-operated on a good-will stunt with 14 local merchants, wherein the first three babies born in that section in 1936 were to be given gifts by the participating merchants. Salmon hooked in by arranging to have the presentation of the gifts made to the winning parents from the stage of the Tower Theatre, Philadelphia, on Jan. 22.

Rules were few and simple, as follows: parents of the baby had to live in the area covered by the paper. Baby could be born at home or in hospital. Application had to be substantiated by attending physician or hospital authorities. It was only necessary then to write to the "1936 Baby Awards" at the paper, and from letters received, the three closest to 12:01 A. M. of January first, were selected. Contest closed Jan. 15.

Paper ran page one stories and cuts to build up the contest, the merchants also coming in on a full page co-op liberally illustrated with storks. Salmon, of course, got a break in all the publicity and anticipates more when the gift night is held at the Tower, where a lot of extra business is also anticipated.

Gifts contributed by cooperating merchants covered about everything that a new baby would have occasion to need.

20 Pages of Exploitation In "Strike Me Pink" Pressbook

Twenty pages of exploitation, including numerous commercial tieups, star and theatre stunts, newspaper contests, page feature stories, co-op ads, accessories and novelties are featured in the expansive pressbook on "Strike Me Pink," put out by the publicity department of United Artists under the supervision of Monroe Greenthal, advertising and publicity chief.

Stressed also is a four-page pink tabloid with many scene cuts of the Goldwyn girls and action shots of the stars. There are also special ballyhoo records, "man or mouse" coins, Cantor masks, standees, etc. Though many national tieups have been made, there are sufficient stunts enumerated for use in most any situation.

Science Meet Quotes Build Up "Ray" Date

As it happened that a national convention of scientists took place just before the opening of "Invisible Ray" at the New York Roxy, newspaper headlines concerning their findings were mounted on lobby boards. Interest was tied in due to the statement made at the science meet that invisible rays besides being used in the next war would also serve more peaceful pursuits of mankind.

Lobby stunt that attracted was an "invisible ray table" decorated with set of glassware lighting up without any apparent electrical connection, copy on card informing the curious that this illumination came from "ray." The glass articles became dark when lifted and became lighted again when they were placed on the table.

Newspaper ads stressed the scientific angles by use of small dramatic illustrations each carrying punchy "see" lines. Newsstand signs calling attention to the story of the picture current in a fan magazine were planted throughout the metropolitan area, and other exploitations listed by Joe Weil in the Universal pressbook were employed.

Campaign was put over by Morris Kinzler, Roxy ad chief in cooperation with the Universal publicists.

Ghosts Go West; Also North, East and South

The spirits roamed the streets of New York on a bally engineered by Manager Jack Wright for the date on "Ghost Goes West" at the Rivoli. Jack had five men dressed in long white sheets in various parts of the city and bannered (see photo) with picture copy. "Ghosts" patrolled the entrances to Brooklyn Bridge, Holland Tunnel and at other heavy traffic spots where, as photo shows, they gathered large following.

Similar idea was carried out at the theatre with a cutout ghost placed out front. Copy on the cutout requested passers-by to ask questions into a mike planted in the cutout and through a two-way public address system, man hidden in lobby answered the queries.

Giveaway of Donat photos was arranged on broadcast over one station and guest tickets were awarded on contest with another station. The special eight by ten glossy standees were placed in many prominent locations.

First 1936 Awards Deadline To Be Saturday, February 8

Just a line or two to remind you folks in the field that the first lap in the 1936 Quigley Awards Competition is now being run and that two weeks still remain to "boot" that entry "under the wire" in the January Competition which inaugurates the third Award year.

Deadline for January has been set for midnight of Saturday, Feb. 8, and as usual that means all campaigns to receive consideration must be at Quigley Committee headquarters, 1790 Broadway, New York, by that time. Judges who have consented to serve are as follows: W. Ray Johnston, of Republic Pictures; Mort Blumenstock, Warner Brothers Theatres, and Gordon White, Educational Pictures. Their decision will be made known in issue of Feb. 15.

For the information of 1935 plaque winners and other interested readers, arrangements are now going forward for the Grand Award judging to be held shortly. More on this later. —A-MIKE.

Photographer Aids McManus on "Whipsaw"

Johnny McManus, Loew's Midland, Kansas City, Mo., secured five single-column ads with cut of Loy on "Whipsaw" through cooperation of photo studio of leading department store. Ads were run ahead and during engagement.

Patrons Suggest Stars Receive Academy Awards

Smart job of selling the acting of Edward Arnold and Peter Lorre in "Crime and Punishment" was executed by Washington Warner Theatres zone publicity director Frank La Falce for the date at the Metropolitan. Frank's campaign utilized public interest in the annual Academy Awards, centering it around the suggestion that as the stars gave such fine performances both deserved the awards for acting.

First step was series of teaser cards mailed to drama editors of local papers, with reproduction of the award statuette and copy along these lines: "Dear Andy: It deserves the Academy Award. You'll agree on Dec. 5th"—that date being opening date of picture. Another card read: "There is only one Academy Award. We recommended two. See why on Dec. 5th." Last two cards carried names of the stars and name of picture appeared only on the very last one mailed, which also contained invite to special showing.

Results were immediate and effective for not only did papers take it up but built the idea into the public mind to tie in La Falce's next step. This was put over by placing large book in lobby and patrons who agreed that the performances rated the Awards were requested to sign the volume which was later submitted to the Academy judges.

Other ace slants included invites at opening to nationally known crime experts such as J. Edgar Hoover, No. 1 G-Man, superintendent of police and inspectors.

Top newspaper contest was a "famous pairs" stunt with readers asked to submit lists of things that go together and suggested by the two nouns in the title. Instances given were "hot and cold," "pen and pencil," "love and hate," etc., with cash and tickets for the longest lists. Winners' list comprised 990 pairs.

Further Award Endorsements

FRANK BOUCHER
Dominion Theatres
Lynchburg, Va.

The Quigley Awards have done more toward the proper advertising and exploitation of pictures than any other factor in modern theatre operation. They have brought about distinctive and creative campaigns that have been a credit to the motion picture industry as a whole. Large towns—small towns—large theatres and small theatres have all participated and have won awards through fair and equitable methods.

BILL POWELL
Manager, Paramount
Newport, R. I.

I am delighted to hear that you are continuing the Awards for 1936 for they certainly serve a very definite purpose in the scheme of theatre operation. Aside from the kick I personally get out of trying for the Award, and the results which always accrue at the boxoffice, I now have a file of material gleaned from the pages of the HERALD which are a constant aid in developing campaigns.

EATON M. SIZER
Manager, Jeffris
Janesville, Wis.

The Quigley Competitions are the finest method ever devised for showmen. For the first time it puts them into active competition with other showmen throughout the country, and the world for that matter. It is an incentive to better work, for you now know that your efforts have a chance to come into the open.

W. CLYDE SMITH
Manager, Paramount
Hot Springs, Ark.

Quigley Awards without a doubt have caused a great improvement in motion picture exploitation. As an incentive, they make theatre managers exert greater effort, thereby building greater boxoffice grosses.

RALEIGH W. SHARROCK
Manager, Palace
Morrilton, Ark.

I am convinced that Quigley Competitions have accomplished a great deal toward successful exploitation efforts and better boxoffice grosses due to the fact that it offers recognition to deserving campaigns of men in the field that they would not receive without the medium of Quigley Awards. Although the awards are not in cash, they nevertheless furnish inspiration and desire to "go places' by intelligent showmanship that spells profit at the boxoffice.

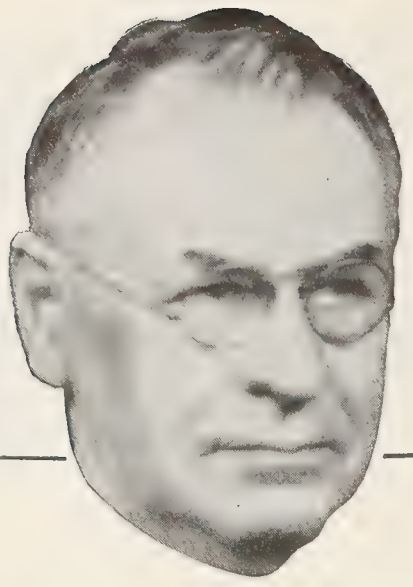
Blue lights were planted behind and under the ship, lights also shining out of portholes. Entire display was spotted with steel blue gelatin and Louie further utilized a six-sheet by cutting out the heads and inserting them in the steering wheels. The lettering made from jagged drift wood completed the atmospheric effect.



Hanging anchor with play-dates and additional copy was also used in this attractive display.

"RIFFRAFF"

"Lovelier than ever" is what the critics are saying about Harlow in her new picture . . . and it's also what your patrons will be saying about your theatre if you install Alexander Smith Carpet. Pleased patrons mean increased profits—which is why you will find Alexander Smith Carpet in so many of the country's most successful theatres.

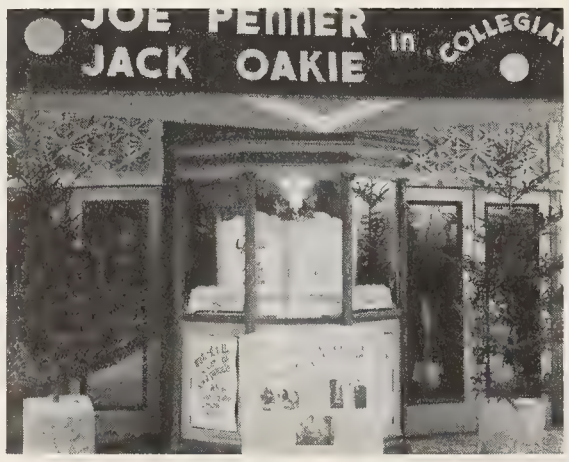
Walter Davis Reports Recent Activities

Up in Regina, Canada, the ice and snow country, Manager Walt Davis thought up a neat Christmas idea as illustrated in accompanying photo. Trees were planted out front in blocks of ice and the block in front of the summer box office, weighing 600 pounds, had theatre copy frozen on and covered with cellophane.

For the kids, the cut in column to right illustrates Davis' Capitol A B C's Contest for children 13 years or younger. With every admission ticket the youngsters were given one of the slips with prizes given to those best filling in the line starting with "X". The boys' prize was a skating outfit and the girls', a $15 Shirley Temple doll. Prizes were displayed in lobby.

Women On Staff Sell "Adams"

On the advance buildup for "Alice Adams," Walt allowed the women on his staff to do the selling, as it was a woman's picture. Gals did a good job by writing all the copy for newspaper ads, original copy for broadcasting and art shop, tied in with furniture section of department store and also landed some good windows.



They also thought up the slant of running an ad in classified column reading: "If your name is Alice Adams and you are interested, phone 6363," the theatre number. A list of all Adams in the city directory was then typed and when inquiries came in, they were checked with addresses on the list. As the genuine Alice Adams were invited to see the show, the precaution was taken so as not to allow the stunt to run loose

Trade Paper Reports Theatre-Bus Tieups

How some bus lines and theatre cooperated to stimulate each other's business was recently recounted in Bus Transportation, trade paper in that field. Among the instances is the tiein made by Dave Sablotsky at the Norris, Norristown, Pa., last year and published in the Round Table.

Bus company sold bus-theatre ticket for use after six o'clock for same price as regular theatre admission except on one suburban route where a transportation charge of 10 cents was made. Company kept 10 cents out of each sale on the shorter hauls and 20 cents on the long haul. Theatre got the remainder. Nearly 30,000 of these tickets were reported sold in one year, the tiein of course being extensively advertised by the bus people.

Out in Wisconsin, bus line tied in with small town theatre on a Thursday matinee co-op during the summer months, paying manager five dollars weekly for 500 matinee seats. Tickets sold by bus operators for 10 cents entitled holder to one round trip downtown and admission to theatre. Going portion of ticket was good between one and two-thirty; return portion up to midnight of same day.

Theatre was reported to have benefited as coming attractions were advertised to 500 people who otherwise might not have attended and plan also encouraged afternoon bus riding during off-peak hours.

Another theatre used two-for-one gag by giving special coupons to be wrapped in each roll of bus tokens sold, roll of 50 tokens costing three dollars. Coupon when presented at theatre entitled holder to two tickets for price of one and this also was extensively advertised by transportation line.

Doormen Turn Out "America" Display

Aside from their regular duties as doorman and relief doorman, Allen Balfour and Floyd Kielhack, respectively, turn out some nice art work for Manager Harold Borresen, at the Strand, Minot, N. D. Illustrated in accompanying photo are the two boys with display they created for "Little America" and Borreston reports himself proud of their work, the result of less than a year's study.

The penguin cutouts were promoted from some obtained from display round town advertising cigarettes and others were planted in downtown spots with two in furrier windows.

Borresen's Doormen-Artists and Set Piece

Front for "Captain Blood" at the New York Strand, shown above, stressed pirate angle of story with entire arch constructed of board paneling stained to match timbers of old sailing ships. Title was cutout in five-foot letters of same paneling stained to match. Behind each letter of title was colored three-foot cutout of a pirate with cutlass or sword. Cutouts operated on rocker arms disappearing behind title. Behind title was transparent gauze in back of which was scene of pirate ships rocking to motion of cutout waves. Ships carried riding and blinker lights in different colors.

At top of arch, colored enlargements of casts were recessed behind ovals of natural colored ship's rope. Bottom of arch, cast and credits were done in chromium leaf faced letters against dark oak background. Covering box office in front of arch was ten-foot colored enlargement of Errol Flynn, sword in hand, with inscription: "Six foot four of fighting Irish manhood and a devil with the ladies." Ship's bell struck time every 15 minutes.

Display was designed and constructed by Manager Zeb Epstin in collaboration with John Hemmer, chief theatre electrician, and the Sid Nagler Studios.

Karl Constructs Special Volcano Front for "Pompeii"

Nick Karl, Hall Industries, Beeville, Texas for "Last Days of Pompeii" constructed an attractive front, (see photo) bottom of which contained miniature volcano, center containing opening with small piece of red neon tubing and crinkled cellophane. Volcano itself was made of screen wire and textone, columns were done in white and heads and figures were made of cutouts from blowups. This display was made so that all pieces were hinged and bolted for quick removal to other theatres.

Cook's "Frisco" Herald In Open Message Form

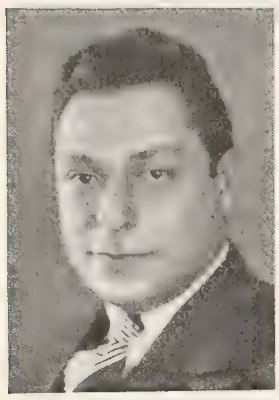
Assuming that the folks in San Pedro, Cal., wanted a lot of action in their screen entertainment, Manager Earl Cool, of the Warner, San Pedro put out a circus-sized herald headed as follows: "An Open Message to the People of San Pedro. You Wanted Action—Here It Is." Then followed a lot of sock copy.

Earl also made a classified tiein which included mention of the date in the streamer across the page in addition to a two-column display ad. Postal Telegraph tieup allowed heralds in all outgoing messages, these illustrated with cut and ad copy. Illustrated inserts were stuffed in bread packages.

Announcements were made over p. a. system at wrestling matches, at business girls' club dance, and on the roof were placed five-foot illuminated letters visible for six blocks in three directions.

Amateur Nights and Kid Fashion Shows Aid DeCosmo

What with amateur nights and kid fashion parades, Eddie De Cosmo at Schine's Strand, Amsterdam, N. Y., has been pretty busy. For four weeks these amateur nights have been put over with cooperation of local furniture store who came through with a radio contract on their daily program, beside paying all advertising costs including daily plug on air.



Tying in with leading department store, Eddie staged a "Shirley Temple-Jane Withers Fashion Parade" to plug these starlets' forthcoming pictures. Talented youngsters modeled worn by the Misses Temple and Withers and store ran five-column ads on the show, using cuts and listing names of contestants.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.
